Comrade Ira Jones of Millfield, O., has been scouting around a bit lately, and as a result, we have a list of 8 new readers in that section. Good work, we admit and if comrade Jones will send us another dollar and a quarter's worth of the same we will send him Lenin, the Man and His Work free.

And that is what a lot of Comrades are doing. Just now we wrapped up ten copies of Lenin and mailed them to comrades who have sent in their five spots for subscription cards and got this splendid work free. You can do the same. Better get one of the next shipment which arrives in a few days.

Field worker Knecht reports subscription sales good and getting better. Leave the subs to Knecht, he gets 'em.

Comrade Kritzell of Local Fremont sends in an order for supplies which includes Platforms and Programs of the C. L. P. These are for distribution. While we are mentioning this, we leaflet just off the press .It's the Platform and Program of the Communist Labor Party. Order some for distriwish to call your attention at the new bution and for your members. They are 50c a hundred postage paid.

Frank Vailant is another booster as his recent list of six subs shows. He takes two papers weekly himself. Apparently he shows them to his fellow workers.

Comrade John Fugitt of Portsmouth rolls in a fine bunch of subs this week. Of course he gets a copy of Lenine. And another Lenine goes to G. J. Green of Barberton, O.

Local Lima orders $10.00 worth of dues stamps. Which all shows that Local Lima is up and doing—and we know will keep it up.

Five dollars worth of subs from comrade W. H. Tilley, of Ransome, Kans. He gets a free copy of Lenine.

Comrade Maddox of Bellaire, O., sends the first order for both volumes of Pelle the Conqueror.

Writes one of our filed worker,—The Toiler is getting into the hands of the sailors, I am told by a member of a submarine crew stationed at a Massachusetts port.

And than it is also at hand in the steel and coal strikers' meetings too. Articles from The Toiler are read from the platforms at the workers' meetings.

A Tenn booster is comrade Jas. W. Booker, of Baileyton. A list of six subs proves it to us.

One book order we filled recently was for 50 copies of Mr. Block and the Profiteers. These went to a Machinists Local down state.

SOCIAL AT [illegible]

Local Guernsey County will hold a "get together" on Jan. [illegible] 1920. There will be speaking, singing, music, refreshments and all that goes with a real socialist social. Guernsey comrades are a sociable lot and we know there will be much enjoyment at hand.

"Your paper was given to me by one of your subscribers and in turn I am subscribing along with others." So writes comrade Harry H. Volkman of Columbus, O. Just think, all it took was just one sample copy handed out. If comrade Volkermann can get results like these, then so can you. Just try it.

R. T. Haworth of Toledo is another comrade who keeps up the boosting spirit. Most every week or so he sends us some subs. Three names are on his latest list.

Local Robins comes in strong for the C. L. P. writes our representative there. Local Robins is a coal miners' local and most of the comrades are of foreign birth.

Two good boosts this week from comrades Geo. L. Slessmen of Toledo and F. E. Blake of Cincinnati. Their lists total 9 subs.

Two bosters, both from Hamilton, O., come to bat this week. They are C. W. King and J. L. Banereiwiss. Eight subs they send us

THE "AGITATOR" AN INSIDE MAN.

Certain employers who are trying very hard to keep their industrial policy back in the middle ages are fond of pointing to the "outside agitator."

The Ooutside Agitator. Great discovery. Caught, at last. Here is the root of the evil.

Have no dealings with labor unions because there is an Outside Agitator in their midst.

Simple. Why didn't somebody think of that before?

But—

Unfortunate that there has to be a "but" to spoil anything so beautiful.

But— it isn't so. That's the only trouble. It's a good idea, but it is a false idea.

Labor unions elect and pay men to represent them. Some of these men are called secretaries, some treasurers, some presidents, some business agents. It is these men to whom some employers refer as outside agitators. [illegible] not Outside. They represent the men who elected them.

The [illegible] of a union is no more an Outside Agitator than is the president of a corporation or the superintendent of a plant.

Can't you see him, Comrades,

When all he did was cry a protest Against sending our boys to war.

Such a love fills the heart of "Our

Of him who loves us?
He fought for us through strife.
Shall we sit by, idle, and let him
Be heartlessly robbed of his life?

sions of the bill provide that all foreigners coming into this country shall come on probation, their remaining here being dependent upon good behavior—that is, judging behavior from the view point of capitalist interests. Representative Johnson believes that the foreign born are responsible for the present unrest prevalent and growing more so in this country. To quell unrest, deport the foreigners, and pass more liberty destroying legislation is Johnson's method.

Hits Agitators.

Explaining the bill Johnson said it enlarges the deportation clauses to include aliens who print, circulate, edit, display or distribute vicious literature who are members of organizations that issue revolutionary publications or those who financially aid such propaganda. He predicted that a bill penalizing American born persons who commit similiar acts soon would be presented to the House by its judiciary committee.

In this connection Johnson displayed to the House revolutionary publications, including some printed so as to appear as having been blood-soaked. He also exhibited letters appealing for release of I. W. W., and anarchists ordered deported during the last two years, but who are still in this country.

Escapes Deportation.

"One Scotch I. W. .W.," he said, "was conveyed from Seattle to New York last spring with the fifty-four radicals ordered deported. The Scotchman was released promptly in New York and was back in Seattle almost as soon as the guards who brought him east. He still is out there inflaming, fanning and organizing the I. W. W. revolution."

Deportations will affect labor market

That the proposed deportaitons will have a visible effect upon the American labor market is widely predicted in some circles. Heretofore, American capitalism has depended upon the hundreds of thousands of foreigners, who yearly came to our shores, to supply and keep up the labor market. For four years this immigration has fallen to practically nothing. It has practically ceased during the war period. Deportations, if carried on upon the scale which is predicted will further deplete the market. Probation schemes, such as proposed by Representative Johnson, will have a further effect by discouraging immigration. Sensing the [illegible] ing conditions, shorter hours and greater economic power for the workers. The power of the workers to dictate to capital will be immensely increased if these various schemes of frightened capitalism are carried thru. So far as the workers are concerned, they have nothing to lose. Deportation will simply afford free passage to many free spirits who will gladly return to their former homes. By depleteing the labor market, conditions will improve for those here. With the weeding out of foreigners, the labor movement here will take on a strictly American psychology. It will then be narrowed down to a battle between American Capital and workers for control. Certainly it will be influenced tremendously by events in Europe, and its development will be in consonance with those events.

Let deportations come. As far as that goes, thousands are only awaiting the opening of transportaiton to Russia to take passage. Thousands of American citizens too, will be found among the emigrants carrying the skill and technique of trained workers to aid the upbuilding of the first Socialist Republic.

In view of the above, can any American believe that the capitalist class regard America as anything but a source of exploitation. Is America for Americans or for American Capitalists?

The Diplomatic Balance Sheet in Russia.

By EVANS CLARK.

[illegible] diplomacy is international business. The war, and even more the peace, has brought diplomacy down to earth in the minds of the common people of all countries. With every fresh glimpse of the inner offices at Versailles, Washington, and London, the talk of the common man about world affairs becomes more a matter of plain economics and less of picturesque personalities. All diplomacy is rapidly coming to be considered as "dollar diplomacy."

All business is essentially a matter of profit and loss. The greater the likelihood of loss the greater must be the prospect of profit. So it is also in modern diplomacy. No venture in the history of diplomatic business has presented more risk than recent Allied policy in Russia. A mere catalogue of the losses and possible losses is quite staggering. In the first place there are human lives. Already some five hundred American youths have been killed or maimed in the Russian venture. British and French losses are considerably greater.

There is no means of estimating the amount of money sunk in this venture. First of all are the military and naval expenditures. Since the United States is at "peace" with Russia, President Wilson has been forced to contribute money from his private fund for emergency uses to support American troops in Siberia and Archangel. There has been no public accounting of this expenditure. In England, however, the items of the Russian expense account up to July 31 last have been published in a recent "White Paper" as follows:

Naval and military operations connected with the occupation of and withdrawal from North Russia (Murmansk and Archangel)	$89,000,000
Maintaining an army in the Caucasus	14,000,000
Naval operations in the Baltic and Black Seas	26,000,000

These are but a part of the original investment. The British have supplied Denikin and Kolchak with great quantities of military equipment. Newspaper dispatches are frank in stating that much of Denikin's recent success is due to large numbers of tanks supplied by the British, as well as quantities of small arms and ammunition, poison gas, and other supplies. It has been stated that all the war material at Salonica was placed at his disposal by the Allied Governments. The amount of equipment supplied to Kolchak is also immense. Even the United States Government, it was recently announced, has dispatched 75,000 rifles and other arms to the so-called Omsk Government. The Northwestern Government of Judenitch is an English creation that must already have involved a considerable financial outlay. A Helsingfors dispatch to the Stockholm Dagblad on August 28 stated that Great Britain had guaranteed a 350,000,000 ruble issue of notes of this Government at a rate of 40 rubles to the pound. These items of expense do not include the cost of setting up and maintaining the Archangel Government, nor the financial aid and comfort rendered to lesser lights than Kolchak, Denikin, and Judenitch. British "assistance" alone has reached the following proportions:

Assistance to the Baltic states, including the Northwestern Russian corps	$14,000,000
Assistance to Admiral Kolchak	72,000,000
Assistance to General Denikin	130,000,000

A less tangible, but none the less real, financial loss is that occasioned to the business of the Allies by the blockade. American exports to European Russia in 1913 were $25.000.000, but in 1917 they had increased to $400,000,000 in value. These were not alone war materials, but also great quantities of agricultural impliments, automobiles, cotton, cordage, locomotives, typwriters, machinery, and leather.

Just as American exporters were beginning to develop the possibilities of this vast market the blockade intervened. In the year ending May 1, 1919, American exports to European Russia had fallen from $400,000,000 to $7,000,000. For a country whose business men are supposed to be extremely eager to open new markets, these figures do not begin to show the loss involved. The loss to British business is greater in proportion to the larger share of exports to Russia that the English had captured before the war. The blockade has reduced an export business of $72,000,000 a year in 1912, to practically nothing.

This represents the loss in exports alone. The loss in imports of raw materials from Russia is even greater. Russia has been one of the world's chief purveyors of flax, hemp, timber, furs, hides, bristles, and other materials used in European and American manufactures. Never in the world's history has there been such a demand for raw materials as there is today. European industry, reviving after the war prostration, and American industry, grown immeasurably and straining at the leash, require unprecedented supplies. The blockade has cut off one of the chief sources of these materials. To take but one illustration: recent reports from Belfast and other producing centres in the United Kingdom state that the shortage of flax has caused a partial shut-down of great numbers of linen mills, with resulting hardships to manufacturers and working people alike. The annual flax requirements of the United Kingdom before the war were 100.000 tons. Of this amount 10.000 tons came from Ireland, and 10.000 more from Belgium, France and Holland, No less than 80.000 tons came from Russia. Gr. Britain has cut off 80 per cent. of its flax by the Russian blockade. Nor is England the only loser. American manufacturers use British linen in making piece goods. The first half year of 1918 the export of piece goods were 17,431,500 yards. This year the figure is 5,528,00 yards.

Nor does this loss in raw materials of all sorts complete the total expenditure involved in the Allied Russian policy. National prosperity rests on national unity. Business flourishes on domestic confidence and tranquillity. The amount of unrest, suspicion, and antagonism aroused by Allied Russian diplomacy among the working people and the liberal intelectual classes in the Allied countries is a matter of common knowledge. Its effect on Allied prosperity cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. When the great Triple Alliance of British workers, controlling the nation's transportation system, seriously considers a strike against the Russian policy of the British Government; when workers in Milan, Seattle, San Francisco, and other ports refuse to load vessels with arms and ammunition consigned by Allied Governments to Kolchak; when the Italian workers call upon the workers of the world to refuse to produce ammunition for use against the Soviet Government, it is safe to say that the Governments of the Allies face a risk of no mean proportions. And to this must be added the moral effect on the Allied nations of pursuing a policy that violates human decency and finds no sanction in international law.

Such are some of the risks of the Russian venture. That the Allied statesmen realize their significance we are bound to assume. Whatever else these men may be they are not stupid. Especially are they not stupid in the matters of Real-politik. We may assume that they weigh with some care the profit and loss of undertakings of such magnitude.

What, then, are the profits that weigh against these extraordinary risks to tip the balance in favor of this Russian policy? Current explanations and apologies fail to reach the heart of the matter. Fear of Bolshevism, horror at Communist "atrocities," and love of anti-Bolshevist Russians are doubtless elements in the determination of Allied diplomacy; but however great may be their importance as justifications, they are of minor significance as motives. Czarism was fully as repugnant to Anglo-American and French democratic ideals as the communism of Russia today, and not a whit less aggressive and internationally ambitious. And yet there was not even the suggestion in Allied diplomatic circles of a cordon sanitaire against the monarchistic and Even granting the validity of the most extreme re- bureaucratic "infection" of Russia under the Czars, ports of the "Red Terror," the amount of violence and bloodshed under the Soviets could not begin to compare with the atrocities committed under the Czars. Beside the hideous barbarities of the Black Hundred, the wholesale exiles and executions the "punitive expeditions," and other cruelties of militant autocratic bureaucracy, even the wildest tales of Bolshevist excesses seem mild. And yet the Allied Governments did not seek to overthrow Carism by violence and in trigue. Americans, British, and French have time out of mind lauded and feted the democratic forces of old Russia. Kropotkin and Breshkovskaya were prophets honored beyond measure in countries not their own. But the Allied Governments never proposed to invade Siberia to effect their release from Czarist tyranny and oppression, nor to lend troops to aid the forces of the Revolution.

The expected profits of the Russian venture were not so intangible as these profits of fear appeared or of friendship championed. Russia is the world's unopened treasure box. Who shall open it? That is the heart of the matter. Russian leads the world in the magnitude and immensity of its natural resources. Russia lags behind in their exploitation. Vast wealth, backward development—it is this magic combination that draws out, like fillings to a magnet, the designs and ambitions of modern diplomacy. When domestic conditions in such countries have been unfavorable to the development of these designs and ambitions—in a word to the profitable investment of foreign capital—foreign intervention has invariably resulted. When peaceful penetration fails, penetraition by the sword must follow. Such are the ways of diplomacy in the days of economic imperialism. We have witnessed them in Africa, Persia, and China. We see them now at work in Mexico. Were it not for the barrier thrown up by the Monroe Doctrine we should have seen them also in South America.

In Russia the situation is simply this: The Soviet Government is dedicated to the public ownership and public enjoyment of the wealth and resources of Russia. The people themselves, through their Government, propose to exploit their own riches and reap their own profit therefrom. It is true that Lein has offered wide concessions to outside capital; that the Soviet Government is willing to let the foreign investor make a profit in return for the technical skill which he can hire and furnish for the rehabilitation of Russian economic life. Ultimate control, ultimate ownership, however, in all of these offers have been reserved to the people of Russia. No perpetual franchises are to be handed out to private interests in the exploitation of Russian wealth. Nor can the workers of Russia be made the helpless victims of such exploitation. Their status as citizens in a democracy of industry is protected by the fundamental laws of the Soviet Government. The firm of Kolchak and Denikin, however, does business another way. Products of the old regime, versed in business imperialism, they are dedicated to the unlimited private exploitation of public wealth. From them the foreign investor will get the whole loaf, not half. Kolchak and Denikin offer inducements to Allied diplomacy that Allied diplomacy can understand. Their key to the treasure box of Russia is one that Allied interests can use with complete freedom and great profit.

An what other basis is it possible to explain the vast economic and political aid which the Allied diplomats have furnished to the counter-revolutionary forces of Russia? Do statesmen and their backers throw away others' lives and fortunes, sacrifice great immediate gains, and risk even their political future to aid such as Kolchak and Denikin without having received definite commitments and agreements as to the return for value received? The recent note issue of the Northwestern Government, it is reported, will be redeemed "three months after the occupation of Petrograd," and is guaranteed not only by the British Government, but "by the entire wealth of the Russian Empire." The entire wealth of the Russian empire—that is what Kolchak, Denikin, and Judenitch are playing for, and it is that with which they hope to repay later those who help them now.

A glance at what this wealth means will be a sufficient explanation of many things. Russia is four times the size of the European continent and contains one-sixth of the land surface of the entire world. Every sort of climate and soil is contained in that vast area. In population Russia is surpassed only by India and China. Russia holds 37 per cent. of the timber resources of the entire world. Some of the forests of the northern provinces of Siberia have yet to be thoroughly explored. Russia holds 50 per cent. of the world's resources of iron ore. It produces 97 per cent. of the world's platinum. No other country in the world has such a wealth of manganese. Russian oil wells in 1900 produced 48 per cent. of the world's output of petroleum. It is conservatively estimated that Russia contains 35 per cent. of the world's resources of fur. The agricultural resources of Russia are unsurpassed. In 1910-1913 Russia produced 79 per cent. of the world's yield of flax, 56 per cent. of its supply of rye, 54 per cent. of hemp, 27 per cent. of oats, 25 per cent. of wheat, and 14 per cent. of sugar. Russia also produces large quantities of buckwheat, millet, corn, and potatoes. Russian bristless supply the markets of the world, and Russia is second only to Australia and Argentina in the number of sheep that graze on its land.

This vast production has been achieved in Russia by the most antiquated of methods. Russia is still a backward country from the point of view of modern industrial, agricultural, and commercial methods. Its vast resources are practically untoched; its immense possibilities are as yet latent. The industrial revolution which transformed the economic life of England and Germany in the middle of the last century did not affect Russia, to any great extent, until the beginning of the present century. The steel production—an index to the development of the industrial system—was only 157,00 tons in Russia as late as 1887. In 1897 it had increased to 920,000 tons, and in one year more it had shot up to 1,145,-000 tons. In 1887 the total production of Russian industry and mining was 1,300,000,000 rubles. In 1897 it was 2,800,000,000 rubles. The average yearly increase between 1887 and 1890 was 56,000,000 rubles, while between 1893 and 1897 it had reached 276,000,000 rubles.

The years from 1890 on mark the real invasion of Russia by modern capitalism. Mr. Olgin speaks of these years as "revolutionary times in Russian economic life. A wave of energy, a spirit of bold adventure, was abroad. Capital hurried from Germany, Belgium, and other countries to share in high profits. In the metallurgic profits of 100 per cent. were not unusual. Stock companies often paid as much as 20 per cent. in dividends. Promoters [illegible] active everywhere from the sombre northern Petersburg to the hot sun-kissed Odessa." The regime offered a paradise for investors of foreign capital. It was the development of this paradise was so rudely interrupted by the war and the revolution, and its renewed and unrestricted exploitation so seriously menaced by the policies of the Communist regime. In the few years of feverish capitalist invasion of Russia, however, only the fringe of the economic life of Russia was touched.

Russia's immaturity of commercial development is shown by the fact that the number of joint stock companies before the war was but 2,000, while in England there were 56,000 such concerns. The total capital represented in the Russian firms was about two billion dollars, one-ninth the amount of United States railway securities alone. The outstanding securities of all the industrial and commercial corporations in Russia, exclusive of railways and banks, barely exceeded those of the United States Steel Corporation.

The same backwardness reflected in agriculture. The soil of Russia is in many parts richer than that of most of the agricultural countries of the world. In spite of this, the average wheat yield in Russia before the war was one-half that of Austria and France, one-third of that of England and Germany, and only one-fourth that of Denmark. The per capita value of the production of the most important grains and potatoes was thirty dollars in Russia against $200 in the United States. Russia had 23 per cent. more land under cultivation than had the United States, and yet the average yield of grain was ten per cent. less in Russia than was the yield in United States.

This backwardness of Russia is due in the main to the very limited use of modern agricultural machinery, to inferior methods of cultivation, and to unscientific choice of seeds. In spite of enormous imports of agricultural machinery from the United States and Germany, a vast proportion of the peasants still use the agricultural implements of their ancestors. Not only is intensive cultivation practically unknown, but not less than 95 per cent. of Russia's land area is not cultivated at all. Professor Goldstein, of the University of Moscow, states in a cerent book on Russia that "this points unmistakably to the immense possibilities latent.... for cattle raising and farming as well. If only-one-fifth of Russia's land were made adaptable for cultivation through reclamation, irrigation, well-directed colonization, the construction of railways.... Russian production would increase at least four-fold."

In this summary of economic conditions lies the heart of the Russian situation. Here is the secret of Allied diplomacy. The ways of economic imperialism are the same in Russia as they are in the Saar Valley, Egypt, Mesopotamia, Persia, Mexico, Alsace-Lorraine, and China. That they have been less clearly recognized by the public in the case of Russia has been due, mainly, to the bogy of Bolshevism. But there is always a bogy. Probably no more sucessful bit of imperialist publicity was ever perpetrated than the popularization of misinformation about Soviet Russia; but underneath the smoke-screen the real game goes on. The Allied diplomats, responsive to the dominant interests in the Allied nations, have undertaken the biggest venture in history. Whether their estimate of the balance sheet is correct, whether the wealth of all the Russias will in fact be the profits of Allied diplomacy, time alone will tell. The present situation on the battle-fronts of Russia makes such an outcome appear at least improbable.

THE BULLITT MISSION TO RUSSIA.

By WILLIAM C. BULLITT.

Two things make this a notable book: the critical but partial picture it presents of the Soviet Government in eration, and the fact that it affords the first intimate impse the public has had behind the scenes at the Peace onference.

William C. Bullitt, late of the Department of State and ached to the Peace Conference, was sent to Russia to ain an exact statement of the terms on which the Soviet overnment was willing to make peace. is report, together with those of Lincoln Steffens and Capt. W. W. Pet- Military Intelligence Division U. S. A., who accompad him, Lenine's peace proposals, and Mr. Bullitt's test- before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee are included in this book.

If you would know how near the world was to peace Russia, how Lloyd George, Col House and others all red it, how Lenine met all the Paris proposals, and how ole affair was then abandoned, read Mr. Bullitt's ng testimony that has set two continents talking.

assemblage and brazenly knocking out the very foundations of Government.

The role of defending the Institution, the government, at Centralia belongs to the members of the I. W. W. who are now charged with murder. That five men lost their lives is lamentable. Nothing would have been more desirable to the program of the I. W. W. than that such as did happen at Centralia had never occured. But this was not the desire of those who directed the attack on the Hall. To them the death of one or a hundred men meant nothing. They meant to destroy the I. W. W. at any cost.

The men charged with murder at Centralia must be defended. To deny them a chance to put up a defense is subversive of Government itself. Yet that is what they are attempting to do by denying the use of the mail in Seattle for defense purposes .

A defense committee has been organized to defend these men. Funds are needed and needed badly. Will you help in the defense? You can do so by sending your donation to Geo. Williams, 318 No. Wyoming Street, Butte, Montana.

POST BELLUM

By Helen P. Groth

He had tasted the bitterness of war,
and had come back with death-wearied heart;
He had seen man kill man, and had watched, while destruction-filled bombs tore the night.
His eyes had looked often on woe—deep woe that would make the tears start;
But it all seemed a part of the work for Justice —Humanity—Right.
For Democracy—world-wide, secure
—he had left home and all he held dear;
Young Galahad—many like him—with a white shield and sword clean as flame.
And down in the trenches of France
he had fought and had bled without fear;
For the Cause was a great, sacred one—a World-hope—a high, noble aim
How startled he looked—how amazed
—at a speech that the President made:
St. Louis, Missouri, the place, and
September the fifth was the day.
And Wilson said, surely we know that all modern wars are for trade,
That commercial, industrial rivalry was the seed of the recent fray!
He remembered the boys who had died, like Crusaders of old, for "the Right,"
And he visioned the row upon row—
white crosses on Flanders' red field;
And his death-calloused, horror-torn soul grew sick as there rose to his sight
A memory of some maimed and blind —for the cause that had just been revealed!

Which Way, Oh Citizens?

action on a resolution to deny Berger a seat without the "formality" of referring the matter to an elections committee.

If the House carries out this apparent design there will be no representative of this district in Congress until the regular elections in 1920, Gov. E. L. Phillips has announced. "I do not believe in spending any more of the peoples' money in that way", he is credited with saying. What will happen then should the electors choose Berger again, is a subject upon which the voters there can cogitate in the intervening period.

But here is the point that's in our mind. Milwaukee has long had the reputation of being the heart and soul of political socialism in the United States. Milwaukee socialists are political socialists—not revolutionary socialists. They promulgate the idea that action of the workers at the ballot box is the simon-pure method of attaining what they call socialism and the gradual usurpation of power by the workers thru legislative reforms their avowed method. They shy at class action on any other field than the political one. New they will have a test case of the efficacy of their teachings. Votes have won the election, wi votes win the power? The representatives of the capitalist class say, NO.

What efect will this have upon these political socialists Are they open to the logic of events? Will this denial of pow by the capitalist class thru its representatives in Congress tea them the needed lesson that the ballot, unless backed up by t power of the workers on the industrial field is unseless? Will trun them from the "right" to the "left", toward industrial cl action? Or, on the other hand, will it seem to prove to them only way to win is to elect more Congressmen? And by elec more and ever more political representatives at last sweep workers into political power nationally—and in a million also establish a Socialist Democracy?

Well, whatever these things prove to the politicals o waukee, we see nothing in it at all surprising to any one sc in the class-struggle. We know that the laws (election other), of the capitalist class will be shattered into sni by the capitalist class the moment the workers attemp them for themselves—if they have the power to do so. however fundamental will not stand for a moment in th when by so doing the capitalist class can retrench itself Without a moment's scruple they will be, are being The sign points to the "left". Can Milwaukee the sign?

CLEVELAND, O., WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 31st,

HE RETURN OF THE RAILROADS.

Within two months the railroads of the United States will revert to control by their owners, the capitalists of the country. This act will be in accordance with authority invested in the President. The control of the railways and express companies by the government under war time legislation has been in effect two years, they will now pass back to their owners March 1st.

The return of the arteries of commerce of the nation upon which all must depend for the needs of their daily lives, to their capitalist owners bring to the fore a question that must be uppermost in all thinking minds. Without doubt millions of the American people believe a step backward is being taken by the administration in releasing control to the owners. Even before the war came upon us, there was a strong "government ownership" sentiment in the country. When the control of the railway systems passed into government control many no doubt believed they would remain there and that furthr legislation after the war would place them permanently under the jurisdiction of the government. It must now be a hard blow to these believers in a paternalistic government to see it turn its back upon "government ownership" of one of the basic industries.

In this connection it is well to take into consideration the railway workers, they who make possible the operation of the roads. When the war was on these workers gave their best services toward the winning of the war thru the continuous and thruough operation of the roads. They expressed themselves as favoring government control — in fact, the Plum Plan of co-[illegible]ve control grew out of this strong sentiment among the railway [illegible]. Now that the government declines further control, the workers [illegible]ed in the position of being compelled to render unto Ceaser those [illegible]hich they believe are not due him. They are copelled to give service [illegible]ined by their intelligence and conscience. They feel a certain stigma [illegible] to their employment, as tho they were rendering what is in [illegible]al service, but is perverted into a rendition of profit to individuals [illegible]o right to it.

[illegible] railway shopmen went on strike in August and the famous 4 [illegible]as made to their demands by President Wilson, the railway [illegible]he nation at large were apprised of a great and tremenduous [illegible]ared against the High Cost of Living. In this war, the President [illegible]ay a vailiant heroic part and the H. C. L. was to be brought [illegible] surrender. The President asked two or three months to per[illegible]t. Four months have elapsed. There is no appreciable victory over the H. C. L. It continues nonchalantly on its way, heedless of the edicts of Presidents and Palmers. So much so that the railway shopmen are seriously considering a real strike soon to get what is coming to them for useful service. But forth steps Attorney General Mitchell Palmer with a new program for the defeat of the H. C. L. He quotes long rows of figures purporting to prove that the period from August to November shows a stationary condition of retail prices as compared to former years when prices tended to raise. This is counted a great victory. Another victory is heralded too — Mr. Palmer and the President are not lacking in invention and imagination — a further gain is likely, states Attorney Palmer between the dates of Jan. 1st and March 1st. And it is "hoped", he states, that the decline in prices will be accelerated by the campaign initiated by the government which is "just now getting under way" —after four months!

Looking at these matters by and large, we would say that the government of the U. S. seems incapable of doing any thing other than ministering to the needs of capitalism. The only time it succeeds in its endeavors is when those endeavors are a means of profit to the predatory class, which Mr. Wilson before his presidency, characterised as the invisible government of the United States. His assertion seems well borne out during his administration. In the meantime workers grow more restless, the foundation of things as they are takes on a shifting and revolutionary aspect. The workers continue to lose faith in the integrity of the government, discontent with the apparent insoluable riddle of making both ends meet drives them to desperation. There is a growing feeling among them that whatever comes, they the workers, have nothing to lose, so let it come.

The return of the railroads to the control of their capitalist and profit taking owners bill but further alieniate the workers from a feeling of responsibility in the industrial mechanism of the country. Ownership for the few—slavery for the many is going out of date. This is the thot that is agitating the minds of the world's workers. The return of the railways to their capitalist owners will hasten the coming climax.

WHAT HAVE WE TO FEAR?

Last week we editorialized in this column upon our American Espionage System. Now let us go a little further along the same line and develop another wiew of this new manifestation of the clashing interests in present day society.

First, let us get the fact firmly fixed in our minds that that which IS has the RIGHT TO BE until it is overthrown by a stronger power. Any government, just or unjust, has the right to exist until displaced by another. The fact that it has the POWER to be gives it this right. Let there be no delusion about this. Might makes right. Always did, always will. All government is based in the last analysis upon force, physical force, the police club, the machine gun, the army and navy. When these physical forces desert it, cease to lend their power to it, or are overcome by a stronger physical power, the government falls, yields to another government which has the RIGHT to exist because it has the power to enforce its rule.

Very well, all present governments have the RIGHT to exist and rule—until displaced by another. They have the right to rule and to rule as they see fit whether a minority or a majority of th ruled agree with them or not. They have the right to exercise any and every method of keeping themselves intact from assault either by moral or physical forces opposed to them. They have the right to erect great national systems of espionage to learn of the acts and purposes of opponents of the government, whether these opponents are individuals, groups, mere political actionists, industrial actionists or anarchist terrorists.

All modern governments provide in their fundamental laws certain methods by which the form of government may be altered to suit the changing times and the needs of the people who make up the nation. It is well that this is so, for orderly and peaceful change is to be preferred to riot and bloodshed.

The Communist Labor Party has nothing to fear from spy systems. Its propaganda is above ground. Its meeting are open. Its organization work is carried on where all may see. It has nothing to conceal. Its methods are the methods of peace. It seeks changes in the government, changes in the form and character of the industrial system, but it seeks to bring them about by legitimate and lawful means. Very true, that the changes it seeks to being about are revolutionary in character. We insist that they are so. But revolution in itself is not unlawful. It is often necessary. It was necessary to bring into being the present government of the United States. A change in government may be revolutionary however, without being violent or accompanied by bloodshed.

We are for a revolution, yes, but a peaceful one. We desire to replace the present government and its capitalistic character, with a government of proletarian character. We are for a government that does not recognize the validity of private ownership of the resources of the nation and the industries. We desire that these esentials of humanity's life be placed in the hands of their users—the workers, and that use be made of the only title to all industrial machinery including the land.

These are our projects. They are lawful ones. The government may spy upon our organization to its heart's content, but we have nothing to fear. Our purpose is the good of mankind, our methods are lawful, We are unafraid.

WHAT YOU ARE WORTH, OLD MAN.

A Massachusetts' court decree places the life of a man of 60 at the value of $1.00 a day. This does not mean that every man of 60 is thus valued. Not by any means. Before he is so valued he must be crippled for life. This is the court's decree. Considring that the value of the dollar is now about one half what it was recently, this is not a flattering decision, old man. Not a very high rating of a human life is it? Especially after one has spent it in useful service? No, a pretty low estimate.

But it isn't your life even, that is thus valued. It is your ability to work, to perform labor profitable to an employer. Your life is worth nothing. No value is set upon it in dollars or otherwise. To have any value whatever, you must get crippled in industry, and you must get crippled so badly that you can no longer render profit to your employer. Then and only than, are you worth a dollar a day.

No, we don't blame you for feeling pretty cheap. We will in all probability feel the same in a few years if we and the present capitalist system endure that long. Most workers realize the cheapness in which they are held by those who set the standards of value—the upper class, the class that is up on the backs of the producers of wealth.

Statistics show that 85 per cent of men 65 years of age who have spent their lives working for wages are dependent on their families or charity for their livehood. That but 15 per cent of the nation's workers are able to lay up sufficiency during a 50 year period of earning is a scathing indictment of the present industrial system. A childhood of want and poverty, fifty years of toil—and then dependence, insecurity, want, despair. That is the sum total of millions of lives under the robber system we perpetuate by our votes, our reactionanty labor union activities, our refusal to demand and to take that which is ours by right of creation—the full social value of our labor.

Let's end the hideous farce. Use your declining years old man, in helping to make this world a better and juster one to those who come after you.

SPARKS.

A comrade down at Bellaire, liked The Toiler of the issue of Dec 17th, so well that he ordered 500 for distribution among the miners. Any body else wide awake?

To collect donations of $4.00 among striking miners for the liberation of political prisoners shows conscientious work and a desire to do one's best for our comrades behind the bars. This is what comrade Stephen Ark of Mulberry, Kans. sends us. Keeping up the agitation for our comrades' release should be a motive of every comrade's daily life.

Five dollar bills continue to arrive daily for Toiler sub cards. Of course the free book, Lenine, the Man and His Work, is always demanded as a premium, and always gladly complied with.

Comrade Roy Douglas of Dunkirk, N. Y., sends an order for literature and a subscription. These are reading months now, and the question is: are you taking advantage of the opportunity to read the best literature of the revolution? Look over our list of books and pamphlets. Among them you will find the ones just suited to your taste and pocket book. Look them over.

The Northwest District Defense Committee has opened offices at Butte, Montana, for the purpose of collecting money to defend the ten members of the I. W. W. who are charged with murder at Centralia. All funds shoul dbe sent to Geo Williams, Secretary-Treasurer, 318 No. Wyoming St., Butte, Montana.

NEW DAY PHILOSOPHY.

We may hope that the coming revolution will reverse the order of revolutions of the past, and be a bloodless one.

"Who does not follow Truth wher'er
Her footsteps lead,
But says, 'Oh, guide not there, not there,
I have not strength to follow where
My feet would bleed;
But show me worn ways, trodden fair
By feet more brave'—
Who fears stand in Truth's broad glare,
What others dared not, will not dare,
Is but a slave."

Success! How potent is the word in conjuring up the hopes and ambitions of the human race. It adds luster t othe eye of the schoolboy, and gives a spring to the step of the middle-aged. All the generations, from barbarism up, have contended and struggled and fought for success and held nothing else so dear. And who have won? How few, indeed, have won out of the millions who struggled; and their names are, for the most part, sunk in black oblivion. For they only are truly successful who learn kindness, unselfishness and leniency toward their fellowmen. Not they who climb to the ladder's top by the ruthless pushing of others back, but they who by their stand for truth, equity and justice help all the race to rise, are the really successful Not they who win the applause of an ignorant multitude, but they who win the gratitude of the lowly, the trust of a wife, the love of little children. They in whose calloused hands is the power to produce the necessities of life, in whose home is peace, in whose soul is honor. The world's applause counts for nothing. It has ever been given to the selfish, the gaudy, the cruel, and is ill balm to heal a guilty conscience. But real worth and real success must be recognized at last, and all mankind will be the better, the happier, the nobler.

Man cannot get a new heart, a new life, and a new character. He can reform and try to do better. Nothing less, nothing more.

Ignorance has more orators employed in her defense than intelligence needs in her proclamation of good sense.

Man has a moral right to deride that which he believes to be false, the same as he has the privilege to praise that which he believes to be true.

SEDITION LAWS

In the sudden desire for war with France (in 1798) the Federalist party believed itself to be so strong that it proceeded at once to make one of the greatest blunders ever made by a political party, in passing the alien and sedition acts. These alien and sedition laws were certainly the most atrocious in all our history except the Fugitive Slave Law. Some believed that a confederacy in which such laws might be nullified was preferable to a Union in which men might be sent to jail, as under the Stuart kings, for expressing their honest opinions. Such a Union would not have been worth the efforts that it cost to frame it.

John Fiske. Essay on Madison.

JIM HIGGINS PHILOSOPHIZES.

Jim Higgins is our namb.
We aint known to Fame, tho
We're the guyes that does the Work.
We're like any good Fellow,
We never ket turned Yellow
And never do we shirk.

We build Organisators,
In all of the Nations,
And do our Work cheerfull and well,
And we hope while we labor,
For us and our neighbor,
That this System will shrivel in—well.

When we start in this Nation
An Organization,
And think we have got a good start,
A bunch of so called leaders,
That have been Blind! guiders,
Break all our labors apart.

But I thing we'el get wise,
And we'el open our Eyes,
And while we are building anew,
We will do all the labor,
For ourselves and our neighbor,
And manage our Party too.

MOSES OUTDONE BY MINER

In these days of class-conflicts which surge backforward over the nation constantly gathering strength of numbers on the worker's side, it is good to know that the workers are interpreting the actions of the capitalist class in their own words.

Down at Bellaire a miner has been doing some interpreting in the right of recent occurences in the coal war. Here are the results of his interpretations as displayed upon cards scattered about Bellaire and vicinity.

6 Commandments of United Kingdom, by Dr. Garfield, A. B. Anderson and Company.

To Miners of Free America:

1 Thou shalt be governed by us regarding your working conditions.
2 Thou shalt not strike.
3 Thou shalt rather starve at your work than disobey King Garfield and Co.
4 Thou shalt be placed in jail if you insist on asking your rightful share of sunshine.
5 Thou shalt be thankful for being allowed to walk on the land of this Kingdom.
6 Thou shalt take what your employer offers you, and thou will be regarded as a good law abiding citizen, otherwise the jail for you.

THE BULLITT MISSION TO RUSSIA

By WILLIAM C. BULLITT.

Two things make this a notable book: the critical but impartial picture it presents of the Soviet Government in operation, and the fact that it affords the first intimate glimpse the public has had behind the scenes at the Peace Conference.

William C. Bullitt, late of the Department of State and attached to the Peace Conference, was sent to Russia to obtain an exact statement of the terms on which the Soviet Government was willing to make peace. is report, together with those of Lincoln Steffens and Capt. W. W. Pettit, Military Intelligence Division U. S. A., who accompanied him, Lenine's peace proposals, and Mr. Bullitt's testmony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee are all included in this book.

If you would know how near the world was to peace with Russia, how Lloyd George, Col House and others all favored it, how Lenine met all the Paris proposals, and how the whole affair was then abandoned, read Mr. Bullitt's startling testimony that has set two continents talking.

BLIND.

Editor's note: Here is a story of the class-struggle expressing the viewpoint of the bourgeois. We believe it will interest our readers and give them an insight into the psychology of the petit trading class even tho they are unable to agree with the philosophy of the story.

He was in a manner of peaking, useless. He could tend the furnace and help around the house—scour the bath-tub and clean windows—but for a powerful man these were trivial chores. The trouble with him, as I soon discovered, was complete and simple. He was blind.

I was sorry for him. It was bad enough to be blind, but it was terrible to be blind and at the mercy of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Angier. Mrs. Angier ran the rooming-house. She was a grenadier of a woman, very tall and very bony, with a virile voice and no touch of femininity except false curls. She wore rusty black, with long skirts, and a tasselled shawl. Her smile was as forced as her curls. She hated her rooming-house and everyone in it. Her one desire, insane but relentless, was to save enough money out of her establishment to escape from it. To that end she plugged the gas in the bathroom, doled out the towels, scrimped on the furnace, scrooged on the attendance. And her chief sacrifice on the altar of her economy was Samuel Earp, her brother-in-law. Since he was blind and useless, he was dependent on her. When she called, he literally ran to her, crying, "Coming, coming!" He might be out on the window-sill, risking his poor neck to polish the windows that he would never see but, "Do I hear my sister calling me? Might I—would you be so good—ah, you are very kind. Coming, Adelaide, just one moment. . . . . ." and he would paddle down stairs. She treated him like dirt. Sometimes one would arrive during an interview between them. The spare gimlet-eyed Mrs. Angier would somehow manage to compel Samuel to cringe in every limb. He was a burly [illegible], a thick head, irongray, and his sightless eyes were hidden behind solemn and imposing steel-rimmed spectacles. Usually, with head lifted and with his voice booming heartily, he was a cheerful honest figure. I liked Samuel Earp, though he was a most platitudinous Englishman. But when Mrs. Angier tongue-lashed him, for some stupidity like spilling a water-bucket or leaving a duster on the stairs or forgetting to empty a waste-basket, he became infantile, tearful and limp. Her lecturing always changed to a sugared greeting as one was recognized. "Good e-e-evening, isn't it a pleasant e-e-evening?" But the only value in speaking to Mrs. Angier was that it permitted Samuel somehow to shamble away to the limbo of the basement.

Of course I wanted to know how he became blind. Luckily, as Mrs. Angier had prosperous relatives in another part of Chicago, she sometimes could be counted on to be absent, and on those occassions or when she went to church, Samuel haunted my room. He was unhappy unless he was at work, and he managed to keep tinkering at something, but I really believe he liked to chatter to me: and he was more than anxious to tell me how his tragedy had befallen him.

"Oh, dear, yes," he said to me, "it happened during the strike. They hit me on the head and left me unconscious. And I have never seen since, not one thing."

"Who hit you, Samuel?"

"Who hit me? The blackguards who were out on strike, sir. They nearly killed me with a piece of lead-pipe. Oh, dear, yes."

It seemed an unspeakable outrage to me, but in Samuel there was nothing but a kind of healthy indignation. He was not bitter. He never raised his voice above its easy reminiscent pitch.

"But what did you do to them? Why did the strikers attack you? What strike was it?"

"I did nothing at all to them. But, you see, my horse slipped and when I was helpless on the ground with my hip smashed, one of those corner-boys knocked me out. It was right up on the sidewalk. I had gone after them up on the sidewalk, and I suppose the flags were so slippery that the horse came down."

"But what were you doing on a horse?" I asked in despair.

"I was a volunteer policeman, mounted. These scoundrels were led by Debs, and we were out to see that thre was law and order in Chicago."

"Oh, the Pullman strike. Were you railroading then?"

"Railroading? No, sir, I was in the wholesale dry-goods business, just started in. I was married only two years, to Adelaide's younger sister. Ah, my accident brought on more trouble than she could stand. She was very different from Adelaide, quite dainty and lively, if you follow me. We were living at that time on Cottage Grove avenue, on the south side. I was building up my importing business, and then this thing came and everything went to pot. They gave me no compensation whatsoever, to make the thing worse."

"But, Samuel, how did you come to be out against the strikers?"

"And why shouldn't I be out, I'd like to know!" Samuel straightened up from rubbing a chair, and pointed his rag at my voice. "These scoundrels had nothing against Mr. Pullman. He treated them like a prince. But they took the bit in their teeth, and once they break loose where are we? The president didn't get shut of them till he sent in the troops. But I've always contended that if we business men had taken the matter in hand ourselves and nipped the trouble in the bud, we'd have had no such lawlessness to deal with in the end. It is always the same. The business men are the backbone of the community, but they don't recognize their responsibility! Take the sword to those bullies and blackguards, that's what I say!"

The old man lifted both fists, like a dauntless Samson, and fixed me with his sightless eyes. He was all wrong, I thought, but he had paid hellishly for living up to his convictions, and here they seemed absolutely unshaken.

"That's all right, too, Samuel," I said, feebly enough, "but how do you feel now? Nobody compensated you for being laid out in that big strike, and your business was ruined, and here you are emptying the waste-basket. How about that? I think it's fierce that you got injured, but those men in the Pullman strike weren't out to break up society. They were fighting for their rights, that's all. Don't you think so now?"

"No, sir. The solid class of the community must be depended upon to preserve law and order. I think that it was the duty of the business men of Chicago to put down ruffianism in that strike and to smite it whenever it raised its head. Smite it hip and thigh, as the saying is. Oh, no. Young men have fine notions about these things, ha, ha. You'll excuse me, won't you, but you can't allow violence and disorder to run riot and then talk of men's 'rights' as an excuse. Ah, but it was a great misfortune for me, I confess. It was the end of all my hopes. The doctors thought at first that the sight might be restored, but I have never seen a glimmer of light since. But we must not ripine, must we? That'd never do."

"Samuel!" Mrs. Angier's sharp voice pierced the room.

"Good gracious, back so soon. You'll excuse me, I'm sure. . . . Coming, Adelaide, coming!"

He groped for his bucket, with its seedy sponge all but submerged in the dirty water. The water splashed a little as he hurried made for the door.

"Oh, dear," he muttered, "Adelaide won't like that!" F. H.

Tolstoi's Daughter

[illegible] developed technical industry to maintain the efficiency of transport.

"Much machinery, and new machinery required to take the place of the old, came from abroad. The blockade of Russia prevents their import.

"The blockade has deprived Russia of naphta and of all her own coal.

"Only wood remains, and the transport of enormous quantities of wood over great distances is impossible, in view of the general transport dislocation of the country. The absence of fuel stops industrial machinery, and with the stoppage of industry, all the economic and intellectual life of the country dries up.

Famine and Cold Continues.

"Such industrial machinery as does exist lacks fats. The blockade has deprived Russia of this precious material, famine and cold increases. Not only bread famine, but clothing famine, house famine, intellectual famine. Next winter threatens to create innumerable victims from cold alone. The blockade continues, directed by obscure forces. Why?

"Russia has had a revolution. As the outcome of it the Soviet government was born and has lasted two years. The Western powers look upon it as an execrable government. 'Let us,' they say, 'exterminate the whole Russian people which tolerates such a governmet.' By what process of justice, reasoning, or logic?

"I shall be told that the propaganda of this government threaten to poison European and American thought; that the poison must be stayed. But has the blockade stayed it? No, the ideas which form the basis of the social organization of the existing Russia have long since o'erleapt the blockade, and disseminate themselves freely throughout the world.

"But you, Allied governments, are committing a crime even more terrible than this. You hound on other peoples against the Russian people. You furnish them with munitions. You excite Russians to fratricidal strife. Some Russians you furnish with weapons for this purpose; other Russians you deprive of everything.

"You ingeminate implacable hatreds. Why? Can you picture to yourselves the abysses of suffering of unfortunates compelled by your will and against their own to fight one another, when all they ask is to be left in peace?

"Why Are You Killing Innocents?"

"If Russia is not yet wholly bathed in blood, it is because of the attitude of the Russian people on either side, who frequently surrender without fighting and open fraternal arms to their brothers. Why do you seek the extermination of the Russian people? You detest the Russian government—well and good. But why are you massacring the innocent?

"Are the men who govern Russia such monsters, then, that you must exterminate millions of innocents, to strike them down? They have their faults. But what is there about them which can provoke such hatreds? If they have been cruel, are you not more cruel?

"There is famine and chaos in Russia, you say. But it is you who are producing these very things; not the Soviet government. There are terrible things in the life of Russia today. But there is light, too.

"Last winter I was there. I saw and felt beating the pulse of a new and strong spirit of regenerated life. I saw many men, and especially young men, breathing with full lungs a new order, the springtime of humanity. I saw new and fertile enterprises of public instruction.

Men Defend Sacred Rights.

"I saw men in power heroically defending before the world the new, and to them sacred rights of the workers, of the common people. I saw germs of a new spiritual condition stirring in the heart of the people of Russia. I saw pulsating through every stratum of Russian life an intimate resistance to war itself—against whomsoever waged.

"Why do you seek to exterminate the Russian people? I fear it is not because they are cruel, as you say, but for some other reason.

"Crime" Was Heroic Act.

"There is still another important 'crime' which, according to you, the present rulers of Russia have committed. This crime is the crime of Brest-Litovsk. This crime has offended you, and you wash the offence in the blood of the innocent. In your eyes it was a crime affecting your dignity. For them it was an heroic act, which has not been equaled in the course of history.

"Attacked by a powerful enemy, the people and their government, disarmed, ceased the struggle, and, having deposited their arms opened peace [illegible] inviting you to do the same. But you only replied to them by a contemptuous silence.

[illegible] Reply To Goodwill.

"Since then, upon every occasion that they have deemed it opportune, up to the last resolution passed by the new Petrograd Soviet, the Russian government has never ceased to suggest conciliation, and you have replied to them by tanks and other engines of destruction. Why?

"Let us suppose that Russia is governed by wicked men, and it is necessary to preserve the world from their influence; let us admit that for the sake of argument. But you, in your blindness, are doing the contrary thing.

"You construct a breakwater. The water rises and overflows the country, passes beneath, above, through your artificial obstacle, and continues its course, spreading the infection, to prevent which you are sacrificing innocent lives.

"It is only through an open door and in the full light of truth that you can struggle against what you conceive to be an evil.

"I no longer address myself to you, rulers demoralized by power. For you the hour of repentance has not yet struck. You, too, are to be pitied. I turn from you.

Has Faith In Workers.

"I address myself to you workers of all countries and of all nations, of all crifts and of all ages. I address myself to you especially, men of Great Britain, so strong in your independence and in your culture. I have faith that among you, workingmen, moral sentiments still live; that you still believe that the human conscience is capable of calling a halt to the conduct of man, in order that man may urn from his evil ways.

"It is to you, working brothers, creators of life, that I confide the fate of my unhappy country. You hold its salvation in your hands. Realize, I implore you, all the terror of the crime which is being perpetrated and stop it.

"But even as I thus appeal to you my soul is afflicted by a doubt. What right have I to speak to you? No right save that which is conveyed by human laws. But I have an obligation to perform.

Cannot Keep Silent About Sorrow.

"In the course of a fairly long life I have been favored by a great and underserved happiness. I was the intimate friend of the great master, Leo Tolstoy, whom the world long recognized as the embodiment of the conscience of humanity.

"I know that were he alive today his powerful voice would thunder through the world and bring the powerful to their knees. Mine is weak. But I should be criminal did I not raise it. In the name of my great dead master, I appeal to you, brothers, workers, save Russia!"

Radio disproves reports of violence of Russian Reds when leaving New York.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—A wireless message from the army transport Buford, on which 249 radicals were deported from the United States, was received at the war department today.

The radiogram, dated "At sea, Dec. 24," follows:

"Gen. Hines, Washington:

"The Reds are contented, and everything is O. K. Even on leaving the island (Ellis Island) there was no disturbance and no cursing as stated in the newspapers.

"They are allowed on deck for exercise in the morning and again in the afternoon. They are obedient and respectful. The weather is moderate with rain; the ship steady, averaging eight knots. Her course is southward for the Azores that rough seas may be avoided.

"Dealings with the reds are through Berkman, the leader. There are no sings of sea sickness aboard. Mess for all classes is excellent, the chief steward and steward's screw being exeptional.

"Special attention is being paid to ventilation and the berth compartments are strictly clean and orderly.

The report declares ve[illegible] being done for the childre[illegible] island possessions of the United States and that little is known of the needs of these children, particularly those of Porto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

In Porto Rico, it is learned, there are about 10,000 homeless children. In 1917, the report declares, 173 babies out of every 1,000 born died before reaching the age of one year.

Illiteracy runs high in the island possessions, declares the report.

red chairs, a large dry goods box turned upside down, served as a desk for the judge and the clerk. Add to this a cuspidor that served as a target for 'hizzoner's' salivary marksmanship which be managed to hit with about as much accuray as he hit the requirements of justice; a dirty stove and a few advertisements plastered upon the wall and the picture is complete.

The personnel of the court blended well with its environment. Behind the dry goods box sat the judge, a portly livery-barn proprietor, roughly dressed and redolent with the scent of the stable. He had a flat, florid face, was slightly bald and had a drooping yellow mustache. He had rather merry blue eyes eyes and a thunderous voice; one of those voices that have tremendous volume and yet no power. He looked like an over fed Sweedish lumberjack; but as his name was Duffy the Scandinavian race was exonerated.

The jailer led this prisoners into the room. The judge wheeled around in his old swivel chair and looked at the men over his steel-rimmed spectacles. Jack looked at him and smiled broadly but the judge remained stern as befits the majesty of the law. Beside 'hizzoner' stood the city attorney, a callow youth upon whose face was written all the viciousness of weakness. He was lean almost to gauntness, like a half stewed lizzard. In fact he was best described by the remark Jack made to his compaions after the trial in which he likened the lawyer to a hybrid, between a coyote and a shoitpoke.

The clerk sat at the same desk (box) with the judge. These with a few armed men who evidently were officers constituted the machinery of justice.

"What is the charge agin these men?" asked the judge.

The lawyer answered, "Disorderly conduct and assault," your honor.

"Had we better try 'em one at a time or in a bunch?" asked the judge.

"I, for one, demand a seperate trial," said Jack.

"Wait till you're spoken to, or you'll regret it," roared the judge.

A MESSAGE FROM SMILLIE

(By Cable to The Liberator.)

Greetings to you, my American comrades of all ranks of labor. In view of the close of the greatest of all wars, in which so much blood and wealth have been so recklessly wasted, it behooves the democracies of all the countries of the world to draw themselves into closer communion; first, to ensure the prevention of international war in the future; second, to advance the industrial freedom of the producing classes in all nations. In the past the workers of one nation have been set off against the workers of another nation to prevent this communion, but in the future it will be necessary to link up the workers of the various nations so that we may advance side by side.

We may talk about a League of Nations for a generation, yet if it is only a league of capitalistic Governments it will mean nothing to the commonm people of the nations of the earth. What is really required is a League of the Democracies, strongly organized in each country, to rid the workers of the curse of capitalism as we know it today, and make the whole world a fit place for free men and women to live in.

In Great Britain I believe that the present agitation for the nationalization of mines and minerals will be continued until we realize our ambition. I do not think its fulfilment will be long postponed. The possessing class realize that national ownership cannot stop and will not stop with the nationalization of the mines and the mines alone. They realize that the land, railways, transport and other industries essential to the social well-being of the people will follow. The fight will be a stiff one, as capital is now fully arroused and will spare no pains to thwart the aspirations of the common people. It ought to be admitted that many thousands of wealthy, educated people are on our side, though the vast bulk of the possessing class have no vision of the soul of the nation or its people and cannot see beyond the continuation of the present cursed system which keeps the vast majority of the people of every nation of the earth continually on the verge of poverty in order that a few may live in luxury.

I understand that the mine workers of America are moving forward on similar lines and I wish them God speed. I would appeal to the workers of America to realize that until the whole wealth produced by labor—taking the word "labour" in its broadst and truest sense to mean all those who labor by hand or brain in the production of anything that is essential or beautiful—is secured for the common enjoyment of those who produce it, there cannot be and there ought not to be any rest from agitation towards this end.

Ope[illegible] to Russia will so[illegible]rtation pro[illegible]

— By W. E. Williams. —

NEW YORK.—"Let us go back to Soviet Russia and you will have no Russian deportation problem on your hands" is the word which Russian workmen detained as "anarchists" at Ellis Island and elsewhere have sent the following letter to Secretary of State Lansing:

"As attorney for eighty Russians, now being held at Ellis Island pending investigation of their right to remain in the United States, and as attorney for other Russians held in jails and immigration stations elsewhere in the United States, I am authorized to make the following proposal to the Department of State:

"My clients, one of whom is under conviction of crime and one of whom is charged with crime, are willing to leave the United States at their own expense, taking their families with them, providing that your department will give its assurance, (first) that they will receive safe conduct to some point in Russia under the control of the Soviets. If, however, they must be deported, I am instructed by my clients to refrain from taking any legal action for delaying or preventing deportation, providing the assurances above referred to are given.

"As the Department of State must know, to land these men, charged with advocating anarchy and deported, upon territory held by any Russian faction other than the Soviets will mean their imprisonment or execution.

"If your department sees fit to give these assurances, it will at once dispose of a matter which is now costing the government large sums of money in investigations, maintenance of detained persons, hearings, and the like. Furthermore, it will eliminate the cost to the government of opposing us when we have recourse to our legal remedies, as we must, if the government does not see fit to give assurance that the men deported will be landed upon, or conducted to, soil held by the Soviets."

COSSAK RULE IN STEEL CENTERS

— By SARAH LIMBACH. —

PITTSBURG, PA.—Despite the fact that Congress does not consider it necessary to investigate the denial of Constitutional liberties to the thousands of steel strikers in Western Pennsylvania, on the assumption that these liberties have been "restored," the past week brings fresh evidence of further flagrant injustices on the part of the Penn. State Cossacks. Backed by the local authorities and the courts a final attempt is being made to batter down the resistance of the hundred thousand men still out in the Pittsburg district.

Twenty-seven strikers were recently sentenced in Buttler, Pa., to varying terms on a technical charge of riot. The Butler men have been out on strike since August 3rd when a walkout occured at the plant of the Standard Steel Car Co. On the night of August 20 the men were aroused from their homes and informed that a carlaod of strike-breakers was to arrive. They were requested to meet them at Odell station. Instead, the men were greeted by a special car containing state police and a score were arrested. That the men were victims of a frame-up is beyond doubt.

In Donora ,where the plant of the American Steel and Wire Co. is located, the strike headquarters were raided on December 5th by state police. Walter Hodge, organizer in charge and one hundred men were arrested on a charge of conspiracy. The conspiracy being that the men had instigated dynamite explosions in the residential section of Donora several nights previous. A thorough search on the part of the strikers has failed to reveal anyone who heard the explosions. They were taken to the local jail and later they were discharged on bail, Hodge bail baing placed at $500. After a hearing in the county court, those who were citizens were discharged and 94 aliens were held. Walter Hodge was also held, tho a citizen. At the hearing the most damaging bit of evidence was produced by Michael Tuth, a state wit-

"THE SOVIET ARK."

We are raided, yes-no.

Yes, the nation wide raid on radicals hit the state office of the Communist Labor Party, but not as hard as the raiders contemplated. The C. L. P. membership was demanded but didn't come forth. When the gents in charge of operations had gathered up some papers of uncertain value to them or us, they offered to trade them for the membership list. However, we were not in a swapping mood so the deal did not go thru. As a consequence, seven well paid officers of the U. S. government went away emptier and wiser then when they came—wise to the fact that some things are unobtainable in this world. We should worry.

A Cheerfull Letter From Leavenworth Prison.

Elmer T. Allison,

Cleveland, O.

Dear Comrade and Fellow-worker:

You will probably be surprised to hear from me, but then a wobly is always doing something unexpected so you see I am only upholding the traditions of the organization of which I am proud to be a member.

I receive a copy of "The Toiler" every week, and it is a fine paper To my mind it is the best paper that comes in here and we get almost all of them. It (the Toiler) seems to have discovered the proper method of disseminating news of interest to the radicals and of educational value to that biological specimen, found in large numbers on the North American continent, known to biologists as Seissorbilicus Americus (the English translation is Mr. Block I believe.)

The trial in Kasas City, Kansas is over and the boys were found guilty of encroaching on "oily John's" preserves. They arrived here this afternoon and I will renew accquaitances with numerous friends here. Their sentences range from three to nine years, but you will know all about the trial by the time this letter reaches you, so I will not enlarge on it.

I hear from Walter and Laura Reynolds every once in a while and their letters are always full of that spirit that has done so much to keep alive the desire for freedom in the hearts of the American workers.

If you can find time to drop me a line I will always be glad to hear from you but I realize how busy you are and if I don't hear from you I will know the reason.

Hoping that fellow worker Santa Claus will visit you and with best wishes I remain

Yours for Industrial Freedoms
Archie Sinclair.

LONGUET ON THE RECENT ELECTION

PARIS.—Jean Longuet, Socialist leader, has given an interview to the Paris correspondent of the "London Daily Herald", in which he ventures the following interpretation of the recent French parliamentary elections:

"The results of the elections, which in a large measure recall the British khaki elections in 1918, surprise only those who did not calculate on the inevitable consequences of the monstrous electoral system created solely to overwhelm socialism. .... Thus, in the great working class suburbs of Paris, with 114,000 votes against 145,000 for the Coalition (all the bourgeois parties, including the renegades from socialism),it comes about that fourteen seats are allotted to the Coalition and none to the Socialist party. The Alsace-Lorraine Socialists obtained [illegible] votes and have not a single seat.... In all, our party, which had [illegible] in 1914, will [illegible] in the new chamber. Yet the number of votes received by our party is [illegible] against 1,100,000 in 1914."

SOVIETS SWEEP ON TO VICTORY.

Kolchak, Denikin gone. Soviets make truce with Esthonia. Self determination offered by Lenine as part of peace pact. Russia seeks trade with Italy. Red Victories coming strong.

Editor's note: The week's news from Russia containing account of the onward sweep of the soviet forces to victory on all fronts and the collapse of the Kolchak and Denikin "governments" invites us to publish some recent dispatches from Moscow. While these have appeared in the daily press many hundreds of our readers will appreciate their publication here. The promising outlook in Russia for peace with the Allies and the opening of trade relations with the world are some of the most promissing developments of today.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—Gen. Denikine's government in southern Russia has been overthrown and Gen. Romanovsky has been chosen to replace Gen. Denikine as anti-Bolshevik chief, according to a wireless dispatch received here from Moscow quoting advices from Taganrog.

The report indicates that owing to defeats along the front, a coup d'etat occured at Gen. Denikine's headquarters and that his government has been replaced by a group known as the "Vozsozhdenye Rossie," meaning the "regeneration of Russia."

Gen. Semenoff has been named to head the Siberian army, succeeding Admiral Kolchak, who, after a series of disastrous reverses at the hands of the Bolsheviki at Irkutsk and Omsk, Siberia, is still retreating. Kolchak's health has suffered as a consequence of his labors in fighting the Reds.

Gen. Semenoff was recently commander of the Cossacks operating in the Siberian region, and he is known to be strongly anti-American, having had several misunderstandings with the American forces stationed in Siberia.

DORPAT, Esthonia, Jan. 1.—The first step toward peace between Esthonia and soviet Russia was taken tonight by the signing of a preliminary armistice, which is to exist for one week, stipulating an immediate cessation of hostilities and covering questions concerning Esthonian independence and military guarantees with regard to the frontiers.

The agreement, which may be terminated on twenty-four hours' notice by either side, is to become effective Saturday. Unless action is taken to end it the agreement automatically renews itself after seven days.

The agreement consists of five documents, and includes a map defining the frontiers. An interesting clause absolves Esthonia from all obligations to Russia resulting from former connections with that country.

The signing of the agreement had been set for 1 yesterday afternoon but it was not until nearly 8 that the conferees succeeded in adjusting all details.

Esthonia is Recognized.

The next of the clause recognizing Esthonia says:

"In accordance with the principle oft proclaimed by the soviet Russian government of the right of all peoples to a free determination of their nationality, even to the complete secession from the state to which they belong, Russia recognizes without reservation the independence of the Esthonian state and freely abdicates for

Let 'Organization' Be Your Answer.

The greatest attack of the government upon the political rights of the working-class occurred last Friday night when a nation-wide blow was struck at the workers in the round up numbering into the thousands. In this latest and most idiotic attempt of the capitalist interests of the United States to throttle the aspirations of the workers, methods were used, that would put to shame those of the former autocrat of Russia. Men, women and children were routed out of their homes and beds, carted off to bull pens and herded like cattle without even the semblance of ordinary comforts being provided. Hundreds and hundreds were compelled to stand thru the whole night and even the following day while an army of "investigators" decided their fate. Mothers were taken from their children, fathers from their familis and communication denied them. Jails were filled to overflow, thousands slept upon the filthy floors of the capitalist jails without even a lousy mattress or a coverlet for protection.

These are the methods of tyrany. It is by these insane methods that the government of the United States proposess to weed out radicalism in this country. The lessons of history remain unlearned by the present autocrats who hold official power in the government. "Tyranny breeds radiialism, persecution aids the cause it seeks to demolish. Revolution thrives thru such unjust and cruel misuse of power. Is the government of the United States erected upon such flimsy foundations that it can be menaced by an idea? Does the government believe for a moment that the deportation of a few foreigners and the jailing of a few native born will have the slightest deterrent effect upon the proletarian revolution that is sweeping over the whole world? If it does, then the history of the progress of the human race from savagery thru barbarism to what is mis-called civilization ha staught nothing to the ruling class of this country.

Instead of quelling radicalism, these roundups, deportations, persecutions and jail sentences but add to the numbers of the discontented. If the government and the ruling class of America have no answer to the workers when they demand justice in the industrial and political life of the nation except jails, deportations, arrests, persecutions, hounding, spying and the blacklist—then the sooner the government extends its persecutions and adds to their severity, the better it will be for the working-class of America. The sooner then will the workers learn the lesson of organization.

The workers' answere to these outrages must be ORGANIZATION. The capitalist class fears the workers only when organized. Unorganized, it knows the workers are helpless to resist the exploitation which it seeks to fasten upon them. Unorganized we are completely at the mercy of brutal capitalism. Only by perfecting our organizations can we hope to successfully oppose the organized power of capital and capitalistic governments which are its tools. Then organize! Organize in the shops, form a group of workers for carrying on propaganda, for support of the workers' press and the work of education. Distribute propaganda, sell books, get subscriptions for the revolutionary papers. Take your rightful place as a leader in the craft unions if you belong to one. Join the Communist Labor Party and the I. W. W. Take your place in the organized ranks of the Proletarian Revolution against capitalist oppression, tyranny and exploitation. Join the world's Red Legions that are making this world a fit place for the workers. Join the International Proletarian Revolution against capitalist exploitation.

Organize and put a stop forever to the dictatorship of the capitalist class.

THE "TRIAL" OF THE 'WICHITA BUNCH'.

Extracted from two personal letters to the editor.

"The so-called "trial" started on Monday Dec. 1st, more than two years after the arrests. 4 and a half days were used in examining and selecting a jury of twelve men. The Piute press had done its work so well and the public mind was so poisoned that more than 100 men stated openly 'they could not give a fair and impartial verdict". Others, equally prejudiced, tried to hide it in order to get on the jury with the intent of conviction regardless of the evidence.

Kansas City is an industrial center, with an overwhelming preponderance of wage earners, yet it is significant that not a single working man was called from which a jury might be chosen. The farce had no sooner started than it developed into the most disgusting sight ever witnessed by liberty-lowing men. Every constitutional "right" the defendants were supposed to have, was ruthlessly trampled under foot by the "public servants" who are supposed to deal out 'exact and impartial justice'.

Everything the Standard Oil Comany chose to introduce was allowed to go into the records. The indictment specially charged the men with "conspiracy to overthrow the U. S. Government, violation of the Espionage Act, causing men to desert from, and become insubordinate to the army, navy and marine corps, and to prevent production and distribution of fuel oil, natural gas, food and farm products during the period from Apr. 6th to Nov. 24, 1917. The prosecution dug up everything possible from the inception of the I. W. W. in 1905, and the court allowed it to be introduced as evidence!

UNDATED and UNSIGNED letters, and what was purported to be minutes of meetings went in regardless of the objections of the attorneys for the defense. One of the defendants writes:

"The usual stool pigeons are hare and one of them has testified to criminal acts committed by himself, but could not implicate any one of us. Our attorney gave him an awful showing up, and now the prosecution is trying to make a hero of him. The U. S. Government has three of these miserable creatures on a regular circuit going from place to place, betraying innocent members of the working-class (members of their own class) into the hands of the avenging master—class. We all stood up before this cringing cur, while our attorney asked him to point out one of our number he ever knew to do a criminal act, and of course he was forced to admit he knew nothing about us.

The fact of the matter is that this stool—pigeon was kicked out of the I. W. W. in 1917. At that time he was arrested in Minot N. Dak., charged with highway robbery. One of our boys took his credetials and supplies and told him there was no room in the I. W. W. for the likes of him. The government has something on this bird and is forcing him to testify against all I. W. W. to save his own hide."

Continuing further he writes: "the government placed a county attorney upon the stand who admitted throwing I. W. W's in jail without any charge against them and holding them for days without trial and then letting them go. A sheriff and his deputy from Oklahoma also testified to the same kind of treatment.

The press tables are crowded with reporters who draw pictures and kid one another all day long. They do not have to take notes as they write nothing only that furnished them each night by the prosecuting attorneys.

Practically everything appearing in the capitalist press regarding this trial has been a mass of lies. They publish long articles on letters and evidence supposed to have been submitted that has never appeared. As a matter of fact the "reports" of the trial published here is news to us and furnishes comedy for each day. We look those reporters over each day and wonder how they can so prostitute brains that might really be made to serve a useful purpose in society.

From now on, I am for silent defense. There is no such thing as justice in the master's courts."

That letter was written before the jury had brought in its report. A later letter informs us that the jury was out twenty hours and brought in a verdict of guilty of four separate conspiracies, to wit 1st To overthrow the U. S. government. 2nd To resist the Draft Act. 3rd For violation of the infamous espionage act. 4th for violation of the Food and Fuel Act, better known as the Lever act. Sentences ranging from 9 years-downward and totaling 123 and ½ years were imposed upon 26 of them.

Writing of the scene our correspondent says: "As each man's name was called, he advanced before the bar of Justice??? and took the master's token of revenge with a smile. Tonight all are in the finest spirits, the day we have waited 25 months for has at last arrived. Twenty five months, the major portion of which was spent undergoing persecution the like of which would bring a blush of shame to even the Czar of all the Russias in his palmiest days.

During that time we have been forced to witness once powerful men become physical wrecks. We have watched our fellow worker's minds break under the lash of DELIBERATE PERSECUTION. One of our number sought freedom in death, cutting his throat from ear to ear.

Prompt action saved his life, but his mind broke under the strain, and for months we watched him grow steadily worse, suffering great anguish ourselves because we were unable to do anything to save this lad's reason. For months we took turns guarding him night and day to save save him from his own hand. After 9 months the authorities finally transfered him to a hospital for the insane. We recently heard from him and he is on the road to recovery.

Another of our boys went insane. We asked the U. S. district Atty in Sept. 1918 to have this boy examined and he refused. We had an authority on mental diseases look this boy over and of course he was pronounced insane. After we came here (to Kansas City) Judge John C. Pollock selected an expert to examine our fellow worker and this expert reported to the judge that our boy is a hopeless maniac who can not live another year. And still another one was ordered to the hospital today by the judge. This boy is a physical and mental wreck, and the irony of it all is that this happened in a country which boasts of its freedom and justice.

Still another fellow worker a mere boy, died in the miserable surrondings of a jail only the loving care of his fellow workers to make his last moments as pleasant as possible.

This boy died on the same day that his brother returned home from France minus an arm and a leg. His mother was heartbroken. I could thus write on and on for hours telling you of persecution almost unbelieveable, but what's the use? It is the terrible system we are living under *.

The sentiment of the business element here was intensely bitter against us. Open threats of violence were made in the court room and corridors, and of course the capitalist press also tried to stir up mob violence. The Kansas City Star in particular has taken to quoting General Leonard Wood. Tonight the Star quotes Wood as saying, "Ship or shoot all radicals". Another issue says, "crush radicals like insects". And this is the man being touted as presidential timber! He certainly has a distorted idea of law and order, to say nothing of constitutional provisions!"

In closing, our correspondent says: "Every one of those boys were splendid today, amidst smiles of sympathy, sneers and glances of hatred, each man looked his persecutors in the eye and took what they gave him with an amused smile. I wonder if the master-class in attendance today realize that such a spirit as that can never be crushed?"

These boys are today in Leavenworth penetentiary, serving time for being loyal to their class. Their case is worth remembering. When the constitution plainly and specifically calls for a speedy and an impartial trial and men are held for OVER TWO years without trial there is a vast difference between what the loud-mouthed spouters of Americanism SAY and DO. And the rank and file of workers are noticing the difference, which means that the rule of bloody ruthless capital is doomed and will soon have to make way for a mere orderly and just order of society.

THE ARSENAL AT SPRINGFIELD.

(By Henry W. Longfellow)

This is the Arsenal. From floor to ceiling
Like a huge organ, rise the burnished arms;
But from their silent pipes no anthem pealing
Startles the villages with strange alarms.

Ah! What a sound will rise, how wild and dreary,
When the death-angel touches those swift keys!
What loud lament and dismal Miserere
Will mingle with their awful symphonies!

I hear even now the infinite fierce chorus,
The cries of agony, the endless groans,
Which, through the ages that have gone before us,
In long reverberations reach our own.

On helm and harness rings the Saxon hammer,
Trough Cimbric forest roars the Norseman's song,
And loud, amid the universal clamor,
O'er distant deserts sounds the Tartar gong.

I hear the Florentine, who from his palace
Wheels out his battle-bell with dreadful din,
And Aztec priests upon their teocallis
Beat the wild war-drum made of serpent's skin;

The tumult of each sacked and burning village;
The shout that every prayer for mercy drowns;
The soldiers' revels in the mids of pillage;
The wail of famine in beleaguered towns;

The bursting shell, the gateway wrenched asunder,
The rattling musketry, the clashing blade;
And ever and anon, in tones of thunder,
The diaposon of the cannonade.

It is, O man, with such discordant noises,
With such accursed instruments as these,
Thou drownest Nature's sweet and kindly voices,
And jarrest the celestial harmonies?

Were half the power, that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth, bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals or forts;

The warrior's name would be a name abhorred!
And every nation that should lift again
Its hands against a brother, on its forehead
Would wear forever the curse of Cain!

Down the dark future, through long generations,
The echoing sounds grow fainter and then cease;
And like a bell, with solemn, sweet vibrations,
I hear once more the voice of Christ say, "Peace!"

Peace! and no longer from its brazen portals
The blast of War's great organ shakes the skies!
But beautiful as songs of the immortals,
The holy melodies of love arise.

Mouthings of Two Anarchists

PERSHING URGES VIOLENCE

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.—"The American Legion, I am sure, will stand against revolutionary doctrine to the last breath," Gen. Pershing told 2,000 cheering legionnaires here today.

The unrest in this country and throughout the world is the natural aftermath of the war. The magnitude of the war measures the magniude of the unrest.

"It is up to you to realize that you are guardians of our future. It is up to you to oppose radical doctrine—not passively, but if necessary not to hesitate to employ physical force."

"KILL THE REDS," SAYS WOOD.

DENVER, COLO.—Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood, in an address before the Legislature on December 19, advocated that the only way to "handle the Reds" was:

"S. O. S."—ship or shoot."

In detail, the Major General advocated the most drastic measures to curb the "agitators" and halt the spread of "anarchistic propaganda." In enlarging upon his "S. O. S." method of dealing with "agitators," he said:

They should be put on a ship of stone with sails of lead and their first stopping place should be hall."

The Black Sheep

CHAPT. XII.

Jack's keen eye noticed how his fellow victims were awed by 'hissoner's' thunder; how they looked at him with bitter disapproval in their eyes. They hated him because he prejudiced their cause before the court. These men still had the idealogic condeption that justice is an ephmeral something that may be administered wrong or right, according to the wisdom or folly of the judge upon the bench. George and Herman had taught the boy a different conception. He had learned to take the materialistic view that justice is determined by the class interest involved.

Of course it is conceded that this was not a representative court; that in it, law was not taken into consideration. True the forms of law were observed; that had to be done. If you want to steal, first make a law legalizing the act or get a court that will do your stealing for you under the pretext of enforcing the law. The court at Anamoose was simply a camouflage for brigandage.

It must be remembered that when we say that this was not a representative court we do not mean to infer that the others and more regular courts do not work upon the same principle. It is a notorious fact that ustice like everything else is a commodity for sale to the highest bidder. The man with a slim purse has no chance in the market.

The lawyer prosecuting the city's cases was known as Smallhead, a name that might have been descriptive of the man. He informed the judge that the men were not equally guilty, meaning of course that they were possessed of different amounts of money, which might be extracted from them, by convicting them for slightly different offences. So he reccomended that they be tried separately, to which the judge agreed.

"We'll take him first", said he indicating Jack. Then to the boy: "Are you guilty as charged?"

"No; not as charged."

"You are guilty then."

"O yes, I suppose so."

"If you are not guilty as charged, how then do you consider yourself to be guilty?"

"Of having been at work. Of being away from home, gathering the world's supply of bread for which the farmers paid me wages. These wages consist of money, which is legal tender or perhaps it were better to say an exchangable commodity which looks good to 'Hizzoner' and the taxpayers of the town. My guilt consists in having the where with all to pay a fine. That's enough isn't it?"

"That will do" roared the judge. "Smallhead produce your witness."

The lawyer called a man whom we shall call "Lowbrow" (because that title best describes him,) to the stand. Jak recognized him as the man who had thrown the coal, and had subsequently struck him in the face.

The clerk mockingly administered the oath, after which the lawyer asked the witness: "Do you know this defendent Mr. Lowbrow?"

"No, I can't say that I know him".

"Have you ever seen him before?"

"Yes."

"When".

"Yesterday".

"What was he doing?"

"He was piloting the rest of the bunch around town."

Jack laughed aloud—the judge rapped on the desk with his fist. When quiet was restored the lawyer proceeded. "Did you speak with him?" he asked the witness.

"Yes: he asked me when the next train left for the west, also if I could direct him to a good restaurant and a place where he could get something to drink. I pointed out the restaurant to him and then took him and his bunch to the depot where they assaulted me."

"Why did they attack you?"

"I don't no. I suppose they were drunk."

Jack interrupted, "in a small prohibition town, with a judge and a city attorney and everything, we would get drunk on what?"

"Will you hold your bazzoo!" yelled the judge, "I'll have order in this court do you understand."

"If this were a court I'd be satisfied, but I consider it a disgrace."

"Silence!"

"Who lead the assault?"

"I think it was this fellow. When I first noticed him he was fightin' and cussin' like a demon. He was beatin' up the little fellow in the other bunch and when I yelled at him to stop it, he threw a bottle of whisky at me."

"Did the bottle hit you?"

"No I dodged."

"If you were telling the truth and I had thrown the whisky I'll bet a dollar it would have been the first booze you ever dodged." At which all the officers smiled.

Lowbrow continued, "I nearly lost, my balance, regaining it only in time to avoid his rush. I believe he would have killed me if I hand't been ready for him."

"The whole truth s'help me God," Jack piped up.

"That will be all Mr. Lowbrow, said the lawyer.

"Your honor, shall I call officer Larson to the stand?"

The judge sat for a few moments bitting his finger nails, that said: 'No that'll not be necessary. Swear the defendat."

This formality past, the lawyer asked several preliminary question, to which Jack answerend promptly, if not always truthfully. But when the lawyer asked him why he had thrown the bottle of whisky, he answered: "If I had so little brains as to carry whisky, I wouldn't have sense enough to throw it away."

"You say you did not throw a bottle?"

"No, nor anything else."

"Why did you lead the fight?"

"I did not lead it."

"I suppose you will tell us you wasn't even in it?" sneered the lawyer.

"That would be the truth and there fore out of place here." Jack shot back."

"How did you get that cut on your head?"

"That was the work of your friend. I was in the platform when the fight started, having just taken leave of my friends, with whom I had worked on the Bell outfit. I had left my suitcase on a seat in the waiting room and as I did not care to have it smashed I went in to take it out. In civilized communities a man is supposed to have a right to protect his proporety.

"Your friend Lowbrow was fanning the figth and when he saw me coming into the room he hit me with a piece of coal. Of course I resented it and thereby fell into your official net." Then looking both judge and lawyer square in the face, he said: "Gentlemen as far as I am concerned you may as well discontinue this farce; I know your game, and the reason you have for playing it."

The lawyer interrupted by asking the judge if the witness was going to make a speech or answer his question.

"O, let him talk" said the judge. "I like to hear him." Then to Jack "Go on."

"Well as post says' there is a reason' and the reason is not found in yourself, but rather in the influences in which you are surrounded. You are a product of your environment just as much as a maggot is of rotten meat. You are elected by the tax payers of this town, many of whom are retired farmers. In order to be elected you have to make certain promises, chief among which is the promise to reduce taxes; you know that you cannot do this while the prices of necessities constantly raise, due the declining value of gold which is your standard money commodity. The improved methods of mining continually lessen the labor necessary in its production, with the result that greater amounts of it must be exchanged for other products. As the cost of gold production goes down the price of all other commodities must go up. You are up against it, to reduce the money rate of taxes on a declining money value. Yet, of you do not reduce these taxes you do not stay in office. You must therefore resort to expedients.

"In other states you liscense saloon and use the money received from the sale of such liscense and the fines collected from the victims of drink to reduce the tax rate. I shall not dilate upon the moral issue involved, of licensening places that deprive men of their responsibility and then fine men for irresponsibility which they acquire in the places you have liscensed. This state has outgrown that vice. It has not out grown politics. It has the thoro American characteristic of saying 'let George do it,' when it comes to paying taxes. We have abolished the saloon but retain the drugstore and the livery stable, the rooming and the road house. To these places you lead your victim thru the medium of your Lowbrouws who are employed not for the purpose of up holding the law, but rather for the purpose of securing money with which to reduce taxes and to curry favor with the electorate. That in turn means re-election and re-election means continuous salary. It was said by a learned philosopher that the working men were tied to the machinery of industry by their heart strings. I might paraphrase that and say the sheriff's, constables, squires are tied to the machinery of politics by their

HOW TO START A REVOLUTION.

If, five years ago, the query "how to start a revolution", had been put to the average American, his inevitable answer would have been something like this: prohibit free speech and assembly. Arrest every one who voices disapproval of the present government; search his home without warrants, terrorize his wife and frighten his children. Raid the offices of every organized movement of the working people, take the files, gather up all literature found, throw the officers of the organization in jail, organize and countenance mobs which shall carry what is left into the street and set fire to it.

Deny mailing priviliges to the papers of the poorer classes but give them freely to all others. Make the carrying of a membership card in a political party a crime and a labor union membership a felony. Set an army of sneaks and gum shoe operators on the trail of every man and woman who believes this is a free country. Prohibit all parades of workers, deny them the use of halls for meetings. Open the mail of all workers' organizations and keep it for as long as you want. Put spys in every labor union and instruct them to preach violence in order to trap the "radicals".

Elect fools and politicians to public office instead of men of social vision. Put the police power into the control of the local rich class and, use it always against the workers. Put judges on the bench whose idea of law is that it is for the rich and against the poor. When in doubt, hit the poor man and hit him hard.

Should the working-class get organized strong enough to elect their men to office, cook up charges against them and throw them out. If possible throw them into jail afterward.

If any of foreign birth should raise a voice of protest against conditions, throw them in jail for a few months, then ship them out of the country. If a foreign nation sets up a government that doesn't suit the American millionaires, draft a bunch of soldiers from the working class and send them out to war against them. Don't declare a war however, let it be a one man affair. Don't let the people have any thing to say about the policy of the government in foreign matters. And if they don't say what you want them to say about anything, jail them.

If the workers strike, get out an injuction against them, call out the soldiers and intimidate them, shoot up their towns and murder a few of their leaders, especially their women speakers. Don't let them meet to talk over their grievances. If thy will do it get the soldiers to scab on the strikers. In all cases take full control of all big daily papers, the little weeklies will follow the lead. Print all the lies that can be coined about the workers, create public opinion favorable to the capitalists, deny the workers any possible opportunity to state their side. Use the entire forces at the command of the government, not to make conditions better for the poor but to keep them in submission to their exploiters.

This will start a revolution most anywhere— especially in the United States".

SOMETHIG TO REMEMBER.

If we need an example of the brutality of our American prison system the hanging of a prisoner at Chicago before an audience of 200 "picked" prisoners affords us a perfect example. Not only of the brutality of the prison system but also of those in charge of our penal institutions. If there is one institution which demands the highest type of officers in charge, it is the prisons. No other institution affords as complete an opportunity to study the varying types of mankind under one environment and to work out the principles of a solution to criminal acts as do they. Yet in charge of them are placed not students of psychology and humanity, but men of the type of Sherriff Peters, whose idea of teaching a moral lesson is on a par with the philosophy of punishment practiced in the ages of savagery—and before.

"It will give them something to remember", he stated in defense of his brutal plan to force the prisoners to view the hanging of a fellow prisoner. Sherriff Peters probably does not know (being merely a politician), that brutality always brutalizes never reforms. The theory that men must be punished for crimes committeed, is both false and brutal. The true conception of crime is that it is a product of social conditons. Unsocal acts follow in the wake of unsocial environment. The porpusoses of prisons should be as places of safe keeping of the unsocial in order to protect the rest of society. They should also be schools for the teaching of right living, and right thinking. Instead, they are principally breeding places for more crime. Generally under the control of politicians whose sole purpose is graft and getting a living, who have no higher purpose than to get by with the job in the established order, little improvement has been accomplished in the prison system and little can be hoped for as long as the present ideas continue.

When the social conscience is awakened to the fact that society is responsible for the acts of its individuals, then and not until then will we have a penal system that will be a deterrent to crime. A society that is built upon the principle that the biggest hog gets the fattest living is a prolific basis for crime. As long as the present captalist rule continues there can be no radical change. The system breeds crime as it breeds poverty and millionaires. The system is brutal, consecquently its institutions are likewise.

MEET AT CAMBRIDGE.

Comrades of Guernsey County will meet for a social time at Socialist Hall Byesville on Jan. 10th.

All comrades are credially invited to be present for a good time is assured every one. Singing, music, games and a general social time including speaking will be enjoyed.

The many good wishes and holiday greetings received by the State Office from comrades testify to the revolutionary spirit than animates them. Surely these holiday gretings testify that 1920 will be one of the biggest years in our movement. The growth of the proletariat revolution over the world is a source of great inspiration to all class-conscious workers. That 1920 will prove to be one of great activity of Ohio comrades is the wish of the State Office force.

Five fifty for subscriptions from comrade Dan G. Berg of Bellaire, Mich., is a good New Years start. A copy of Lenin goes to him by return mail as a premium .

Comrade Geo H. Spitler of Canton is a literature booster. Orders for pamphlets from him lately attest to his work of educating those who need it.

Comrade Nate Rickey of Akron remits $6.50 for sub cards and Debs photos. He states his approval of The Toiler and wishes all workers had the same privilege of reading it that he enjoys.

Five dollars for the Liberation fund and the same amount for sub cards is contained in a letter from comrade Chas. Boydelatour of Canton. Another booster is he.

A comrade writes—"I love The Toiler tho I cannot read English. A little Bolshevik girl reads it to me".

"Here I come again with two more subs," writes comrade Dishart of Canton. Just a proof of genuine sincerity in the work.

To read The Toiler regardless of cost is the sentiment expressed in a letter from comrade Mrs. Pearl Patterson of Shirly, Mass. We have to confess that a lot of people think the same.

"Whoever does not violate God's law, violates no law. Debs would be a free man today of justice existed, but when laws exist in violation of God's law, that law is corrupt and those who support it are also corrupt." Albert Hanni.

Back again is our old booster, F. W. Wack of Battle creek. This trip he brings three more subs.

A. E. Knisley remits $5 for sub cards and gets Lenin for a premium.

A recent literature order consisting of 100 Mr. Blocks comes from comrade Mrs. A. Jones of Youngstowtown, O.

"I believe the Toiler is going t obe a winner, I wish I could put it in the home of every worker in this County" ,thus writes comrade Ben Carpenter of Harrison, Mich. And he helps to do it by ordering $5 worth of sub cards.

Comrade Metcalf of Youngstown is on the trail of subscribers there He gets them too, as a recent bunch of three proves.

Nick Weltlich is at it every week—getting subs we mean. Two yearlies this week proves it.

"To show you how easy it is to get subscribers. Took my paper to work with me to-day and read one article to the bunch. That was enough. I am sending three subscribers. Hoping to send more soon." H. H. Voelkmann, Columbus, O. You ought to take this evidence to heart and try it too.

Three yearlies from A. W. Wacker of Massillon indicates he is on the firing line.

Five yearly subs arrived this week from comrade Henry Sexaner, of Canton.

ONE MINER'S VIEW.

Mulberry, Kans. 12|22|19

Editor Toiler.

That was hot stuff you published about the strike. You sure hit the bulls eye every shot. We lost that strike good and hard and our own rotten, weak kneed, hypocrital officials were the only cause. I don't blame a thing on the government or on Gov. Allen, or any of the others involved in that strugle. It was our own so called LEADERS who lost the Miner's strike.

The rank and file was standing like a cement wall, I know what I am talking about for I was doing organization work among the strikers all during the strike and the chief blame rest on (LEWIS AND GREEN). We never asked them to go to Washington and swap us body and soul for a little respectability and that is just what I believe they did. I don't think they had guts enough to get any money out of the deal, while I for one, would think more of them if they had sold me straight out and got the money and then quit the job.

I remain yours truly,

A NEW AMERICAN COMMANDMENT

I am writing to call your attention to a magazine called "Now" sent out by Andrews & Co. of New York City.

On giving it the once over I discovered it was a propaganda sheet for the Kolchaks and Denikines of America. It contains a frantic effort of satire to annihilate what is left of deceny in the world, the one hope of civilization. Pleading desperately for the continuation of a system where one human can say to another "You work and earn bread and I'll eat it." Where the inhumanity of man to man makes countless thousands morn."

The 1st 6 pages are given to a description ,by Karl K Kitchen, of the type of civilization, which is a byproduct of the capitalist system. When the radicals succeed in grafting some brains on to the heads of some of the workers such ulcers on the body politic will cease to exist. On page 10 of the Nov. issue 1919 Myron T. Herrick, ex-governor of Ohio gives out what he calls the New American commandment. He is blissfully ignorant of the fact that this is the very commandment that will be put into action by the people he is opposing.

"No one class shall selfishly rule" who denies the workers, who produce all wealth, the right to live? What class is committing the atrocities against the workers? Who oppresses the oppressed? What class is making it illegal to strike?

Abraham Lincoln said: "This country belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they grow weary of their government they can exercize heir constitutional right of ammending it or their revolutionary right to overthrow it". Was not this revolutionary right exercised in the Dred Scott Case? The court that decided the Dred Scott case, by no means had a corner on the didos that add to the gayety of Nations and make the angels weep. Witness the espionage act, criminal syndicalism law, laws making it illegal to strike etc. etc. all of which will speedly clarify the thoughts of the workers as to which class is ruling and how, will do more to speed up the revolution than all he Bolsheviki propaganda could ever do. Their actions simply verify this propaganda. Just as the removal of the street cars of Toledo proves that if the public does not want to be left at the mercy of greedy corporations it must own its own public utilities. The ruling class of America may call the Bolsheviki all kinds of names, its easy to call a man a fool, but it rests with the man to verify his statement or by his actions prove you a liar. All the laws and all the lies the present ruling class can pass and tell will get them about as for in preventing the on coming revolution (or day of reckoning), as a celluloid dog chasing an asbestos cat through —ell. Its too late, the machine is displacing enough hand workers to insure us on ever increasing army of the unemployed. No work, no pay, no pay, no eat, no eat—reconstruction for the whole of society—in which no one class shall elfishly rule but all those who justify existance by some honest effort.

This same magazine contains on age 12 The Truth about Russia, by awrence Poushine, evidently one of the Russian oppressors, who would rather beg in America than spend a few hours a day in Russia earning his own bread. He whines because

The world do move. Here the coal miners went on strike in the winter time, when the people needed coal instead of waiting as usual until the springtime and people can get along without coal. Another result of bolsheviki influence or I. W. W.ism!

We used to hear a lot about the professional strike-breaker, but so great is the industrial unrest today that the strike breaker is lost in the shuffle.

Besides they're using the army for that now. The army's most popular song nowadays is, "Larry's on the coal pile now."

Next time you hear one of those idealistic wheezees emanating from the vicinity of Washington just remember that all the Russian prisoners in Germany that would go to the counter-revolutionary army in Russia were sent there but all who came from Soviet Russia were kept in Germany AND ARE THERE YET, clad in rags and half starved, KEPT THERE BY ORDER OF THE ALLIES of which Uncle Sammy is one.

Government by injunction worked very well as long as it was an employer getting the injunction, but when for the first time in our history the government itself got an injunction, somehow or other the injunction failed to injunct!

The coal miners seem to have what might be termed individual solidarity If they would only stick together and bunch up, one machine gun regiment could intimidate the bunch, but when they have five hundred thousand seperate and individual strikers each carrying on his own individual strike —gee its some job to round 'em all up—besides where would they put them if they could find them? The executive committee for the dominant class is up against a condition and not a theory.

Bolshevism in Russia is the revenge of the oppressed classes for CENTRIES OF PERSECUTION". Threatens to make it a sorry day for the Bolsheviki when the real Russians (the opressors) by the aid of the American Working man, get in control again. Of course the Bolsheviki have classified such "real Russians" as he is, with the bed bugs, sheep ticks lice and other parasites who get their living by virtue of their position on your back. Imagine criminals dressed up in clean linen, with Morris chair proctivities asked to earn their own bread!

Terrible is the sight of ignorance in action, says the poet Goethe, and according to Lincoln Colcord, that is the story of present civilization, of autocratic industry, plutocratic government, business for the sake of rofit and authority for the sake of power.

its venom about the I. W. W. firing on the armistice day parade in a western city we do not expect them to have the decency to print the TRUTH about the matter, to-wit;—that the paraders went out of their way and ATTACKED the hall, even breaking the door, and the shots were fired in defense of property, and that the coroners jury knowing this truth failed to name the guilty parties. We do not expect the capitalist press to have the decency to tell the truth about this matter—becase all who know the plute press, do not expect it to ever show any signs of decency. Let it be known for what it is—the lickspittle prostitute of the dominant class.

The dominant class thinks they can use the American Legion for a catspaw but it had better look out for a wallop from that same paw once the A. L. gets hip.

Unless the persons responsible for law enforcement make the various criminal sindicalist laws retro-active and chase down the law violator who in the name of 100% Americanism and patriotism does violence and commits murder the reds will be justified in looking upon those laws as so many bulwarks of the dominant class. It is not the red that is teaching a disrespect for law—it is the courts and those responsible for law enforcement, winking at acts of violence perpetuated against the reds.

Up in the state of Michigan a millionaire by the name of Newberry made a senatorial campaign on 100 per cent. Americanism vs Pacifism. The grand jury (federal) just brought in an indictment for him and 132 others charging them with fradulent use of money in the campaign. Thus gradually we get to learn what they mean by 100 per cent. Americanism!

FOREIGN NEWS.

NEW YORK.—A curious side-light is thrown upon the great printers' strike in Paris last month by French newspapers arriving in this country. Instead of dozens of journals of the most diverse kind, usually received as exchanges by American papers, only two sheets are reaching this city for each day of the strike.

The first of these is called "La Feuille Commune." It is "published with the authorization of the strike committee," and is jointly edited by the staffs of the following papers, most of them working class organs: La Bataille, Bonsoir, La France Libre, Le Journal du Peuple, L'Heure, L'Humanite, L'Oeuvre, Le Pays, and Le Populaire. This paper consists of but one sheet, the first page of which is taken up with general news and with a daily bulletin from the strike committee. On the second page the editors of the various publications joining in the enterprise are allotted a certain amount of space (usually one column) for editorial utterances.

Running in competition with this sheet is a "scab" paper, bearing the title "La Presse de Paris." It is the joint undertaking of fifty-seven papers opposed to the demands of the workers. Among them one finds the names of the New York "Herald" (Paris edition) and of the London "Daily Mail."

Four pages of reading matter are furnished daily. Pages one and four are taken up with news and stock reports, while pages two and three are entitled, "Tribune libre" ("Open forum"), and carry editorials by the various papers supporting the enterprise. The editors assert that they might have published each their own paper despite the strike, but that they took this means of "showing their complete solidarity."

SAVAGERY OF PRISON OFFICIALS REBUKED AT HANGING

Supposing you witnessed a hanging, what would you think then and afterward? Doubtless your thots would be grewsome enough. But soppose you were a life prisoner and a hanging was staged for your special benefit—"to teach you a lesson". We wonder if under those conditions, feeling yourself a helpless victim of those in authority, your thots would not bound past the grewsomeness of the scaffold and the blackcap and by the force of reaction develop an inclination toward the comic. This seems to have been the course pursued in the minds of 200 long-time prisoners at Chicago recently. The barbarity practiced upon these prisoners by compelling them to become unwilling spectators to a hanging was justly rebuked and the theories of the officials of the moral effect of the scene upon the prisoners were derided in a sufficint if surprising mannr.

Oppose Execution Before Prisoners.

CHICAGO, Jan. 1.—Announcement by jail officials that 200 prisoners would witness the hanging tomorrow morning of Raffalo Durrage, double murderer, as on object lesson, has brought forth many protests.

Mis Jane Addams of Hull House says:

"The notion that such an exhibition will afford a deterrent to crime is an old and savage punishment and is a survival of the times when the heads of crimials were exhibited on London bridge. It is taking a step backward to the dark times when it was difficult to distinguish punishment itself from tribal vengeance."

Mis Mary McDowell of the University of Chicago settlements says:

"It would have a very immoral effect on any criminal's mind and is wholly unnecessary. I wish to voice a strenuous objection, and Mrs. Gertrude Howe Britton of Hull House feels the same way about it as I do."

Harry C. Laubenheimer, first deputy sheriff, thinks differently. His opinion is:

"I know from experience that anyone who has witnessed a hanging will never kill deliberately.

"It is the greatest lesson that can be given a criminal/ The prisoners will be kept in cells, but will be placed so they can witness the execution. I'll guarantee every one of them will be sick of crime after they see Durrage hang."

Dr. J. A. Todd, professor and head of the University of Minnesota, was very outspoken in denouncinf the pian. Frank Wilson Blackmar, member of numerous prison assotions, also proted.

Sheriff Defends 'Lesson' Hanging

CHICAGO, Jan. 3.—An experiment in psychology was tried out this morning at the county jail, in the grizzly dim hour of dawn, when 200 prisoners were forced to witness the hanging of Raffalo Durrage, convicted murderer.

Hardened criminals—selected from among other murderers and felons whose expiation is not yet the gallows—were placed in cells, tier on tier of which surrounded the space in which the scaffold had been erected.

Sheriff Charles W. Peters, later issued a statement answering critics who opposed his action. The statement read as follows:

"In my opinion the modern coddling of criminals by well meaning but misguided, symapthetic, theretical reformers and self-constituted organizations, is one of the greatest causes of the present crime wave in this city. Their interferrence with the vigorous enforcement of the law has destroyed the fear of punishment by criminals to the extent that it is no longer a detriment to the further commission of crime to be incarcerated in our penal institutions. A large number or prisoners openly acknowleige that they would prefer to be incarcerated in the county jail, where they are better fed and where sanitary conditions are far better than in their ordinary environments.

"The reformers are constantly advocating the adoption and enactment of laws which are for the purpose of alleviating the punishment of the criminal, forgetting and losing entire sight of the protection that the law abiding and peaceable citizen is entitled to as against these human parasites.

"If one-half the energy now spent in sympathy on murdered and criminals would be devoted to the families of the victims and the other half to bringing to justice the brutes who have blotted out the lives of law abiding and peaceful citizens and darkened forever the lives of others, this would be a happier and safer world to live in."

When the noose was slipped over he murderer's head, from one of the higher tiers came a strident shout:

"When do we eat?"

Tier by tier, cell by cell the cry was taken up. It became a roar above which the warden's voice could not be heard.

guts. For salaries mean bread and bread is the staff of life."

The judge turned uneasy in his chair, the lawyer grinned, one or two of the officers laughed. It was a well known fact that the blind pig was located in the office of 'hizzoner's' livevry stable.

Jack went on, "You do not hate us; your relation to us is like that of the wolf to the sheep; it is not an attitude of malice but of relish. You arrest us, not as erring souls who need correction, but, rather as well feathered ducks that need plucking. It would be a dissapointment to you if we were broke and now in conclusion let me say, that I for one do not know my fellow prisoners . I had nothing to do with the drinking and was forced into the fight. I do not say this in an endeavor to modify the sentence of this court; you do not serve the cause of justice, but the financial interests of your constituancy. Your constituancy is shocked at your methods. It wounds their sence of morality but they will not put you out of office tho you rob us of our last cent and turn us out to freeze to death along the railroad track, as long as you succeed in keeping down the budget. Our plight touches their pity; the taxes their pocketbook and they will react to the most sensitive spot. You are up against it judge, I pity you some but of course I pity my pocketbook more."

At this all, including the prisoners, laughed.

"What shall we do with him?" asked the judge.

"The prosecution has no recommendations."

"Well," said the judge, "we'll just fine you fifteen for disorderly conduct and ten dollars for contempt of court, and give you thirty days to think it over—officer remove the prisoner."

ness, who declared that at a meeting addressed by Hodge he had urged the men to use their heads. Hodge has been threatened before by the troopers and ordered to leave town. The American Legion in a resolution denounces Hodge as an undesirable citizen and recommends that he be turned out of twon. They point to his record as a conscious objector in the war.

In Braddock, the location of the Edgar Thompson Works of the U. S. Steel Corporation, state troopers charged the funeral of a dead striker and dispersed about 400 men who had formed into a procession. The funeral cortege was leaving the S. S. Peter and Paul Greek Catholic Church when the troopers charged down Braddock Ave., swept their horses into the crowd, hurling the men right and left and causing them to flee for their lives. Since the first attempt was made, scarcely a year ago, to organize the steel workers, no meeting or demonstration of any kind has ever been permitted in Braddock or in any of the surrounding towns. The same obtains in Duquesne where, James S. Crawford is burgess, Chief police magistrate, a director of the Carnegie Steel Works and president of the local bank. Crawford is dubbed the "Duke of Duquesne" by the strikers.

With the exception of the two cities, Pittsburgh and Homestead, no meetings are being allowed in Allegheny County. In Homestead occasional meetings are being held and only where a triple permit is first obtained from the local authorities, the sheriff of Allegheny County and the officer in charge of the state troopers. In the city of Pittsburg all meetings have been stopped except those at the Labor Temple, which is owned by the local trade unions and so far has been exempt.

"May the New Year see all the political prisoners free and the Party split welded with true bands of Communism which cannot be severed", writes Fred White of Martins Ferry. He sends two subs too.

A Year of Revolution.

"With Germany crushed and autocracy dethroned, with the strong hand of power at the throat of liberty, the battle opens which is to make men free." In these words The Nation, on May 17 last, greeted the Treaty of Versailles, whose promulgation marked the culminating effort of the financial and political imperialism that has ruled the world for half a century. Today, far earlier than we had anticipated, the Treaty of Versailles is all but repudiated and the peoples of the world are taking uncertain steps toward freedom. There is no need to rehearse the events of the past twelve months. We have known the failure of the attempt made at Paris to prop the old order; the breakdown of the old economic and financial organization; the progressive collapse of political authority; the astonishing spread among all class of ideas only yesterday deemed utterly subversive; the many unprecedented outbreaks of economic and social unrest that have shaken every country in the world, from the United States and Great Britain to far-away China, India, and Australia; and, perhaps most striking of all, a steady progress of the armies of Soviet Russia and the strengthening and solidification of the communist organization of that country. Men cry Lo, here! and Lo, there! but the discerning perceive the truth; we live today in the midst of a revolution—a revolution of ideas and institutions and modes of life. Violence and bloodshed attend it from time to time as they have attended most of the revolutions of the past, but they are not of its essence nor of its making. If they come they may rather be the creation, as indeed we have already seen, of those who resist the revolution than of those who urge it on. God is not mocked; whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

A year ago, Italian peasants were burning candles before the picture of President Wilson; today, some millions of men and women the world over, starving, freezing, dying, are grimly denouncing the statesmen who sacrificed honesty and kindness and simple humanity on the altar of outworn political ideas. A year ago, all save a smal fraction of the people, in this country at least, appeared to believe that the shattered economic structure was capable of repair without anothr building; today, large numbers of the working classes, whether they work principally with the head or mainly with the hands, are questioning the whole foundation even though they topple down the entire structure in the process. A year ago, lulled by the honeyed promises of the war period, most men still believed that the new order might be builded in peace; today, disappointed by twelve months' experience of government promises unfulfilled, many of the same men declare, mistakenly we hope, that this revolution, like its predeseasors, cannot escape the baptism of blood. On the one side the past year has brought hunger and misery and violent repression of all complaint; on the other, a mad profitering, ostentatious luxury, and riotous excess of power. That in such soil revolutions grow, history shows.

The revolution which we are witnessing is not merely negative and destructive, however. Certain positive concepts and modes of action begin to occur with amazing frequency. Losing faith in leaders, men gain faith in themselves; and we witness, the world over, spontaneous mass action creating its own leaders. Losing faith in the political side of government, men recognize their own power as parts of an economic government; by direct action through their trade unions and other voluntary organizations they are here and there taking over the power which the nerveless hands of politicians have dropped. Losing faith in the essential justice and honesty of the present economic system as they see that system applied, they are already in process of creating a new one. Witness the growth of co-operation, with all its revolutionary implications; the relentless pressure of labor for actual, not nominal, control of natural resources and the tools of production; and the growing demand for the nationalization of fundamental resources and the democratization of basic industries. All of these are phenomena never before so marked as in the year just closing. It is needless to do more than recall the land legislation of a half dozen European countries, the coal, railway, and general industrial situation in Great Britain, or the plans and programs of the Plumb Plan League, the Nonpartisan League, the Labor party, and the Committee of Forty-Eight in the United States. Such is the structure which the revolution is already building. The aim is service rather than profits; production rather than exploitation; administration rather than dominion; liberty rather than mastership. With an assurance of power at once alarming and inspiring the hosts are beginning to march forward meeting missrepresentation, persecution, and violence with unwonted quiet and patience and with a significant absence of bluster, yet with a profound seriousness and determination that bode ill for those who do not try to understand what all this movement means.

It would be idle to deny that the greatest of all incentives to this revolutionary movement has been the example of Russia.For new revolutionary movemnt has been the example of Russia. For good or for ill there have appeared in Russia the outlines of a huge social experiment whose shadows stretch in long uncertain lines over the whole of Europe and across the Atlantic to the American continent. The fact that government is breaking down everywhere, that the Allies and Americans in Paris have been unable to control the destinies of the world or settle such comparatively minor problems as Fiume and the future of Hungary, that in nearly every country there is unrest and unhappiness, has impelled men to look to Moscow to see whether there is anything in the strange new devices of government put into effect by the Communists which may with advantage be adopted elsewhere. It is anathema even to suggest this in America today, for the mists of falsehod that have surrounded the Russian situation are only gradually beginning to disappear. Yet the fact remains. The Russian experiment is still frankly an experiment. Its crudities and excesses and the violences which have accompanied it stil bulk most largely in the prints. It is not yet clear what will be the residuum of good. But if out of it there comes something that is worth while in the way of new ideas in selfgovernment and self-determination, the whole world will profit. So deep is the world's distress that men turn eagerly in any direction in which there seems to lie hope, and they will continue to do so in the coming year as eagerly as they have done in the year of world-wide revolution which is just ending.

IRKUTSK, Jan. 1.— Irkutsk is in a tate of siege.

Martial law was declared following the usurping of Social Revolutionary troops Dec. 24, during which they captured the railway station but were unable to take the city from the Kolchak forces. Order is being preserved by the Cecho-Slovak troops.

Several of the cabinet ministers have been arrested. The revolutionary forces are in virtual control of the railroad from Irkutsk westward to Krasnoyarsk, but no serious outbreaks have been reported.

Admiral Kolchak is said to be at Achinsk, 220 miles east of Tomsk.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The capture of Yekaterinoslav on the southern Russian front and Novomoskovsk, fifteen miles northeast of Yekaternoslav, is announced in a Bolshevik offical statement issued today.

The reds also are fighting fiercely for possession of Tcherwassy, on the Dnieper, ninety-five miles southeast of Kiev. They have occupied Mariinsk, east of Tomsk, on the Siberian front, the statement adds.

It is claimed that all the railway junctions between Bawhmut and Lugansk have been occupied and that the red lines are less than sixty-five miles east of Yugansk.

With the capture of Novocherkaesky thousands of prisoners were taken, according to the Soviet report, which declares the occupation of Ilovayeskoye deprives the enemy of the only railway leading up to the front.

The Donetz coal basin is located in the province of the Don Cossacks along the Don river in southern Russia.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The advance of the Bolshevik forces in the Donetz coal basin is developing rapidly, according to a soviet wireless dispatch received here from Moscow. Allies Will Probe Conditions n Russia.

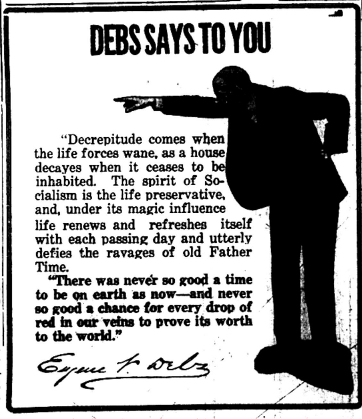
WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—An allied mission will make an investigation of conditions in Russia.

This fact was disclosed by the daily naval orders when Rear Admiral Newton A. McCully, who has been with the allied naval armistice commission, was gazetted as assigned to 'duty mission to Russia."

Officials of the bureau of navigation declared the mission was confidential. Other officials said the orders should not have been made public and refused to comment, although one official said he believed the duty was in connection with an allied mission to investigate conditions.



DEBS SAYS TO YOU

"Decrepitude comes when the life forces wane, as a house decayes when it ceases to be inhabited. The spirit of Socialism is the life preservative, and, under its magic influence life renews and refreshes itself with each passing day and utterly defies the ravages of old Father Time.

Soviet Envoy on Imperialism.

Litvinoff Explains Russian Policy on Peace, Land and Labor.

By H. W. Nevinson.

COPENHAGEN.—"The Russian Government has absolutely no imperialist design," said M. Litvinoff. 'It aims neither at Constantinople nor any other extension of frontier. Peoples," he continued, "should make their own boundaries," (apparently by the decision of the majorities.) "The Soviet ideal is a federation of peoples attached to Russia by posiion and economic relations.

"No military pressure should be brought, for instance, against Georgions or Lets or Ukranians if they chose to stand aside (he admitted the special difficulty of the Ukraine owng to its rapid changes of social order and government.) Secession would be allowed to all, in the hope that a natural economic alliance would bring all together in time.

"Russia has no concern with Constantinople, and hopes the Turks will be left free within their own boundaries. Even Siberia can separate, if it chooses the national or burgeois condition rather than the Soviet, as Poland at present does. When the Letts reconquered the Baltic provinces from the Germans, Moscow t once acknowledged their independence and so it has done throughout...

"As you know all work is nationalized so far as at present possible, and wages are fixed by scale according to occupation. 'Intellectuals' who have not run away are working at their special profession under the State. But I think, lawyers at least must have a poor time, for the old law has lapsed, and there cannot be many legal disputes about property where nearly all property is nationalized. In criminal cases the State provides a counsel for defence.

"Land is allowed to those who wo it, but the produce remains priva property, though it must be sold the State. Under this head the seems to be a good deal of illegal pro fiteering. And, indeed, the lust o thrift among all peasants in every country is one of the main difficulties in every social reform. The Govrnment is working Communal estates as an example to the peasants of how things might be done and gradually, I hink, the peasants are coming round.

"Stand guard over your press as you would over your own lives! If you allow that to be destroyed your hope is gone. Give the Socialist press your support as never before, and do all in your power to build up and preserve that great moral power for the education and emancipation of the people."—Debs.

Government Spies Wrote Planks in Communist Party Platform, also Laid Bombs, is Charge

Washington Stirred to Depths by Sensational Accusations Against Government Spies—Russian Republic Representative Demands Full Hearing Before Senate.

WASHINGTON.—Did the Department of Justice organize the Communist party of America and write into its platform the very planks upon which it now bases its prosecutions and deportation proceedings?

Charges that the Department of Justice did these things are contained in a statement given to all the press associations Jan. 6, by Santeri Nuorteva, secretary of the Russian Soviet Government Bureau.

Members of the United States Senate, who had received earlier information respecting the alleged "agent provocateur" activities of the Department of Justice, were excited and furious to hear that the mast degrading practices of the old Russian Czars had been copied by an executive branch of the United States government.

"Conspiracy to Suppress Ttruth."

Nuorteva's sensational statement to the press occurs in the course of his comment on the arrest of Gregory Weinstein, of the Soviet Bureau, in New York City.

After stating that the Soviet representatives "welcomed the opportunity given by the proposed hearings before the Senate committee to state the facts and refute the historical lies which are being spread about the Soviet government." Nuorteva charges that the contemplated deportation of himself and Martens is a conspiracy to prevent the Senate and the American people from learning the truth.

His statement then declares:

"We have conclusive evidence that agents of the Department of Justice have actively participated in the organization of the Communist Party or America, and that those very planks in the program of the party which now form the basis of the persecution of thousands of people have been drafted and inserted into that program by such government agents. We can prove that the chief figures in certain celebrated bomb plots were agents of a similar nature."

A member of the President's Cabinet who heard the charges against the Department of Justice exclaimed:

"I have felt for some time that private corporations were employing 'agents provocateur' to discredit labor, but it is almost incredible to learn that a department of the government has descended to that frightful practice."

Wholesale Collusion Charged.

The attention of some senators was drawn today to the fact that a well-known character within the Communist Party ranks, who was most active in its creation and early agitation, is reported to have "slipped through" the Department of Justice net, and they are asking whether he was given official assistance [illegible]escape".

Senators learned that the Soviet representatives are prepared to offer evidence of the most explicit sort showing that the Department of Justice was paying money to and receiving reports from the man who dictated the most radical planks of the Communist Party, in the weeks before, during and after the organization of that party.

On every side the opinion is expressed that the Senate will certainly demand the right to question the Soviet representatives and make them prove or confess the falsity of their astounding accusation. As one member of Congress declared tonight:

"If America has emerged from the world war a nest of spies and official plotters against exploited classes at

The Wrecker at Work.

I. W. W. DEMANDS SEARCHING INQUIRY INTO CENTRALIA HORROR.

CHICAGO. — Searching investigation into the facts behind the Centralia tragedy is demanded by the Industrial Workers of the World in an open letter which has been sent to the members of both houses of Congress. The letter bears the signature of Wm. D. Haywood, as secretary of the I. W. W. general defense committee.

"We want, and you want, the truth," the letter declares. "In this Centralia horror we haven't had the truth. Somebody has stopped it. There is something that somebody is hushing up. There are burning facts which guilty men are trying to conceal. Will you help us to uncover them?

"Out in the Northwest there has been a tragedy which has shaken the nation. At Centralia, Wash., a saturnalia of horrer has been loosed which is beyond description. Throughout the state of Washington it has been a signal for mob ferocity and lawlessness which has made life a teror for thousands of victims.

alls Packed With Innocents.

"It has packed jails with innocent men. It has enabled a gang of uniformed hoodlums to usurp every power of state. They have destroyed roperty, ravished civil rights, abolished every constitutional safeguard of citizenship.

"Under a cloak of patriotism they have attempted to exterminate a whole labor organization. They have shut the mouths of every man who has attempted to protest. They have become judge and jury and executioner, and in their hands all Washington today is like a black pogrom.

"How much do you know of all this?

Newspapers Glorify Thugs."

"For the newspapers (except for the tiniest minority) tell us nothing—and they tell you nothing! From the first shooting in Centralia on Armistice Day, the [illegible]s of the country has willfully dis[illegible] the whole situation. In a struggle where there were plainly two sides they have printed one side and maligned the other..

"They have glorified the thugs and stigmatized the victims. They have used every twisted incident as propaganda to exhort their readers to go and do likewise. And in Centralia itself a mob of men was thrown around the town to prevent a word from trickling out.

One Paper Tried to Tell Ttruth.

"One newspaper tried to print the truth. It was not an I. W. W. paper, it was the Seattle Union Record, owned by the American Federation of Labor. It announced that it had investigated the Centralia outrage, and that in its next issue it would print the suppressed truth. But before this next issue could appear the paper was stopped and its editors thrown into jail.

"There are a few facts, however, which have escaped the censorship. They are cloquent of the true situation:

"First—The four men who were shot at Centralia were shot while breaking the law. At the coroner's inquest it was plainly brought out that they halted the parade in front of the I. W. W. headquarters and charged the door, thus bringing upon themselves the penalty which they suffered.

Self-Defense Is Lawful Right.

"Second—This would mean that the men who fired the shots were unmistakably within the law, for even in capitalist courts a man is accorded the right to shoot in self-defense when an intruder breaks into his property.

"Third—But after this, other paraders seized Wesley Everetts, an I. W. W. and an overseas victim, and murdered him by lynching. They desecrated his body, dragged it back to the jail where other I. W. W. were imprisoned, and threw it there. Then they forced their prisoners to dig a grave for Everetts on a vacant lot and bury him.

"Fourth—Every known I. W. W. in Centralia at that time was seized and without due process of law was thrown into jail. And 10 of our mem-

WHO IS THE DESTROYER OF LIBERTY?

Our cartoonist has depicted the conditions of American political life in a striking and livid manner in this week's Toiler. The drawing tells the story far more completely than words can describe. A few months ago the words "liberty and freedom" were moving words. To-day they are dead—except in the minds of the world's oppressed. Then, the world was passing thru a saturnalia of blood. A rallying cry was necessary to lead on the peoples to more sacrifice and slaughter. An idealogical aspect must be put upon the face of the struggle . What better catch-phrase than "liberty" could be sounded in the ears of the victims of capitalistic world imperialism?

But hypnotized labor to expect the practical application of the precepts of liberty to their every day lives and to industrial conditions. They accepted without question the promises of their leaders. They bled and sacrificed without end that the ideals which were held aloft by the sponsors of war might live afterward. How bitter is the dissapointment! To-day, the workers of the world, with the exception of Russia, are ground to bits beneath the iron heel of despotism. Of all nations, the workers of the United States are ground down more pittilessly than any. Every single Constitutional liberty has been and is now being denied them. That "bulwark of our liberties", the Constitution, has been shattered to bits by the hand of capitalistic interests. Free speech, free assembly are dead. The workers are disfranchaised.Berger has been denied the seat to which he was elected by a clear majority of 5,000 votes. Every citizen who voted for Berger was disfranchised by the acts of the representatives of capitalistic interests in congress. In New York, five socialists have been denied their seats in the state assembly. The constitutional right of the citizens to elect representatives of their choice have been violated by capitalistic interests. The destructionist is at work in every field and always it is the same influence that stands in the bagkcround.

Because of the work of this arch—enemy of liberty, nearly half a million steel workers have been forced back to their toil, underpaid, overworked, and denied even the right to form organizations for forcing concessions from their organized employers. The steel strike in an eloquent page in the history of the rise of American capitalist influence over the historic "rights" of American workers and citizens. In every steel center, the heavy hand of oppression came down upon the workers with violence. Every vestige of personal and constitutional liberty was ruthlessely stamped into the mire. Meetings of the steel workers were broken up by armed violence of uniformed thugs. Men and women were murdered outright and no bones made of it. The steel strike was lost because slavery was imposed upon the strikers by the armed power of the state at the behest of Gary and his associates in plunder.

The Constitution was an obstruction in the path of capitalistic imperialism, and because it was so, it has been wrecked to bits. It has been cast upon the scrap heap of history and now marks a milestone along the path which capitalism has passed. It can never be rebuilt. It will never again serve as a refuge of the working—class of America. It cannot be used as a weapon for their defense against the employing class. In the struggle of Labor for mastery of the world, it cannot be revived as an implement to further its rise to power. The Constitution is dead—it can no longer be said to exist.

Capitalism knows no law but the law of its own will. It will without a quiver wreck its own laws when they stand in its way. It acknowledges but one law—the law of force. The workers must forge new weapons if they would win against entrenched and powerful capital. We know now, that we can never win by merely "gaining 51 percent of the ballots". We know that capitalism has no more respect for majorities than it has for minorities. Labor must give all its activities for shorter hours and higher wages a revolutionary meaning. It must quit quibbling over these things merely as such. Labor must recognize that in order to live humanely, it must control the means by which it lives. It must take out of the hands of capital the power to control production. It must take out of the hands of capital its unearned possession of the machinery of production. To live, Labor must rule. And to rule, it must cease depending upon the "rights" given by dead constitutions. It must by force of its invincible numbers, write a Constitution in which only they, who labor shall share.

NEWS NOTES OF LABOR STRUGGLE FROM ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

(Federated Press News Service.)

Living costs still soar.

WASHINGTON.—Efforts of the government to lower the cost of living have been unsuccessful, it is shown by figures gathered by the Bureau of Labor Statistics from 50 principle cities.

It costs Mr. Householder more money today to feed, shelter and clothe his family than it did in midsummer, when President Wilson asked railroad shopmen to defer a threatened strike until the government had an opportunity to bring down prices, figures show.

Up to November 15, which is the latest date for which exact figures are available, retail prices of 22 staple commodities had risen approximately 2 per cent since the president issued his letter to the railroad men. The index number stood at 192 for November, compared with 18 for October—prices in 1913 being figured at 100. Since November, unofficial data shows the rise has been continued.

British Suppression in Ireland

DUBLIN.—An indication of the extent to which England is tightening her hold on Irish affairs may be gathered from a comparison of raids and other activities by the military and the police under orders of Dublin castle, during the last three years.

In 1917 and 1918 there was a total of 271 raids by the military and police on private houses; in the first nine months of 1919 the number was 5,588.

In 1917 and 1918 there was a total of 99 armed assaults on unarmed civilians; nine months of the present year showed a total of 333.

In 1917 and 1918 proclamations and suppressions amounted to 35; in the period January to September, 1919, the figure was 258.

In 1917 and 1918 15 newspapers were suppressed; in the first nine months of 1919 23 suffered this fate.

In 1917 and 1918 there were 98 courts-martial; in nine months of the current year there were 227.

Lenin warns of Premature Revolt.

MILAN.—A warning against a premature insurrection provoked by the capitalists has been sent by Nicolai Lenine to Serrati, editor of Avanti and leader of the Italian Communists.

Commending the Communist stand by the Italian Socialists in the congress of Bologna, Lenine declares that they are right in using political means to gain their platform, especially since the reaction in western Europe is only too anxious to stir up an insurrection, which would burn out the whole movement.

"Choose the moment for your action that is favorable from the international point of view," he said. "Then it will be permanent. The progress of Communism all over the world is surety for your victory."

Feb. 20, date for decision of new tactics to force nationalization

LONDON.—A big step toward the nationalization of the mines of Great Britain was made at the special trades union congress held here Dec. 11 and 12, attended by representatives of more than 5,000,000 union members. It was agreed to defer until the next meeting, Feb. 20, the decision as to what action should be taken to force the government to adopt the majority report of the coal commission, and meantime to continue the campaign for nationalization with joint control by the state and the miners.

A comprehensive food policy was adopted, of which a large measure of control by the state and by municipalities was a feature. . . . .

In a session animated by the warmest feeling, a resolution demanding the end of the blockade and the war on Russia was adopted unanimously. The resolution included the demand that passports be granted to a trade union committee of inquiry to Russia.

A labor general staff was established for the purpose of co-ordinating the movement.

A Bankrupt World

WASHINGTON.—That the world is practically bankrupt is the interpretation put by economists upon the move of Secretary of the Treasury Carter H. Glass in urging that the short-time credits be extended to the allied countries to long-term notes.

Some $475,000,000 are due annually to the United States government by allied countries on loans extended to them to finance themselves through the great war. "The collection in dollars of this interest," says Secretary Glass, "under present circumstances, would be no less diastrous do American interests than to the interests of our debtors."

He therefore proposes loading this debt upon future generations: "Pensions should be made by deferring and spreading over a later period the payment of interest which would accrue, during the next two or three years."

Perhaps the most demaging indictment of capitalist financiering is contained in the closing paragraph of Glass' letter to Representative Fordney, chairman of the house committee on ways and means:

"While I fully realize the desirability of collecting this interest and decreasing at once by a corresponding amount the taxes which we must collect, I should be most reluctant without specific instructions from congress to the contrary to demand the immediate payment of interest which would not only seriously retard the economic restoration of those countries without which they will be unable to pay the interest and principal of their debt to us, but which also would destroy their power to make needed purchases in our markets."

pain Unfriendly to Soviets

MADRID.—Forced by the Socialist deputy Saborit to make a definite statement as to Spain's attitude toward soviet Russia, the minister of foreign affairs stated that Spain had not been asked to join the allied blockade against Russia, but that the government refused to take a friendly attitude toward that country.

Would Sabotage Parliament

LONDON.—Representatives of 300,000 union men have called upon the Parliamentary Labor party to block all business in the house of commons until the government has restored the unemployment dole. If the government fails to comply, direct action to enforce the demand is threatened. It is declared that a relentless fight will be carried on against the measure to abolish the dole, which leaves utterly without resources many thousands of unemployed workers.

These recommendations were included in resolutions adopted at a conference of the South Staffs and Worhestershire federation of trades councils, which demanded that the government make some provision for its masses of unemployed until it has solved the problem of unemployment itself.

gypt demands Self-determination

PARIS.—"How can you vituperate Germany for having taken away Alace and Lorraine without the consent of its people, when you are guilty of disp osing of Egypt without a word to er?" was the question asked Clemeneau by the Egyptian delegation when elegates of the "lost provinces" reurned to the French chamber.

"The Egyptian people cannot accept the clanse in the treaty of Versailles which refers to them," continues the statement, which is signed by Saad Zagloul, head of the delegation. "As the people of Alsace-Lorraine protested against the treaty of Frankfort in 1871, we will continue to demand that the right of self-determination be granted us."

eputies Shy at Worker's Declaration

PARIS.—The chamber of deputies refused to listen to a declaration of loyalty to France by the working people of Alsace-Lorraine because the word "Socialist" was connected with it. During the welcoming back to the cahmber of the deputies ofter almost 50 years of separation, Albert Thomas, Right Socialist, attempted to read the declaration from 112,000 electors in the provinces. Immediately there was an uproar. Marshal Foch and Generals Pau and Magin left the room, and only with the greatest difficulty was order restored.

American Legion Sponsors onstabulary

CHICAGO.—Despite the fact that the third Illinois legislature defeated the state constabulary bill last May, the department continues to function. t functions as the police force of the state society for the prevention of cruelty to animals. It operates under the old horse-thief act. Mayor Thompson is said to be an honorary officer, and the American legion is its guiding star.

All these facts were admitted reuctantly by Walter P. Stuart, whose office is listed in the telephone directory as one of the state departments, [illegible] correspondent of The New Majority. [illegible] department of constabulary [illegible] by Stuart [illegible]

Socialization Law is Compromise

BERLIN, Germany.—After much quibbling and more compromise, a general socialization law, which is to serve as the basis for all subsequent socialization measures, has been passed by the German national assembly.

The act provides that every German shall be guaranteed the right to earn his living by his own efforts. It pledges the government to afford him this right in case it is denied him by private employers. It provides for the transfer to the communty, upon adequate payments to the present owners, of such industries as are adapted" to "management by the ommunity," and stipulates that the ational government may assign the work of socialization to the various tates, communes, or specially created economic bodies.

The act has drawn fire from both capitalists and Socialists, and apperently satisfies nobody. It is assailed by the Socialists as a compromise with the capitalist system, and by the capitalists as too revolutionary.

British Despotism in South Africa

KIMBERLY.—South Africa under British Rule is a country where the native must get a pass to live with his wife, another pass to visit his family down the street, and another to work for his tiny wage of a shilling and a half a week. There is a abor party to which no laborer can belong, a Socialist party which is smothered to death, and a church which has had a special law put through the English parliament to keep the natives out.

Natives pay the general tax, and a special tax in addition to punish hem for being natives. With the proceeds of these native taxes the British build schools—for white children only.

The negro in South Africa cannot rise above the serf condition, since he is not allowed to buy land. And he cannot leave a job that pays him L2 a month for one that pays him L3, without the written consent of the irst employer.

oviets Will Continue Peace Offer

COPENHAGEN.—Ten offers of peace have been made to the entente by soviet Russia since Aug. 5, and offers will continue until peace is obtained according to a statement by the congress of soviets recently held in Moscow.

British Labor Unites For Nationalization

LONDON.—How the British working class pulls together as a unit on all important issues was again illustrated in the recent decision of the co-operative movement to aid in the campaign for the nationalization of the coal mining industry.

Some time ago, it was agreed by the Trade Union congress, the Labor party and the Miners' Federation that a nation-wide platform campaign should be undertaken to win the people to a support of the nationalization plan. At the initial meetings, held to agree upon the details of the campaign, only these three bodies were represented. Since Dec. 1, however, the co-operatives have joined the combine, and British Labor is thus making a united drive.

Damage Claims Against Mexico

MEXICO CITY.—In view of the present agitation regarding revolutionary damage claims by foreigners, especially Americans, for losses alleged to have been suffered in Mexico during the past few years, it should be recalled that of the nearly half a billion dollars of such claims presented on a previous occasion (in 1848), less than one per cent were found valid by the international commission to which they were submitted.

Following the ratification of the treaty of Guadeloupe, in 1848, which brought to an end the war between the United States and Mexico, numerous and exorbitant claims arose by the nationals of both countries for alleged injuries to their persons and property. By agreement of the two nations, one representative each of Mexico and the United States was appointed to an arbitration commission, with the understanding that the two appontees would in turn agree upon the third arbitrator. That arbitrator was the British minister at Washington.

Out of 1,017 American claims examined by the commissioners, 831 were rejected, and out of 998 Mexican claimed, 831 were thrown out.

[illegible] RED ARMY.

ENTIRE SOUTHERN FRONT COLLAPSES BEFORE INVINCIBLE REDS. GREAT STORES OF WAR MATERIALS FALL TO BOLSHEVIKI AS TRIUMPH MARKS ONWARD COURSE.

Late news dispatches from Siberia disclose yet greater successes of the Red Soviet army.

The town of Krasnoyarsk, eastern Siberia, has been captured by the Bolsheviki, according to a Moscow wireless dispatch.

The remnants of the First, Second and Third enemy armies have surrendered, and 60,000 prisoners already have been counted.

Another Moscow dispatch says the booty captured by the reds on the southern front in Russia in the present offensive includes 400 guns, 1,000 machine guns, 11,000 rifles, eighteen armored trains, 200 locomotives, 10,000 wagons and large stores of food and munitions together with 35,000 prisoners.

Krasnoyarsk is situated on the trans-Siberian railway, about 300 miles east of Tomsk. Lying on the plain, and open to the play of the bitter winds, traffic with the town by caravans is almost impossible in the winter. The town is situated on the left bank of the Yenisei river.

WASHINGTON.— A threatening spread of the Bolshevik forces in south Russia and Siberia was reported to the state department today in official advices received from Siberia and European Russia.

These show that the eastward adwance of the Bolshevik forces through Siberia has reached the edge of Irkutsk, on the western shores of Lake Baikel, which the foreign representatives, including the American consul general, Mr. Harris, have now been forced to quit for safety.

Where is Admiral Kolchak?

It had been the hope of the followers of Admiral Kolchak that he would be able to make a stand at Irkutsk, but there is no certainty now that he will be able to save himself, as he has been cut off and it is not even known where he is.

Secretary Lansing has been advised that the Bolsheviki are now practically unopposed at Taiga and that the reds are also advancing in south Russia where the forces of Gen. Denikine are making a further retirement.

"There is no definite news regarding Admiral Kolchak's headquarters," the state department announced. "At this time he has not reached Irkutsk, where the Cech forces have taken the railway station. The station is located across the river from the main portion if the town.

Will Confer With Semenoff.

"The representatives of Japan are going to Chita, where Gen. Semenoff, who succeeded Admiral Kolchak as leader, is located, and from where he is endeavoring to excercise authority over eastern Siberia.

"In the south of Russia, the forces operating under Gen. Denikine, have been cut in two by the Belsheviki thrust which has penetrated to the Sea of Azov. The Bolsheviki forces have captured Berdinansk, Mariapol, Taganrog and Rostov-On-Don on that sea. In the Caspian section, Derbendanpetrovak has been captured as well as Gutieff and Krasnovodsk by the Bolsheviki.

In the nothwest and armistice has been signed between Esthonia and soviet Russia and fighting in that section has ceased.

In the Ukraine the Polish troops have advanced and have taken over teritory abandoned by the Denikine forces.

The aim of the Polish government is reported to be to stabilize the situation in that region in an effort to prevent bolshevism finding a foothold there.

The evacuated regions are reported infested with bands of robbers and plunderers.

The Black Sheep

CHAP. XIII.

Prison visitors.

It was several days after Jack had been locked up in a cell with Collins for a mate, and with Rudolph occupying an opposite cage that their conversation drifted upon the subject of religion. It may be that it was the sound of church bells calling the populace of the village to devotion, that suggested the subject to their minds.

Jack was fully aware of the inadequacies and contradictions of his parents' creed. He had looked upon it as a natural plaything for illiterate folk, and therefore not worthy of serious consideration. Like the subject of economics prior to the time he had met George, it did not occur to him that religion had any influence for evil on the masses of mankind. He was a naturalist with a strong leaning toward the biological phenomena. He was more interested in the philogenetic history of man than in his sociological relations. But his eyes were to be opened, and Collins was a thoro, if at times, rough teacher.

"There are churches at Anamoose, here as elsewhere, they may be called the gages by which, the concentration of wealth may be measured; they advertise the fact that there are vested property rights in the community. The fiercer the exploiters the bigger their Bibles. You will notice that the emblem of the church is the cross, that is, because she is a stranger to the Christ. If Christ ever existed he died like Parsons and Spies, because he defended the rights of the poor. He was a member of one of the ancient brotherhoods of Labor — a quinquinalis, or Lord and Master, if I read history rightly. Just read your Bible carefully and you will find much revolutionary terminology in the passages reputed to be the words of Christ. But in order to understand it according to the materialist conception you have to have some idea of the scope and extent of ancient labor organizations. We might call them the pre-christian unions. They were organized in all the ancient empires. Empires rise and fall as a result of the concentration and re-distribution of wealth. It was organized labor existing under the ancient military despotism, that kept the germ of liberty alive and carried within it the promise of the ultimate redemption of the masses from the economic tyranny of the rich.

You may ask how it was that the military over lords of ancient times permitted such organizations. The answer is that complete slavery not only dwarfs the body but degenerates the mind. A man whose highest incentive in life is an effort to keep a lash from his back has no incentive to mingle his brain with his labor, with the result that where the working class has no such incentive to create, civilization does not advance. Man must be sustained by production. The tendancy is for population to increase geometrically, while the resources from which they must be fed do not increase unless the tools of production are improved, and the knowledge of agriculture advanced. Slaves do not improve tools, neither do they advance the sciences.

In those days the masters did no work productively, hence accumulated no experience of a useful nature. They were unable even if they had been willing to improve the methods of production and distribution. The masters of the world have never produced anything but misery to the masses and ultimate destruction for themselves. As early as eleven hundred years B. C. labor had begun to organize. The exodus of the Jews from Egypt, is the earliest recorded labor walk out. Three hundred years later, and we may suppose that during that time progressive organization had taken place, the brotherhoods of the slaves were legalized by three of the foremost statesman of the world, Amasis of Egypt, Solon of Greece, and Numa Pompilius of Rome.

These men saw that a nation enslaved is a nation dying. They realized that when the population became more numerous, and lived in cities, that production in shop and field had to keep pace; they realized, that the struggle for existence had been taken from the masters and transferred to the backs of slaves; that leisure would develop new tastes and habits of culture that would have to be gratified with commodities which the stultified brains of chattles could not supply. They were forced to realise that labor needed a nobler incentive to work than the whip in the hand of a master; that they needed an ideal which they might hope to attain thru the perfection of their arts and crafts. There was still another and perhaps more potent need for the formation of the Solonic trade unions. It may be found in the constant danger of invasion from the barberian hordes beyond the frontier. The masters knew that they would succumb to these marauders, unless their hands were strengthened with arms and supplies furnished by industrious slaves. That is perhaps the basic reason for turning a portion of the slaves into freed men. But the word freedman like the modern term wage worker did not mean that these people possessed true liberty. What the masters did was to change the form and status of their slavery. They gave them a delusion which they called liberty.

This delusion made civilization permanent. It became the mother of industrial progress. The slave believing himself to be free, and knowing that his liberty depended upon his ability to furnish military equipment to his military masters now worked with all the energy of his arms and brain. That is why civilization blossomed under the Solonic dispensation. Wth the products of the freed man's genius, his masters conquered the world.

"There is a legend to the effect that the first Roman aristocrats were suckled by a she wolf and their descendants have ever been true to their mother's milk. They have always had, and as long as mankind will tolerate their existence will have, all the rapacity of a hungry beast. These aristocrats no sooner had subdued their enemies, than they turned upon the freedmen whose labor and genius had made their victories possible. Aristocracy is alien to all sentiment. They are as dead to kindness and gratitude as was their legendary foster mother from whose dugs they drained the gall mixed milk of rapacity. If you want to know them, then read your Bible's description of Jehovah. He is the Super Aristocrat. Labor is the source of their power and they thanked her with the "Iron Heel". And what was the result? Rome fell and with her fell civilization down into the pit of the dark ages, to rise no more for a thousand years. Wolf like they destroyed the flock on which they preyed, — and starved.

But I am off my theme. These ancient brotherhoods were organized upon Rudolph's favorite principle, 'Mutual Aid'. They preached thrift and loyalty to one another. They were strong for industrial efficiency. They were ruled by their own chief, who was responsible for their conduct to the military cast in society. He was their president, and often their master workman or the teacher of the trade. He was also their attorney at the ports of their masters, from which the christians get their idea that Christ is our advocate, the chief patrician called God.

"It sometimes happened that these unions incurred the displeasure of their master; putting themselves in danger of re-inslavement or death. History records in a more or less vague form several of the massacres of inoffensive working people. There were instances in which their lord and master would offer his life as an atonement for the quilt of his people. It is perhaps from this that the saying, "Greater love hath no man than he who layeth down his life for his brethern," originated. Christ was not the first of whom this was said. It was said of many Saviors before his day. They called them Soters. Nearly every union worshipped the memory of one of these generous souls. The habit of giving ones self for his fellow men is a direct result of the teaching of collectivesm. It is an act that inspires awe, veneration and gratitude; it is an act which translates man to God. Christ appealed to the sense of solidarity of all nations and was therefore considered the Lord and Master of the world wide union who gave his life as an atonement for his people to the wolf bred masters of Rome.

"The church today still bears the name of the ancient union. The Greek word KURIOS sometimes written KURIKOS and the Latin word CURIA are direct roots of the German word KIRCHE the Schotch word KIRK, and the English word church. There was also a Greek name designating a confederation of these unions —synodoi from which the presbyterians and other denominations get their term synods. The Pope of Rome is called Pomtifex Maximus or chief bridge builder; in fact the whole terminology of modern spook artistry is shot thru with the language of these primitive unions. The church is the evil ghost of labor's assinated father.

Rome assasinated the ancient labor unions; not by fire and sword and wild beast of prey; she tried that and only succeeded in bribing them into the catacombs. Principle is immortal, persecution can only advertise but never destroy it. Yet Rome killed the Solonic dispensation not by force but

The Coal Settlement.

The news comes from the Columbus convention that the Coal strike is "settled", that is, it is if the operators will accept the recommendations which the president's commission of three award the miners. The operators are not compelled to accept the award, tho the miners are. The strike settlement may be characterized as a victory for a capitalistic imperialism alligned with traitors within the miner's union.

How reactionary and behind the present times are the officials of the miner's union is seen in this "victory" for "business unionism". How lacking in moral courage were the statements of President Lewis. "We were compelled", was the keynote of his speech before the convention in defense of the officials' ignominious surrender to the government's injuction. They had not the vision to look thru the bars of a prison cell and see a new day for the miners. They could only feel the taint of the prison clinging to them as they dallied with the bourgeoise for the crumbs from their table. Such an example of moral bankruptcy has seldom been held up before a body of workers.

"When this (the union), becomes, anything elese than an American institution, I shall leave it," Lewis is credited with telling the miners. Lewis probably is in blissfull ignorance that the miner's union ceased utterly to be an "American" institution in the way that he means when the Government of the United States issued an injunction "ordering" its members back to the mines. When that injunction was issued, the United Mine Workers of America ceased to be an "American" institution and became an object of vegeance of capitalistic imperialism acting thru the government.

Lewis' statement that the officials, by acting as they did in compliance with the demands of the injunction, had "saved the organization to make such 'progress' as was possible in the future", must be accepted with a doubt as to its truth. The future will likely disclose that instead of being "saved' the organization has been wrecked.

The miners will have much to ponder over as they pick and blast their way beneath the surface these coming months. These days are charged with mighty forces which are driving the workers into closer affiliations with one another. The idea of One Big Union is a light in present darkness. This light, the miner must and will find in his darkness. It is a light that no group of platidunious and visionless leaders can snuff out.

The miner's strike is UNSETTLED.

DEMOCRACY RAPED.

Coming on the heels of the denial of a seat in Congress to Victor Berger, Socialist, because of alleged "disloyalty" is the refusal by the state legislature of New York to seat five socialists elected in regular manner by the voters in their political districts. The movement of plutocracy and capitalist imperialism toward complete domination of the life of the workers is growing by leaps and bounds. Congress, having set an example in the denial of the people's right to seat their chosen representatives in the national lawmaking body, we may with all justification expect all states to follow in a like manner whenever those whose opposition threatens the rule of capitalist imperialism are elected.

There is no dodging about the bush by the state legislature of New York in this matter. As soon as the assembly opened, a resolution was adopted declaring the seats of the five socialists vacant. No bones were made as to why. The fact that they were elected upon the platform of the Socialist Party was declared as the reason. The Assembly will now proceed to decide the "loyalty" of the five socialists. It will in this case be the plaintif, judge and jury. Just what chance the socialists have of taking their seats in the face of such a combination may well be guessed.

A new era has been born in the political life of the United States. These two denials of duly elected representatives of voters marks the beginning of political despotism in America. Capital sees its domination of the law making bodies of the maton threatened by the increasing number of worker's representatives. It is to thwart this that they are denied their seats. It is a step of desperation. But capitalism must perforce take it. No method, however, subversive of the principles upon which the government is suposedly erected, must be left untried. It is to this stage that the social revolution in America has arrived—that duly elected representatives of the workers are denied their constitutional rights at the hands and by the orders or Capitalist Dictatorship. A lesson in tactics is being driven home to the workers that must be learned—that the ballot is a "scrap of paper" unless backed up by economic force—Revolutionary Unionism. The answer to capitalism's rape of democracy is mass action of the workers.

You will write just the kind of a book that Time and History will require, and in every line, on every page, you will be speaking for me with my authority, given to you without reservations or qualifications."—Eugene V. Debs to David Karsner.

Address: COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY OF OHIO,
3207 Clark Ave. — Cleveland, Ohio.

Comrade Roy Hall of Coshocton, O., sends a dollar bill for a sub for another comrade. Yearly subs are in the ascendancy these past few weeks. Looks as tho the workers had decided that a dollar is little enough to spend at one time for what they want, while they often have to spend much more for something they do not want. And then, isn't it just as easy to sell a dollar sub as the other kind?

SPARKS.

Comrade Marguerite Prevey is scheduled to address a Prisoners' Defense meeting at Bellaire, Jan 18th. Other Locals are contemplating meetings in the near future. Every Local which can arrange a meeting should do so at once. Meetings provide great propaganda opportunities and every comrade should realize their value to the Movement.

That the Toiler Cartoon Department is turning out most satisfactory work is the opinion of many comrades who have written commendatory letters to the State Office. And while appreciation is being given, let us announce that the cartoon service is donated to you. It is a free gift to the Movement by a comrade who desires no return for his labor except to see the Movement for working-class emancipation grow. Every reader should lend his heartiest assistence by getting subscriptions for The Toiler. Show your appreciation by lending a hand. Actions talk.

Bullitt's Report is one of the best sellers that the State Office has ever handled. The price is right too—50c a volume. This report of the Bullitt Mission to Russia and the testimony before the Senate Investigating Committee, contains much astonishing information about the tangled Russian policy of the Allies. Most of it has never appeared in print before. Order it, read it and pass it on to others.

Comrade Phalen of Columbus forwards three subs this week.

A thousand notices of subscription expirations were mailed out last week. Did YOU get one. If so, send your renewal at once. Don't delay. And while you are renewing, add 25c and write another worker's name on the BOOST slip. Boost a bit.

Comrade Harry Carter of Wakemen O. writes for membership application cards. Looks like he was out for members, doesn't it? Sure does. He also sends names to receive sample copies of The Toiler. Some comrades find many ways to help the work along. Introducing The Toiler to the unacquainted is one of the best.

Literature committees to work in the shops are being organized by Local Cinti. Union meetings and shops are good places to sell literature. Try it. Order a bunch of our pamphlets.

An instance of what can be accomplished by a slight effort given to the work of getting subscriptions is furnished by comrade Jas Albert of Newcastle, Ind. He sends us four new subs and his letter states that he thinks a six month's treatment of The Toiler will induce renewals when the time is up. And we believe he is right.

Comrade H. M. Kohr is on the job at Urichsville, O., this week. Two subscriptions from him indicates what a little activity will accomplish.

Guernsey County Locals seem to be especally well favored in regards to halls and possibilities of holding meetings. At Derwent, a permanent headquarters is being established. Beyesville, the County headquarters, has permanent quarters. Local Robins meets in the hall owned by the miner's union. This Local has also rented a picnic ground for use the comming summer. Present indications in Guernsey County lead to the assertion that live activities will be carried on there in future.

Considering that bundle of literature which was sent, you comrades, literature agents and Local secretaries,—have you ordered more like it? Don't neglect the literature end of the Movement. Better order a package from these samples—RIGHT-A-WAY.

Comrade L. L. Lowery, of Fir, Ark., sends us two subs. Every little sub helps make a big revolution. Get the subs.

Comrade T. H. Cave of Holy Hill, Fla., orders a quantity of literature for distribution and for self education.

The man who desires to be informed is to be commended for independent thinking.

"Let us make this a "Happy New Year" by getting 10.000 members in Ohio", is the way M. A. Toohey of Toledo, greets 1920. His wish finds an echo in the minds of thousands of comrades. But it requires activity to produce these results. Get in action, comrade.

Dollars Needed FOR Baker's Defense!

Charles Baker, organizer for the Communist Labor Party, has been arrested, and is charged with violation of the Lever Act, by interfering with the operation of the coal mines in the state of Kansas.

Baker defended the miners in the recent coal strike. For this, he is now indicted and out on bonds approximating nearly $70,000. He will be tried in the Kansas courts in February.

Money is needed NOW for his defense. Baker has always stood by the workers. Now the workers must stand by him. Let your dollars work for freedom for Chas. Baker.

Send all remittances to

TWO PRISON POEMS.

By RALPH CHAPLIN

PRISON SHADOWS.

Like grey-winged phantoms out of sullen skies
They flood my cell and seem to fashion there
I know not what dim landscapes of despair;
All day I felt them lurking in my eyes.
And now they fall like crosses, sombre-wise,
Upon the shameful uniform I wear,
Upon my brow, my face, my hand, my hair;
And on my heart their shadow always lies.

O heart of mine, why throb with futile rage
And beat and beat against these hopeless bars?
For, though you break in life's last deadly swoon,
You cannot pierce beyond this iron cage.
To see the pulsing splendor of the stars
Or feel the blue-green magic of the moon!

OUR LIVING DEAD.

Mourn not the dead that in the cool earth lie,
Dust unto dust;
The calm, sweet earth that mothers all who die
As all men must.

But rather mourn the living souls who dwell,
Too strong to strive,
Within each steel-bound coffin of a cell — —
Buried alive!

AS BAD AS THE LUSITANIA.

PARIS.—A sin equal to that of the German admiralty in ordering that the Lusitania be torpedoed is the blockade of Russia, according to Armand Charpentier, writing in "Le Populaire." Says M. Charpentier:

"Mr. Wilson and all of the heads of the Entente governments declared that this war had for its purpose the liberation of all of the peoples from all imperialist and militarist servitudes, and that these peoples, once liberated, were free to choose their governments.

"The ministers of the Entente, betraying the unanimous sentiment of their peoples, have sinned equally with the German admiralty which ordered the torpedoing of the Lusitania. Sending women, children and sick people to death is a crime.

"These same ministers of the Entente are today committing a crime a hundred, a thousand times more abominable, in which, besides, reactionary Germany is participating. These ministers, thanks to the indifference of their parliaments, and to the inconceivable ignorance of the peoples, are busy condemning to a gradual death, by hunger, by cold, by disease, a population of a hundred and twenty millions of inhabitants, whose sole crime is that they took seriously the Wilsonian principles and the promises of the ministers, in guaranteeing them the government of their choice."

Local Tiffin comrades recognize the truth of the above statement, and have proceeded to organize two squads of "go-getters" whose purposes will be to compete for new members and Toiler subs. Indications are that there will be some lively skirmishes thereabouts.

Do you realize the value of a pamphlet with a "kick" in it to hand to Henry and his brother? Then order a package of Mr. Block and the Profiteers. Any worker who reads it will never again look at himself the same. The price is 10 for 60c or 10c for one. Let Mr. Block do your agitating.

Italy may be first to recognize Soviet Russia.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—If Russia wants he Soviet form of government she should be allowed to have it and the allies should recognize her present overnment Foreign Minister Scialoia f Italy said today.

The Italian statesman, here for iscussions with Premier Lloyd ierge, declared the two outstanding iplomatic problems of Europe were: The course to be pursued in Russia and the disposition of the Turkish mpire.

EDUCATION OBJECT OF CAPITALIST VENGEANC.

BUDAPEST.—A systematic reign of error against culture and education is being carried on by the counter-revolution in Hungary with the purpose of crushing all opposition to the resent regime.

Many priests have been hanged outright for alleged Communist views, and hundreds of teachers have lost their positions. In one locality, ording to a well-authorized statement, 40 school teachers were mobbed nd killed by White guards.

Boys and girls of 14 and 16 who are uspected of Socialist or Communist ympathies have been denied admittance to any school in the country. rofessors in universities and technical schools, some of them noted scholars, have been persecuted for suggesting the most moderate reforms in the resent regime.

Police are authorized by a special order to examine private libraries and onfiscate all books dealing with revolutionary as well as revolutionary social theories. On the counter-revolutionary "Index" are included Marx, Froudhon, Ferrer, Engels, Kautsky, andervelde, Bebel and Sorel, as well s Lenine and Trotsky.

Since the hunt for forbidden books s carried on by uneducated White Guards, every book with the word "social" in the title is confiscated. The great majority of people have prefered to burn their libraries rather than be subjected to the inquisition.

The municipal library of Budapest, noted for its comprehensive list of books on social problems, and a world center of culture and social research, has been demolished. More than 15,000 books, many of them irreplaceable, were burned.

WAR ON IGNORANCE.

We have declared WAR on IGNORANCE. Will you enlist in the ranks of the ENLIGHTENERS? We intend to establish in the State Office of the Communist Labor Party of Ohio a Book and Pamphlet Department second to none in the nation. We will handle only the best of the Revolutionary literature of the past and present. We will also publish new literature of our own. We have since Jan. 1st gotten one pamphlet off the press, another will be ready for sale in a few days. Others are contemplated.

The co-operation of all readers of The TOILER and of all Locals and literature agents is earnestly hoped for. The demand for new and good revolutionary literature is greater than can be supplied. We want YOU to help us supply this demand of the workers for ENLIGHTENMENT. Every worker can sell pamphlets every week to shopmates and other workers. Every Local must carry a full line of the best there is.

Every Class-conscious Worker must help Strike Down the Monster, Ignorance, that Enslaves the Workers.

WORKERS PERCENTAGE.

A public speaker recently pointed out that while the United States has only six per cent of the population of the world and only seven per cent of the land, it produces:

Sixty per cent of the world's supply of copper.

Forty per cent of the world's supply of lead.

Fifty per cent of the world's supply of zinc.

Sixty per cent of the world's supply of aluminum.

Sixty per cent of the world's supply of oil.

Seventy-five per cent of the world's supply of corn.

Sixty per cent of the world's supply of cotton.

Forty per cent of the world's supply of silver.

Fifty-two per cent of the world's supply of coal.

Forty per cent of the world's supply of iron and steel.

Twenty per cent of the world's supply of gold.

Eighty-five per cent of the world's supply of automobiles.

Twenty-five per cent of the world's supply of wheat, and refines 80 per cent of the copper and operates 40 per cent of the world's railroads.

While paying its wage workers less than 20 per cent of the wealth they create.—The New Majority.

Comrade P. R. Davis of Chesapeake O., remits for one copy Bullitt's Report and $1.50 as a donation. We have placed this amount in the press fund. Comrade Davis is also after subs for The Toiler. He pays a compliment to the Cartoon Dept.

REDS TO BE DRIVEN OUT OF A. F. of L.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—If James P. Holland, president of the New York State Federation of Labor, can help it, the next two months will see the weeding out of all radicals now within the Federation. This involves the job of getting rid of some 5 to 6,000 'reds' now identified with A. F. of L. movement within this State; but Holland insisted before the Annual State Industrial Congress, in session here, that it is essential for the prosperity of organized labor that they be eliminated.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There is to be no "boring from within" by radicals in the organization of Machinists, according to action of the principal officers and the field agents of the Machinists' Union. The heads of the union adopted a policy that no member shall retain membership in the union who is affiliated with the I. W. W., the One Big Union, or any other ultra-radical organization.

THE NEW INQUISITION

Concerning the recent repressive governmental raids against radicals a correspondent writes us: "I note by the press that the cossacks are busy again—that the cohorts of Caligula and the bailiffs of the grand Inquisition are making merry. Great God! To think such asinine idiocy could be perpetrated in this supposedly, enlightened age. I recall the astonishment expressed by one of the historians, that the great and almost God-like emperor—philosopher, Marcus Aurelious, could have tolerated for a moment the persecution of the Christians under his reign—knowing as he must have known, with his broad and deep understanding, that persecution is the most fruitful [illegible] that can be given ANY cause."

UNLIVED LIVES.

By THOMAS MUFSON

I saw her in the subway, sitting opposite to me in a fairly well filled car. She was reading a paper-covered book and was, apparently, utterly oblivious of her surroundings.

She attracted considerable attention because of the striking incongruity between her general appearance and the type of book she was reading.

She seemed to be a woman of about 40 years of age. She wore a heavy-looking, black plush sailor hat, a large, shabby black jacket with extraordinarily large buttons, the top one of which war missing, leaving her coat partly open; a dark skirt, which matched her coat in shabbiness, and shoes which once were black. In one hand she held her book, in which she was intensely absorbed. In the other hand, which rested on her lap, she tightly clutched a not very clean handkerchief.

The name of the book that she was reading, which glared out at us in large red letters, was "Tempted by Love."

The girl sitting next to her looked at the woman, then at the name of the book, and smiled. A man opposite glanced at the woman and the smiling girl, and both made evident efforts to keep from laughing outright. Everybody was smiling. Mirth pervaded the atmosphere.

She paid no heed to the pleasantly diverting commotion she was causing, this shabby looking woman of 40, engrossed in her novel, "Tempted by Love.". One could see on her face, rather long and pallid and masklike in its utter unresponsiveness to the surrounding agitation, that, mentally, she did not sit in a crowded subway car on her way home from a day's dull work. It was manifest that, for the time being, she was in another world, a world of youth, of leisure and of love. She was enjoying the shadows of emotions and passions which life, evidently, had not given her to enjoy in the substance. In the thrilling ages of "Tempted by Love" she was vicariously living her unlived life.

I worked alongside of him in a large printing establishment. We were press feeders. All day long we stood in front of our rattling presses. All day the black jaws of the devouring machines opend and shut, opened and shut, and as they yawned open our hand shot in with paper food, and as they closed the hand came out empty, and then went in again, and out again, feeding the iron beast all day long, while the belts whirred and the machines clattered and the hours dragged on their heavy way.

The incessant noise penetrated the brain and made it numb. Hands became black with the black saliva of the ever-hungry presses. Minds and bodies sagged with the monotony of identically similar mechanical motions, repeated over and over again. The voracious iron monsters seemed bent upon crunching between their metalic jaws the suft human hands which flitted in and out, ministering to their insatiable appetite.

He said hardly a word, my compaion who worked on the press next to mine. He attended to his work with a dull, dead steadiness, paying no heed to all that went on about him. Occassionally, however, I saw him cast an involuntary glance of hatred at our sloek wellfed foreman, the "driver," as the men called him, meaning the slave driver.

I finally struck up a talking acquaintance with my moody fellow pressman. Soon we were quite friendly, and I was enabled to get vivid glimpses into his inner life.

I got to know that he was an anarchist. He was, however, the type of anarchist who becomes such not through philosophy or through sympathy with human suffering, but through personal bitterness. For the whole time during which we worked together I do not recollect having seen hin laugh once. His whole personality seemed impregnated with gall and wormwood. He was filled with a malignant hatred for God (or, rather, the idea of God), for society, for all of life. He was widely and deeply read, with a keen intellect and a spiritual makeup that, I inferred, might have been once responsive to the best and highest in human existence. But the rancor which corroded his soul had coarsened a nature which had once been deeply sensitive. Heine seemed his favorite author, and he interspersed in his talk most biting quotations from that poet. On one occasion, in a communicative mood, he flashed his whole life before me in a few sentences.

"I have never lived," he said to me. "I have been denied everything my spirit ever craved. I never had youth. Can you realize what that means? I stepped from childhood into middle age. In between was a stretch of struggle with poverty, illness, loneliness and ever broken hopes. That period, youth—the period when life is to be most beautiful and most joyous—was an ugly nightmare to me. I awoke from my nightmare to find my youth, with all its possibilities, no longer before me—gone. Can you know what that means?

"When I think of what my life could have been, and what it was and is," he said, while a brooding light burned in his brown eyes.

There were times when the light in his eyes was not that of a sane man. I was convinced that he was not entirely sane.

"Look at my hair," he once said to me. I observed his massive head, thinly covered with weak looking, bristly, closely cropped hair.

"Can you believe," he asked, "that when I was a child golden curls used to hang down my shoulders? See what has become of me. Some day, when I look into the glass and think of those curls, I wil go mad."

She is a working girl. All the hours of the day she works busily in a shop. She has been doing that since her fourteenth year. She is not vigorous physically, so that the day's labor tires her out. It is the night that she is looking forward to—the night, when the life of her mind and spirit begins.

She has an irresponsible craving for education, for knowledge, for music, for literature, for art. Her soul's passion glows in her eyes. A deep melancholy of her harrowed spirit, the sad pessimism of her unattainable desires. Her Socialism is the Socialism of a sensitive soul which dreams of a better world, a world of freedom and of full-orbed life, and she spends devoted hours working for the cause. She flocks to radical schools. She takes numerous courses to be able more adequately to express the things that are knocking at her soul; to be able more fully to grasp the significance and sense the beauty of the great masterpieces of art. She eagerly attends classes in sociology, inphilosophy and in science, worshiping at the feet of admired intellect. She goes to the theater when a cherished play is to be seen. She is found in the topmost gallery of Carnegie Hall and the Metropolitan Opera House to have her spirit unfold, for a moment, in the fairy land of music and of dreams.

But those tastes of life's beauty, her yearning periods of the soul's expansion, are hurried, feverish and disturbed; precarious snatchings, stolen from the precious hours of sleep, for the night is short and the long day soon sounds its inescapable call of the factory, while the eyes are heavy for the sleep that has been denied them, and the body weary for the rest of which it has been deprived. However, for two whole weeks she casts from her soul all the burdens that oppress it and goes off for her "vacation". There she attempts to concentrate 12 months ful-orbed life in a fortnight. She succeeds only in casting upon the rest of the year a darker shadow of depression and restlessness and discontent. The years fly; with them youth and youth's strength and buoyant hope. As dreams recede and ambitions disintegrate, more vigorous natures grow embittered and cynical; her spirit withdraws more and more into its inner being and consumes itself.

The narrow, twisted and broken paths of unlived lives criss-cross and zig-zag across the face of this amazingly mismanaged world. Vast is the countless host of those who have manifestetly died before their time through the occassional casualties of war or the unremitting casualties of peace, by industrial disease or industrial accident. But aster still and as lamentable is the innumerable multitude of those whose death is not apparent to the physical senses, of those who died mentally and spiritually before they ever lived. Between these two armies of the quiet dead, restlessly grope they who ever feel the proddings and the stirrings of eager, craving life's forces, whose thirsting lips the tantalizing waters of life touch, only to recede, who have been permitted but to taste of the fruit of the tree of knowledge by which the eyes of their soul have been opened to the beauty of the diviner fruits hanging upon the tree of life, but which dangle far beyond the reach of their shackled limbs.

We live in a world of unlived lives. How many children of the working class, of the millions who reach manhood and womanhood, receive the nourishment, the care, the training, the education the recreation that nurse to maturity the latent powers which slumber in the heart and mind of every child? What undobted glimpses of precious, natural gifts in the children of the workers awaken trembling hop in the heart of the parent, to end only in forced negiect and ginal athrophy?

"But knowledge to their eyes her ample page,
Rich with the spoils of time, did ne'er unroll:
Chill Penury repressed their noble rage,
And froze the genial current of their soul."

How many men and women feel that they have lived the full physical, mental and spiritual life which they were capable of living? How many can say that they have received that complete and harmonious development, that ample and abundant nourishment by bread and books and schooling, by peace of mind and leisure, by the joys of social life and comradeship and love, by the inspiring beauties of nature and the passion-refining beauty of art which by all the laws of impartial nature and by the dictates of unperverted justice are the due inheritance of all?

The superman and the superwoman of our soaring imagination are but the man and the woman at our side—disinherited long before birth; the crippled culmination of the sins of a mismanaged world, the stunted product of generations of unlived lives. ....

by cunning. They deified Christ. They changed him from a saviour of labor to a God of Rome. Thus the masters entered the brotherhood and changed their membership from honest handicraft into an army of fanatics, campaigning for the supremacy of the Roman aristocrats.

"Christ or who ever it was that led the masses at the time of Caesar Augustus found that Rome claimed possession of the entire earth. Thus in saying workers of Rome you must love one another, he simply ante-dated Karl Marx, who said "Workers of the World Unite". But Rome, jealous of the power of her proletariat, said to the workers, "We too have seen the light. Come and let us worship your Lord together. We shall give you the temples and the priests of the gods of Rome, and raise your religion out the narrow confines of the brotherhoods and make it the imperial creed of the empire, wholly spiritual—unspotted of the world."

"The slaves fell for it. The masters entered the union. They said 'the Nazerine has conquered,' In reality they had conquered the Nazerine. They turned the productive laborer into a religious fanatic, and Civilization lay dead for a millenium.

"The arstocrat did not create the church, he is incapable of creating any-thing but hell. He stole it, as he has every-thing he calls his own. He stole it from the ancient freedmen by cunning and knavery, when he failed to get it by his favorite method of brutality and force. Cunning is another lupine characteristic.

"When ever I hear their damned bells ringing, the whole history of their perfidity flashes thru my brain an I feel as tho it is my duty to wipe them off the earth."

This little speech was made by Ed. Collins to his solitary auditor in his cell and for the benefit of Rudolph accross the way. When he had concluded, Jack remarked that he did not need to get exited over it, seeing that these ancient unions were not productive of true liberty but rather of a delusion.

"Yes that is so. They were given what they were taught was liberty. It made them happy. It gave them hope. They had a goal to steer to that made life worth living. It built up civilization and laid the foundation for later development. What if it was a delussion inculcated in their brain for the benefits of their Masters? The Masters destroyed them, but have warned us with their example. The class conscious worker will not trust the words of the masters again."

"Are we free now?" Jack asked.

"Looks like it. Now, does'nt it." Collins replied as he kicked against the cell door.

"My Country, tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing.

Droned Rudolph from the opposite cell.

"I will tell you, that the brains of mankind are still under the same delusions that blinded the people of ancient times. People imagine they are free because they are told so on the fourth of July. But we have an advantage that our ancestors lacked. We have the printing press. We can reach the slaves with a message that will put things before them in a new light. We will teach them what we conceive true liberty to be, and when they once see it, then it is good by Masters."

"According to your idea all that is needed to teach the workers what you want them to know is a suffeciently large printing plant. It resolves itself to a battle of printing presses. If that is so, then what becomes of your theory of machine developments and the passing of worlds markets as factors in the downfall of capitalism, and the liberation of the proletariat," Jack asked smilingly.

"Remember," Collins cautioned, "the down fall of capitalism does not necessarily mean the liberation of the proletarist, it may mean the establishment of an industrial oligarchy that will ruthlessly tear away the last shreds of our delusion of liberty and subject us to a naked and horrible slavery. Remember that with modern facilities of transportaiton and communication; with modern improved methods of spying a tyranny may be established more hideous in its aspect and more damable in its consequences than any the world has yet known. Capitalism will indeed fall of its own rotteness. Labor must rise by virtue of its intelligence."

HOW TO MAKE A SUCCESS IN LIFE.

Dear Editor:

Until a couple of years ago I was a lasy girl and I used to get tired in the canning plant after working ten or eleven hours a day. Then one night I saw your magazine with all those success stories. The one about the stenographer who studied manicuring at night and gets to be the wife of a railraod president opened my eyes and showed me that I could advance myself too.

I got a night position as a rubber in a Turkish bath, and on Sundays. after I delivered papers for the news company I stood outside a cigar store the rest of the day and asked the gentlemen for their coupons when they came out. The first six months I saved enough to buy cod liver oil and iron tonic to last for the winter and collected enough cupons to get examined by a big specialist, and in this second year I have worked so hard and done so well (I was usher in a movie on holidays too) that I can now pay may carfare to the consumption sanitarium.

I am so happy and I hope I will win your prize, because they tell me that I will have to pay the railroad in advance to send my body back home.

Yours for Success,

JENNIE NULL.

The Trend of the Race.

How strange it is that those who strive,
And try to join one's friendly host;
Will wear smiles their Maker gave,
and Desert us when we need them most.
This friendship in this world of ours,
So seldom stands Time's truest test;
But like the beauty of the flow'rs,
A thing of moments, at its best.

The White Race in it's false pride
state,
Beset with Greed and Greed's Desire;
Still wears the false mask in an age,
And casts plain Justice in the mire.
The feet of millions trod about
A world beset in Greed and Sin;
And under it's false mask we find,
Humanity's veneer is thin.

There's many a flow'r that's with'ring
n the slums by poverty fed;
There many weary feet press on,
Without a ray of hope ahead,
A world in Greed hears not the voice
Of those who dwell in hovels poor;
And those on whom fair fortune
smiles,
Know not the heartaches they endure.

This old world for so many years,
Has been steadily slipping back.
Like individuals, sometimes,
It too, gets on the downward track.
When Ideals are but passing thoughts,
And Greed becomes the Races' curse;
How can this old world better grow
When man's desires are growing

ers now lie in jail charged with murer and about to be tried.

"Fifth—Those who held sway in Centralia showed their love for justice y seizing the I. W. W. attorney and hrowing him into jail also, in order that the I. W. W. might have no deender and that these crimes might be covered up. And when Attorney Ralph Pierce was sent from Seattle to defend our boys he was escorted back to the train and driven out of Cenralia .

"Sixth—Working hand-in-hand with with the anti-union elements throughut the state, hoodlums have made this an occasion to spread similar terrorism all over Washington. The result is that liberty lies broken and ravished throughout the lumber country, and democracy has been replaced by the rule of the mob and the gunman.

Lumber Trust Behind Terror.

"These few facts we do know. And we know that behind them lie a multitude more—a red scroll of horror which is filled with the names of our fellow-workers. But a lying, prostituted press has concealed it all and has to kindle mob passion all over the country by wild, screaming lies.

"The I. W. W. knows the hand that is striking us in the Northwest. We know who is the power that can close to us the pages of the nation's press. We know the secret evil force which is risking even civil war in order to destroy the I. W. W. in the Northwest. It is our old enemy, the lumber trust.

"We make this charge. And we put t up to you, the American Congres. Yours is the duty to uphold the Contitution of this country. Out in Washington it has been trampled uner murderous feet. Will you join with he newspapers and whitewash them?

mpartial Inquiry Is Demanded.

"We of the I. W. W. demand that he government make a sweeping, imartial inquiry into the Centralia case. We demand that it send investigators there to sift out the responsibility.

"You must act. he government has been put into contempt in Centralia Already one innocent man there has died a ghastly death. And 11 others are to be tried for their lives. The hoodlums are attempting to provoke the union men into revolt. Will the overnment stand idle?

Our Own Hands Are Clean."

"Our own hands are clean. It is not we who have censored the truth. In 4 years of existence the I. W. W. has ever needed to conceal anything. We don't need to now. We know our members and we know that they are innocent.

"Innocent men may be railroaded. Clean, stranghtforward American men and women may be the victims of foul mobs. Under the darkness of censorship any crime may be perpetrated. We demand that you lift the veil. Let the government investigate; then the truth will be known—and we will know who is guilty!"

home and against new experiments in government abroad, the American people ought to be informed of it immediately."

Welcomed Chance to Testify.

Nuorteva's statement follows:

"We have been informed that Mr. Gregory Weinstein, of the Russian Soviet Government Bureau, has been arrested and held for deportation, and that similar action is threatened against Mr. Martens and other members of his staff as a last desperate effort to prevent the truth about the Russian situation, and about the real foreign policies of the Russian Soviet government, from being placed before the people of America.

"We welcomed the opportunity the propsed hearings before the Senate Committee would give us to state these facts and to refute the hysterical lies which are being spread about our government and about the Russian Soviet Bureau in New York.

"Soviet Russia, victorious over her internal enemies, has no desire to interfere with the internal affairs of other countries. It was, and it still is, our hope that now that the futility of intervention in and of the blockade of Russia has been proven with such diastrous results to our opponents we would be allowed to live in peace with other countries.

liberate attempt to prevent the impending peace and un-

"I regard the mean persecution of our bureau and the frantic man-hunt of all friends of Soviet Russia as a derstanding with our country and to prevent a fair hearing before the Senate committee.

"I feel confident that the large masses of the American people, in spite of the manufactured prejudice against us, will now, at least understand that there are forces at work who are afraid of getting the truth about Russia before the American people.

"The Senate hearing would also have have opened wide—if we were permitted to testify—the Augean stables of the work of Russian reactionaries in this country, who have squandered on abonimable plots and intrigues tens of millions of money lent by the American government to Russia.

"It seems that there are many people beside Mr. Boris Bakhmetiev and his crowd who would not like to have these matters made public.

D. of J. men as Authors.

"There also appears to be another reason for the desire to deport us. We have conclusive evidence that agents of the Department of Justice have actively participated in the organization of the Communist party of America and that those very planks in the program of the party, which now form the basis of the persecution of thousands of people, have been drafted and inserted into that program by such government agents.

"We also are prepared to show before the Sente Committee that some other radical activities, the instigation of which has been charged to Russians, in reality were managed and inspired by secret service agents.

"We can prove that the chief figures in certain celebrated bomb-plots were agents of a similar nature.

"In other words, some officials have been establishing that sinister institution which is known in Europe as the system of "agent provocateur."

"We are ready to bring out all facts concerning this charge, the gravity of which I fully recognize. It is clear that some officials implicated in this matter are only too anxious to prevent us from disclosing these facts.

Not Anxious to Stay in U. S.

"Neither Mr. Martens nor I are opposed to going back to Russia. In fact, it has been our fondest wish to go there and to participate in the splendid work of Russia's social reorganization. We have been staying here as a matter of duty, in the hope it would be possible to dispel existing prejudice and to establish friendly relations between the United States and Soviet Russia.

"I am sure that such relations will soon be established in spite of all the frantic efforts of reactionaries to discredit the people of Russia. The people of America in general are too sensible to support such policies as have been pursued by some officials here in respect to Soviet Russia.

"I shall take the liberty of reminding our persecutors of the words of one of their own national heroes: 'You can fool some of the people all of the time; you can fool all of the peonle all of the time, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time."

MORE DETAILS OF LYNCHING COME TO LIGHT

Everetts, Returned Service Man, Leaving I. W. W. Hall When Attacked by Centralia Mob.

CENTRALIA, WASH.—Further facts coming to light regarding the lynching by a mob of Wesley Everetts on Nov. 11th, near this city, reveal that he was one of the occupants defending the I. W. W. Hall when the mob attacked it in front.

He succeeded in leaving the besieged building and had reached the next street when he was sighted and pursued. Perceiving that he was the object of violent intentions he turned and defended himself as best he could.

He was overpowered near the riverbank and kicked and stamped upon until all but senseless when he was dragged to the city jail where a rope was placed around his neck. At this juncture, Chief of Police Hughes is said to have drawn his gun in a bluffing manner saying: "The first man who drows that rope over the cross-arms of the telephone pole will be shot." The rope was thrown over but the Chief did not shoot.

Craftier council prevailing, the lynching was deferred until after dark, at the suggestion, some say of the Chief, the prosecutor or other official, the time then being about three o'clock in the afternoon.

Everetts, in a greatly weakened condition, was thrown back into the jail which became the center of a crowd of Legionaries and business men who swarmed into it and with no one interfering with their coming or going. It is certain that Everetts was in the midst of those who thus had possesion of the jail and was badgered unmercifully in the evident effort to extort from him some confession which they desired.

At about 7 o'clock in the evening, pitch dark at this season, he was taken out of the jail, and with every light in the town extinguished was dragged in tow of an automobile to the river bridge. Here he was tortured for a time, but with his life spark dwindling lower and lower, he is said to have defied them to the last and repused their proferred confession. Whether hanged immediately before or following his death is not certainly known as those who tell of it were not close enough in to say.

A fifteen foot rope was tied about his neck and to a beam of the bridge from which he was hurled.

The body, totally divested of clothing save his shoes, from having been dragged by the automobile, was left dangling to the bridge all night, and throughout the night there came and went a succession of automobiles bearing mixed parties of men and women to view the grewsome spectacle. Cars were parked in a semicircle with their head-lights converging upon the dangling body of Wesley Everetts, another martyr of the social revolution!

Girls and young women were taken out on smutty adventures to view the naked body of the "dead wobbly."

In the morning the body was cut down, again dragged through the streets to the city jail and there dumped upon the floor in the corridor in plain sight of nine other prisoners, occupants of the Hall, who had been over powered while defending it. The corpse of Everetts with its torn and nangled flesh and the horribly mutilated neck around which the noose still clung was placed there in the view of his comrades to break down their spirit. The other prisoners were then taken out singly, as if to be lynched, and told they would get the same as Everetts, if they did not make a certain confession dictated by the mobsters in possession of the jail.

The program was followed for two whole days ,the remaining prisoners being in each instance given to understand that those removed had actually met the fate of Everetts, untl only one remained.

The exquisite mental torture may better be imagined as worthy of Torquemada.

In the end four men held on suspicion of being I. W. W. were removed and compelled to dig a grave and bury what remained of Wesley Everetts, at spot that will be for ever hallowed by a memory among workers of his supreme sacrifice for a better world.

BABSON SAYS DEPRESSION IS COMING.

Business Seer Tells Industrial Chiefs Everybody Will Slack Work Suddenly.

Captains and lieutenants of industry held their own forum Jan. 16, at Cleveland.The speaker was Roger Babson, founder and president of the Babson Statistical Organization, Wellesley Hills, Mass., who made three addresses before business men.

Mr. Babson addressed the Cleveland Advertising Club in its club rooms in Hotel Statler at noon on "America's Undeveloped Resources."

In the afternoon he spoke before 300 clients of his organization of business advisers on "The Labor Situation." For an hour Mr. Babson's clients asked questions on business and labor conditions. Some of the largest industries in Cleveland were among those seeking advice.

Mr. Babson is a business seer. In 1913 a man in his organization predicted a general war would presently start in Austria.

Mr. Babson does his forecasting from statistics, plotted in curves which rise and fall like the silhoutte of lunar mountains. He spreads out his pictures of what has happened for him to project the curves of the present into the future.

"The clock is likely to strike 12 in the fall of this year or the spring of next," he said. "The next period of depression won't be from overproduction or banking conditions, as in the the past, but the thief will come in another way.

"The present period of prosperity will be brought to a close through psychological or spiritual reasons. More and more people are slacking on the oars of production. Some morning we shall find everybody slacking at once."

THE ANTICS OF JUDICIAL MONKEYS.

Perhaps the worst instance of ludicrous comedy in the annals of mock Justice so noticable of late in the courts of the state of Washington, is the temporary injuction issued by Judge (? ? ?)Webster of Spokane. This injunctions is issued against 65 persons of Spokane County restraining them from participation in the I. W. W. or any part thereof.

An njuction against people prohibiting them from belonging to an organization of their choice.

Thnk of it. Enough to bring a cackle from the lips of every dead tyrant. A huge satire on the Constitution and an insult to the intelligence of humanity. Here is proof positive that Justice is as dead as a smocked mackerel in the court over which this Webster presides. .It is enough to jar one loose from his reason when he contemplates to what ends these characters will go. For if a Judge can restrain 65 from doing certain things why can't he restrain 65.000 od 65.000.000? He can and will, because this judicial imbecile is not restraining individuals so much as he is suppressing ideas, and the growth of the idea will determine with him how many people to enjoin.

However, as much cause as there is for gloomy pessimism in the contemplation of such a step by a so-called judge, yet we know that Labor will go on, amused not a little later on at the recollections of the ludicrous antics of the judicial monkeys of today.

A LETTER FROM ELLIS ISLAND

TO THE COMRADES OUTSIDE THE "ISLAND OF TEARS":—

Here upon the so called "Island of Tears" are gathered hundreds of soldiers of the proletarian army from all parts of the United States and of many nationalities. What fate we are going to meet we do not yet know. But we do know that we have earned the most bitter enmity of the representatives of the existing order and that all means will be used to try to make us harmless to capitalism.

We are ready for anything and everything. We are ready to carry on the struggle against international capitalism to the finish. According to the United States constitution, every person has the right of consultation with his attorney before testifying. This right has been denied us and so we are answering the persecutors with a silence strike. In other words, we refuse to talk or give answer to any question. With this we are trying to demonstrate to the workers that there is no democracy in the United States for the working class. A joyous spirit prevails among us. The icey waves, splashing around our prison walls do not weaken our courage, nor do the ruling class agents. Our courage in fact has been strengthened by this new experiance.

Twice every day we walk in the open air. Ranks are formed. Comrades experienced in the art of soldiering istruct us how to march and manouver. Undoubtedly the government agents consider us a veritable army, real soldiers of the revolution.

The time "inside" is taken up by lectures and discussions. As often as possible concerts are arranged for the evenings, for we have amongst our number good talent, some professional actors and musicians. International and other revolutionatig songs are sung.

We call upon the comrades on the outside to do all in their power to solidify their ranks. Do not worry about us. Do not waste much means in our defense. The great majority of us have admitted we are Communists. Our plans are decided. We are refusing individual defense. We demand to be tried as a mass and is Communists who do not deny their principles.

Your duty on the outside is tremenduously large. Yet you must face the enemy and battle until victory is yours.

And so we demand that you must do everything to unite the Communist Parties immediately. We, here on Ellis Island, regardless of which of the two Parties we belong to, are only Communists. If there are leaders amongst you who stand against unity, push them aside. He who still propagates this unnecessary spite is not worthy to be named Communist. Do not spare your energies and determination in the propagation of our principles. May the workers soon establih their own rule in the United States. May the Revolution soon be a consumated fact. Down with capitalism. Long live the workers international!

Signed

KERENSKY REVIEW RUSSIAN AFFAIRS.

LONDON ——— France, Engand and the United States, shocked by the gigantic "steamroller successes" of the Soviet armies throughout Russia are "merely reaping inevitable results of their pernicious policy of aiding monarchists and other enemies of Democracy since the armistice."

Alexander Kerenski, former premier ingsof Russia and at one time the idol of his home country and the hope of the allied powers, gave vent to his feelings in the above fashion. And he added that the Bolsheviki would continue "to interefe in Russia's internal affairs."

Kerenski is now residing in semiseclusion in the heart of the picturesque Kentah Hills, near Tunbridge. He is rapidly regaining the health he dissipated during his brief and hectic hour of world fame. Virile, mentally alert and still retaining much of the magnetic personality responsible for his meteoric career, Kerenski lives in anticipation of the near future, when he hopes to resume his crusade for his country's regeneration. He realizes his mistakes of the past, dream-fabric that opportunity once more will knock at his door.

Kerenski Realizes Mistakes.

He realizes his mistakes of the ast, is chafing at delays and obstacles of the present and looking optimistically toward the future. He is surrounded by a group of the intellectuals and who are now middle of the readers, ot radical enough for the Soviets, not onservative enough for the monarchists and despising both.

"Russia," said Kerenski, "is enduring Bolshevism and the ultra-radical members of the Left in order to escape the equally dark monarchistic representatives of the Right. I predicted 18 months ago that this would be the nevitable aftermath of the scheming intriguing European governments interfering in Russia's internal affairs.

"The declarations of Lloyd George and Premier Clemenceau that they would not aid the monarchists was commendable," said Kerenski, "but so far they are merely empty words."

"Statesmen well versed in politics," he added, "believe speech was given man the better to conceal his intentions when preferring no publicity on the work he does in the dark."

Bitter Against French and British.

He declared that Russian Democrats are the most bitter against the French and British. He expressed his disappointment in America, which, he said, "alone would be able to frustrate the Japanese and Allied design."

Boris Bakhmetieff, who now occupies the Russian Embassy at Washington and apparently accepted as the Russian spokesman there, Kerenski declared to be no representative of Russia but merely one who is now accepting orders from Kolchak, "the same as he would from any other who may follow."

Kerenski said he was not surprised t the anti-Ally demonstrations in Vladivostok and other Siberian cities.

"I am most concerned about Secreary Lansng's purported acquiescence to give Japan a free hand in Siberia," he said. "I am hoping that is untrue, because it is not right and would be most dangerous for the future peace of Russia, China, and the United States.

"Acquisition of the coal and iron deposits in Siberia would make the Nipponese economcally independent and enable them to carry on an imperialistic program which would make a potential enemy of democracy and an ever-growing menace to civilization."

THE SPIRIT OF MID-WESTERN LABOR

— By SCOTT NEARING.

"Patchwork" is the word that best describes the labor situation in the middle west. From the highly organized miners of Illinois to the anarchic conditions of the Mesaba range; from union towns like Toledo and Cleveland to cities such as Akron, Rockford and Gary, in which the unions claim less than 10 per cent of the workers, there are all degrees of labor strength and of labor opinion. The mid-western labor movement is far from homogeneous. Its feelings have not been formulated. It reflects the chaos of a vast territory, divergent nationalities, conflicting industrial policies, and a movement that has not yet come to itself.

No man and no organization in the middle west is in a position to speak the sentiment of labor, because no crystalization of labor sentiment has taken place. The workers themselves are groping. They do not know where they are or what they want.

Recent events like the steel strike, the coal strike and the convention of the Labor party are straws that suggest the drift of labor opinion. All three events raised novel issues. The steel strike representd an effort, by an organizing genius, to unite on a national scale 20-odd old line American Federation of Labor organizations in a common cause against the ommon enemy—the steel corporation. The coal strike placed the most powerful international union of the United States in direct conflict with the federal government over the right to strike. The Labor party convention—directed by the Chicago Federation of Labor—was held in the teeth of the Gompers' opposition. These three events, marking the advance of the labor movement into unexpored territory, were reasonably fair tests of abor's attitude.

The most pronounced feature of these events is the passing of the old leaders, those who have forgotten how to follow rank and file opinion. To use Lloyd George's phrase: "Wherever these leaders turn, they find themselves in the fog." Evidence of their inability to grapple with the situation crops up again and again. Durng the tense hours when the officials of the Mine Workers were debating whether they should obey the injunction, Lewis, flustered and upset, exclaimed: "We haven't a chance! Public sentiment is. 100 per cent against us. Even organized lobar isn't for us. We are standing alone!"

A similar point of view was stated by one of the leaders of the steel strike who was commenting on labor's prospect. His face relaxed; his eyes grew weary, almost dim: "They have us on the run," he said bitterly, "and I don't see when we are going to be able to stop running." Neither guess was anywhere near the truth. There was ample public sentiment and a well nigh universal labor sentiment behind both strikes.

The labor group to which the steel strike leader referred was not on the run, quite the contrary, the men were fighting with their backs to the wall. Neither leader understood. Both felt the isolation that comes with passing power. Both had developed a complex of inferiority that, in a leader, presages a speedy downfall.

The uncertainty in the minds of the leaders was even more pronounced at the Labor party convention. Men upon whom the promoters of the convention were depending to strike a keynote, seemed stunned and dazed. For the most part, their speeches consisted of denunciation of the type that was heard in labor conventions during the late nineties. They protested and complained, crying out with the anguish of children who have been punished for something they have not done. At intervals they stmbled on some thought that met with an unexpected response from the delegates, as when Chairman Hayes, in the course of his remarks said: "We want America for the Americans (scattering applause). We want Russia for the Russians. (Mad enthusiasm. Hats thrown into the air. Delegates on their feet, wildly cheering.) We want Mexico for the Mexicans. (Another outburst.)" The speaker was evidently as much surprised as though he had unearthed an explosive shell in his backyard. There were few Russians in the room, and no Mexicans. The speaker had no reason to suppose that he was appealing to any special interest when he made the chance remark which proved to be the event of his speech.

Quite different was the feeling of the rank and file at the convention. Among the delegates there were no international union officials. There were but few "labor politicians." Most of the men were direct from the pit and the bench. The convention looked like a district gathering of the United Mine Workers. Few of the delegates had ever attended a convention before. They were there for business, and they took the convention as one of the serious events of their lives, reflecting the same grim determination that was shown by the miners after Judge Anderson had ordered them back into the mines. They came to the sessions regularly and conscientiously; they took an active art in the discussions; they followed the debate carefully; it was as easy to get a thunderous "no" on a vote as it was to have an uproarious "yes". The delegates meant business and they discussed and voted with a vim.

The convention was typical of the spirit that is growing among the workers in the middle west. Many of the delegates came to this December meeting with sweaters instead of overcoats. Some wore the hats in which they were accustomed to work. They left their jobs and reduced the size of their pay envelopes in order to speak for their shopmates. There was scarcely a hand in the convention ball that had not a hard, rough palm.

The mid-western cities—particularly the larger ones—are filled with cross currents of agitation and propaganda. Those foreigners who speak broken English are cowed and very bitter. Few of them will come out to meetings or take any part in public activities. They fear raids and arrests, but they do not hesitate to express themselves in private. Among the American born, there is a restless, impatient spirit—a lack of interest in work; a desire to go somewhere and forget. Movies are crowded. Theaters are filled. Anything that promises a change is followed with eager haste, and then dropped as soon as it fails to meet the demand of an insatiable appetite for "something doing.

At Gary, where a little knot of the faithful have stood out for weeks against the combined pressure of the civil and military authorities and the economc power of the steel corporation, there is no longer any hope of winning the strike, but there is a furtive earnestness, a spirit of solidarity and a promse of results "the next time."

The rank and file of the miners were not worried by the injunction. They are as accustomed to injunctions as they are to strikes. They did not return to work when they were ordered back at the behest of the court. They did not go back, in many cases, even when the 14 per cent settlement was made. Many of them feel that they have been victimized by the authorities; they are convinced that they have been "sold out" by their own leaders. They are in no frame of mind for either compromise or arbitration.

The rank and file of the workers in the middle west are not radicals. Far from it! They are not joining the I. W. W., the Socialist movement, or even the Labor party in great numbers. They are determined to stand by the institutions of the United States—at least for the present, but they are not "100 per cent Americans." They are puzzled and a little frightened; they are not sure of the next step, but of two things they seem convinced—first ,that the economic and social rigors of the present society have become well-nigh intolerable; and, second, that the men who are at present vested with the title of "labor leaders" are not leading labor. Thus the members of the rank and file are left to shift for themselves. That they are learning the lesson rapidly is indicated by the bitter struggles between the conservative and radical factions in local labor groups throughout the middle west.

The middle west contains the germs of working class action—drastic and even revolutionery in character. Glenn

THE LABOR STRUGGLE HERE AND EVERYWHERE

(By the Federated Press.)

Working Class Must Forge New Weapons

GLASGOW, Scotland.—Jerome K. Jerome, noted British author and publicist, now special contributor to the Liberal organ "Common Sense" of London, in a recent address to the Socialists of Glasgow expressed the deliberate opinion that parliament is played out, and that "parliament was never meant to serve the common people." Said Mr. Jerome in part:

"Members of parliament do not represent the people but a party, and the people have no control over them. Mr. Lloyd George can do what he likes, and will hand out jobs as baits to labor leaders whenever he wants to appeal to the country. Recent bye-elections showed that the people were crazy to get rid of the present government yet it smiled at these signs and held on.

"It might be that by an accident labor might attain a parliamentary majority; the press might, as a trick, permit of a labor government as an awful example. But what would happen then? It would go down in a week of reaction, or what is worse, it would give way to middleclass ideals.

"Let labor look at France, with its plutocracy, and let them remember that Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. Chambelain went into parliament as people's men.

"What has killed kings, however, will also kill parliaments when they prove unfaithful to their trust.

"Parliament was never meant to serve the common people, and a labor government would simply find itself hedged around by the monied interests imposed by the forces of capitalism. Parliamentary government was fashioned by the commercial classes to secure themselves against feudalism. It was not designed to enable the working classes to emancipate themselves. The working classes will have to forge their own instruments of government."

Roumanians Boycotted Elections.

BUCHAREST.—Seventy per cent of the people of Roumania boycotted the government during the legislative elections by refusing to vote. The Socialist party, the Unionist party, the League of People and all the subject nationalities, numbering about 420,000 citizens, withdrew their candidates and their ballots in protest against the absolutist government.

The government aided in suppressing the labor vote by excluding 400,000 men, most of them union members, because they were "still considered mobilized," and in neglecting to register 300,000 others.

In spite of the fact that only 30 per cent. of the people voted, the Liberals, who were the real masters of the government, suffered a humiliating set-back and elected only 100 members. Seven Socialists were elected, in spite of the fact that the party members had all refused to vote.

RUSSIA TO SOVIET CONGRESS

MOSCOW.—The following notification has been issued from the Moscow wireless station:

The All-Russian Central Executive Committee has decided to grant admission to the Seventh Congress of the Soviets of Russia in an advisory capacity to representatives of all those parties who have decreed the mobilization of their members for the defence of the Soviet Republic.

These parties are: The Russian Communist party, Ukranian Bolshevik Communist party, Menshevik Social Democratic party, Revolutianry Communist party, Internationalist Social Democratic party, The "Bund," Ukranian Borotbisti party, Ukranian Social Revolutionary party of the Left, the dissident fraction of the Social Revolutionary party, "Poale Sion" party, and the League of Maximalist Social Revolutionaries.

Each of the above named organizations will be allowed to send two or three representatives to the Congress.

MILLIONAIRE LIST GROWS 2,000 A YEAR

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Twety thousand persons in the United States are now rated as millionaires, income tax reports show.

The millionaire class includes all persons whose incomes for the calendar year are at least $50,000, or five per cent. of $1,000,000. This, of course includes some high salaried executives whose private fortunes do not total $1,000,000.

The millionaire class, as computed, however, also includes many persons whose incomes are well above $1,000,000 a year. Thus, for the last full year for which reports are available, 67 persons paid taxes on incomes ranging from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000 a year. The average tax paid by these persons for the year was $249,948.

In the calendar year of 1913 approximately 7,500; in 1917 there were 19,103. During the four war years more than 12,000 new millionaires were created.

SIGN OF THE TIMES

A laborer in Seattle aged 40 offered to sell his Interstitial Glands for $20.000, and then expected to pick up a poor set for $5.000, and thereby be $15.000 to the good. This must have been his last resort after having failed every other way to make money honestly.

WORKERS NOTICE.

It has come to the attention of the Christian Science Monitor (Boston) through the London Daily Herald, that the monkeys that are used on the Island of Sumatra to pick the coconuts out of reach of the human being in the tops of the trees, that they consistently refuse to work overtime. They come down promptly at 4 o'clock every afternoon says the Moniter and no threats, promises of bonus or entreaties will induce them to pick one single nut more. This surely should be copied by many American workers, because they are not the recipients of Surplus value, the monkey knows it, why dont we know it? Monkey-sense will take its place alongside of Horse-sense.

MEXICO CITY, D. F.—Another appeal has been issued by the Communist party of Mexico to American comrades, calling for a general strike in case of war between the two countries.

The apeal says:

"The scattered bandit tribes do not cause one-millionth part of the suffering that another war would cause.

"It has been proved that most of these bandits are either supported by foreign financial interests who want "banditry" as an excuse for intervention in Mexico, or else buy their guns from other foreign interests that are willing to coin profits out of the atrocities of thugs and thieves.

"The Mexican proletariat has no problems that the Mexican proletariat cannot solve. Alone and unaided, it overthrew the modern Nero, Porfirio Diaz, and wrote a liberal constitution. Alone and unmolested by alien armies, it can rise above the impediments left by 300 years of bondage."

LONDON.—A movement has been launched for an ex-soldiers' Internationale—an organization in which the ex-soldiers of all the belligerent countries "shall unite to bury national animosities, and to proclaim the reconciliation of the peoples in an imposing manifestation denouncing war." The initiative for the movement comes from France, belying the common belief that every French soldier entertains vindictive hatred for the Germans.

After the war, a few wounded French soldiers started the Republican Association of Ex-Soldiers. It is now one of the strongest bases of internationalism in France, and although its membership is only 100,000, its influence has been enormous.

Upon the invitation of this organization issued by Raymond Lefebre, its vice-president, British, Italian and other ex-solders' national organizatons are joining into a great body. An international conference will be called as soon as organization is complete.

MOSCOW.—Only one case of cholera has been reported in Russia. In Petrograd since June 15 as the result of a vigorous campaign against the scourge made by the commissar of public health, vaccination has been made obligatory in the red army.

MOSCOW.—Upon the suggestion of the workers, the Moscow soviet has constructed a model town for workers in the outskirts of the city. A considerable number of four-family apartments have been built, each with a vegetable garden.

WE WILL DEDICATE OUR WORK

To the memory of those were slain at Everett, at Wheatland and Butte; at Calumet and Cabin Creek and Centralia.

To the memory of comrades, wives and children who fell at Ludlow.

To the comrades who are buried in federal prisons, because they were found to be unpurchasable by the money power.

To their wives, mothers and children, who are bravely bearing their burden of sorrow.

Hope on—fight on: calumny, prisons and death have been met, and must still be met. But we are ever drawing nearer the Justice and Liberty that is on goal.

GALILEO AND DEBS.

Galileo was one of the great geniuses of all time. He devoted his life to a search for truth and the spreading of new light among his fellow men. He died a martyr to his convictions, broken in health and spirit under the iron heel of tyranny. The ruling class of that day made him a victim of the inquisition, because he said the earth moved around the sun! It was only a few hundred years ago.

Nothng exemplifies the all-round genius of Galileo better than his invention of the telescope. Word reached him in Italy that a Dutch spectacle—maker had invented an instrument that would make objects look larger and nearer than they really were. Without any further information Galileo thought the matter over and decided that such an instrument could be made by a series of glass lenses. With his own hands he set to work and produced a telescope that would magnify double. He kept on perfecting his invention till he made instruments that would magnify 32 or more times.

With these telescopes Galileo added to our knowledge of the stars more practical discoveries than perhaps any other man who ever lived. He saw that Venus and other planets were not round like the fixed stars, but changed their appearance from crescent to full like the moon at different times. This and other discoveries of his was convincing proof that the planets revolved round the sun.

Now in those days the church wielded temporal as well as spiritual power. It controlled the government as well as religion. And the church had always taught that the earth was the center of the Universe. So when Galileo made propaganda of his scientific discoveries and in books and lectures tried to tell the people that the earth moved, he was arrested for teaching ideas that differend from those of the ruling class, and finally was made a prisoner of the inquisition. Like Debs he was an old man when thrown into prison, broken in health. Unlike Debs, however, Galileo's sentence broke his spirit and he died a wretched old man. The ruling class did everything to discredit and vilify him. He was a devout Catholé, but the church refused him burial in consecrated ground. Al this because he said the earth moves round the sun.

There is much evidence to show that the ruling class understood the truth of Galileo's discoveries and preachments. But they were afraid to have the people told the truth. Just as the educated ruling class today study Socialism and understand its truths, but try to crush it because it would turn the people against their rule and special privileges. There is ample evidence in the speeches and writings of our last three presdents, Wilson, Taft and Roosevelt, that it is not thru ignorance that they have opposed Socialism. It was because the church knew that Galileo had convincing proof of his propaganda and would win the people to his side that they imprisoned him. The danger of astronomical discoveries lay chiefly, indeed, in their truth. Just as today the "danger" of Socalism, the "menace" of Bolshevism, lie in their economic thruths. The rulers well understand this, but because the truth would endanger their class rule, they try to keep it from the people by imprissoning and vilifying those who try to enlighten the masses. The church has long since paid the penalty of making Galileo a martyr to his convictions. In trying to keep scientific truths from the people, by persecuting Galileo and hundreds of others ,the church only discredited itself, and has fallen from its once high estate when it ruled supreme over the larger part of Europe. Will our martyrs of today be similarly vindicated? Will Debs, like Galileo, come into hs own and go down in history as a great preacher of new truth and enlightenment? Will posterity laugh at Wilson and Taft and Roosevelt for persecuting and vilifying Socialists today, just as we laugh at the potentates of three centuries ago for persecuting and vilifying Galileo for teaching astronomical truths that endangered the power of the ruling class, just as Debs stands for economic truths that are "dangerous" to capitalism. In the end the people insisted on their right to know about scientific truths and everyone today understands that the earth revolves round the sun." Will the people today insist upon their right to hear what Debs and Socialism has to teach them? It is certainly a supreme insult for any government to tell the working class what they shall not read,—whom they shall not hear speak. No free people should stand for such indignity.

THE FUNERAL OF GENERAL NIKOLAYEV.

The Red General, Formerly a Tsarist General, Was Hanged by the White Guards in Yamburg.

General Nikolayev, who, during the capture of Yamburg, was hanged by the Whites, was solemnly buried on October 5th by Red Petrograd. He, formerly a general in the army of the Tsar, was, according to the papers in Petrograd, one of the first to enter the command of the Red Army, and took over the command of the Xth division. The hangmen of the White army could not forgive him for that and he fell as the first victim of the White Terror in Yamburg. The Soviet of Petrograd sent two representatives to call for the body in Yamburg. Eye witnesses report that after Yamburg was taken, General Nikolayev was the first one to be hanged. "They are murdering me but the idea of the Communists cannot be murdered," were his last words.

The whole of Red Petrograd participated in the funeral, October 5th. All troop detachments and all organizations of the city assembled with standards and bands at the War Commissariat, where the coffin stood, covered with beautiful wreaths, in the decorated room. The coffin was carried out amid the firing of salutes and the singing of revolutionary songs. Zinoviev made a short farewell speech. "Today," he said, "we bury the fallen hero Nikolayev. In this for us so heavy and dangerous time, he gave his knowledge, his power, and finally his life in defense of the cause of labor. He was a general from the old time but this did not prevent him from entering the Red Army as a leader and defender of the Socialist Republic. His enemies hated him for this. It even seemed that the bullet was too good for him, and they killed him, this old righter, with a rope.

"He died as a hero. He seriously believed in the cause that he defended.

"The land owners and lackeys of the old time besought him to enter the ranks on their side and promised him great advantages, but he repected their offers and preferred this heroic death.

"His act will not be forgotten. His name will shine as a star to comming generations. Our whole army and republic uncovers its head in his memory. His memory will shine forever. Let us follow in his steps. May every fighter in our army be willing to follow his example and may there be many men like him amongst us.

"Praised be he, who gave his energy and his life for the cause of the workers and the peasants. Long live our Red Army and our victory."

The Red hero was burried, according to the wishes of his family, in a small obscure workers' cemetery, —that belonging to a china factory—and thousands of Red soldiers and citizens accompanied him to his last resting place.

Thus Soviet Russia honors the officers and generals, who serve and fight for the great cause of Socialism and the prolatariat.

The Black Sheep

CHAP. XIV.

Jack sat on the edge of his bed swinging his legs and stroking the fuzz on his chin. His mind was ingrossed with the things Collins had told him regarding the ancient labor unions. It was all so different from what he had been taught by his parents and the dominie concerning the origin of Christianity. And yet, Collins gave him by far the more reasonable explanation. It had originated in the needs of the poor; it was the answer to the soul's cry for liberty; to its longing for a greater scope of self expression. No wonder, that the Bible said of Christ "the poor heard him gladly." He thought of the text that said, "Those that sat in darkness saw a great light" and again "Stand ye in the freedom with which Christ has made you free, and be not again taken with the yoke of bondage." These and other thoughts were racing thru the boys brain. At last he asked, "I say Collins do you really believe that there is such a thing as a personal God?"

"No," the other answered, "intelligent people do not entertain that idea now. Gods are only personifications of man's desires. Devils are the the personification of his fears. His religion, and by that I mean hs church affiliations represent his class position in society or rather the social phase of it. Church membership for a working man simply advertises his stupidity."

"You must admit that the churches are becoming more liberal," Rudolph suggested; "they no longer teach their ancient superstitions, such as a brimstone hell and the six day creation and all that old junk. The preachers are becoming civilized."

"You mean they are becoming extinct," Collins retorted, "when science enters a church that is the first sign of its mortification. Remember the church has a two fold purpose, the first is to act as a show window for the wearing apparel on the backs of the female parasites, and the second is, to act as a chloroform cap for the workers. The workers and their masters do not go to the same church building; they go to churches of the same denomination. They sing from the same hymn books; they read selected passages from the same Bible; that keeps up the delusion of the identity of interests. The only difference is that the preacher in the rich man's church praises his pew renters for their benevolence, while in the poor man's church the preacher tells his victims to be contented with their lot and not read socialist literature.

"There are very few churches exclusively dedicated to the workers. Capitalism has learned to chloroform them in mass by means of revivalists. These devils hand out the bunk as of yore. Hell for those who dare to think for themselves and 'pie in the sky' for those who swallow what they dish out. They teach entirely a negative attitude toward life. It consists of a long series of don'ts. It may be summed up like this don't think, don't strike, don't covet, don't swear, don't drink, don't smoke, don't do anything your manhood bids you do, and great shall be your reward."

"But the workers are getting away from it," Rudolph argued.

"That is the way it appears to you. Remember that you look at things from a different view point. You were raised in a ghetto, where your body was starved for bread ,but your mind was fed with truth. You were raised in a radical, I might say revolutonary environment. It is different with me. I was raised on the nitrous oxide of damnation, and on the morphine of gold standard bliss. Only last summer I wandered into a Gypsy Smith meeting and there I saw Mr. Block and Henry crying to the skies for salvation. .They were singing their "heads off," apparently very happy over the prospect of getting their surplus value when the worms have had a barbaque on their carcasses."

"Still you seem to believe in the moral power of the church," Rudolph said. "You favor prohibition, that is a typical church reform."

"Yes I favor prohibition," Collins replied, "simply because it will force some of the boys to remain sober long enough to get a chance to use their heads. Booze befuddles the intellect; it renders it incapable of absobing intelligence. The church never favored prohibition until drunkness became a menace to machine industry, especially railway transpoptation. A person did not like the idea of being ushered into the glories of heavens as the result of carelessness on the part of a drunken engineer. Take it from me, fellows, prohibition will be forced on the people as soon as capitalism starts a war big enuf to produce a real scarcity of workers. When production will depend on the personal efficiency and endurance of the workers, then the masters will see to it that there is no booze to be had.

We must give the capitalist credit for being long headed where their personal interests are concerned. They take pains to prepare the public mind for a necessary change to their interests. That is why they are sending out sky pilots and temperance workers to preach sobriety. They know that sobriety will be needed when workers shall have been made scarce. It works on the same principle on which they use missionaries. We all know that missionaries are sent into so called heathen countries for two purposes, to educate the heathen in the use of american manufactured articles, so as to expand the market for them, and second to fool with the heathen's religion which will naturally make him sore so that he will either kill or hurt the missionary. This then makes the excuse for sending over an army and enslaving the heathen—for his own good of course. The surplus value so acquired, is naturally not in the reckoning.

"Now I do not say that all missionaries are conscious of this when they go. A tool does not need consciousness. Gods move in mysterious ways thru the halls of the chambers of commerce. But very often the missionary does know and acts upon his knowledge. The Hawaiian Islands are a case in point. The natives loathe the very name of missionary, because these sanctimonious devils stole nearly everything the natives had and then sold out the country to legalize their crimes."

"The ass knoweth the crib of his master," Jack quoted, "and the preacher knoweth the source of his income. It is never from on high but sometimes from higher up."

"You know it," agreed Collins. "Material interest is at the bottom of it all. All is governed by it with the exception of the working class. They often seem to act against it."

Jack suggested that there was a good reason for this singular phenomenon. Said he, "it is doubtlessly due to the fact that labor has been bored to slavery ;they are domesticated animals whose life habits no longer conform to their personal requirements but rather to the requirements of the masters of the world. They have been specially selected for slavery and I am half way convinced that your attempt to make anything but slaves out of them is sheer folly. Of course I may be mistaken, in fact I hope I am mistaken, but I recognize in such men as George and Herman, Rudolph and yourself nothing but unfavorable variations. We belong neither to the master or the slave class with the result that we are hated by the one and suspected by the other."

"Unfavorable variations are doomed to extinction," suggested Rudolph.

"That is quiet true when they are unfavorable to the natural environment. Thruout the ages the rebel types have died childless; that is why they are not more numerous. But capitalism develops the world's markets, and educates the world's peoples in the art of production. They tie the nations together with bands of steel in the form of railroads, and with commercial treaties. That will eventually put and end to a place for the investment of surplus value. When the markets are gone what need is there for the working class. Fifty per cent of them will be useless; an un-employed burden on society. There is only one thing that can be done with them, they must b eexteminated. Doubtlessly this will be done by war. It appears to me that an effort to educate them is merest dreamery, for the master class has a thorly organized, trained and systematic educating machinery. All that you can get into action is a few cheap pamphlets and papers written by men who lack education. If I am right that the mass of the workers are slaves by heredity then nothing but extinction can befall them when the markents are gone. With the passing of the markets, passes the need of slaves. Capital no longer has an incentive to exploit. A new battle front is set up in society, between the social and individualistc types. In that day whch must come as a logical sequence of evolutionary processes our type which today finds no place in the world may become the possessors of the earth," said Jack answering the Jew.

"Hully gee!" Collins observed. "For a kid, you've got the damnedest ideas I ever heard. In fact, it would take some thinking to answer you completely. I know that no sky-pilot could do it."

"Perhaps not and yet I cannot accept your view in its totality. It appears to me that the church is a molding force, rather than a force that is molded. Think of her power during the middle ages," said the boy.

"When she was a property institu-

WHO IS AFRAID?

The hurricane has already spent its fury. The storm swept accross the country and gathering up in its whirling arms a few thousand alleged "reds", it has swept them into (and mostly out of) prison, where they were rated, thumb marked, photographed and some probably will be deported. Rising without warning except in a few localities, where the tip was somehow given, the nation woke up one morning to the fact that it had been "raided". The newspapers followed with volleys of lurid "news" of terrors that would be visited upon the offending "radicals". They kept it up as long as there was a hair to hang a "red" story by.

Somehow or other, no one seemed to get very excited. A sense of disgust seemed to pervade the general atmosphere which was directed at the government's alleged drive at radicalsm. The public is becoming used to ponderous publicity campaigns for one thing and another. It is sufficiently fed up on such that it no longer waxes delirious over artificial and t rumped up governmental campaigns, especially when directed apparently at the political rights of citizens. So much of repression was accomplished by the government agencies during the war, people hoped for a cessation when the armistice was signed, only to be disappointed by further encroachments upon the historic liberties of American civil and political life. They are growing jealous of what little is left them in the way of personal and poltical liberty. Campaigns of repression directed against the "reds" have lost their savor upon the public palate.

In all probability no one will be deported who does not desire it. The average foreigner, especially Russian, is only too anxious to get passage to his home land, if it is free, so much the more acceptable. Most radicals are becoming used to jail terms, while that life has lost its novelty, it has also lost its fear for them. If by chance in the capitalist courts, a "red" is sentenced to serve time, he looks upon the mater in a philosophical manner. He is neither deterred from following his conscience in the pursuit of industrial democracy for the working—class, nor does he hesitate for a moment in fear of prison bars.

Members of the Communist Labor Party have nothing to fear from governmental raids. Ours is a legal political Party. Its methods are open to the public view. It has nothing to hide. It courts every opportunity to carry on its activities where all may see. If the government desires to know what the Communist Labor Party contemplates, it can learn at any time. If it will not be convinced by the propaganda which we publish, then it has the power to give us the streets for public meetings where our speakers will be glad to tell our message to all who will listen.

These things being true, what has any Communist Labor Party member to fear? The answer is, he has nothings to fear.

KINDRED SPIRITS.

Capitalist class "justice" offers some striking contrasts if you have an eye for color. Consider the case of one W. A. Kistler, embezzler, of Warren Ohio. Mr. Kistler confesses to have robbed the county in which he was treasurer of the modest sum of $30.000 odd dollars and some other odd cents. He is now explaining why and wherefore in court. To date a certain lady, other than his wife, is playing an important role in the lurid story.

Newspaper reports state that Mr. Kistler is doing very well while in durance vile pending the outcome of the case. The sherriff has extended every courtesy which will make the county jail as "homelike" as possible. The prisoner has been given a large room in the Woman's department—this is rather tough on the woman's ward. Electric lights are provided, also rocking chairs and a real bed, not just an ordinary lousy jail mattres or plain board or concrete floor, not by any means. Mr. Kistler states that his health is improving.

Now, we do not begrudge Mr. Kistler his bed and rocking chairs. Our method would be to give every prisoner humane and decent surroundings. But we are citing a contrast. Here it is. A few weeks ago—until he became so ill that his life was feared for, Eugene V. Debs was caged like a wild animal in a cell for 14 hours out of every twenty-four in the Atlanta Federal prison. Debs is known over the whole world for his great and loving heart. Millions love him as they do their own families. He never filched a penny from any one, but has given all he ever earned except a bare substistence to the unfortunate. He has refused to line his pockets with gold, and he could have done so times innumerable. He chose rather, to remain with the poor and the unfortunate, that he might help lift them up. His life has been one long service to the oppressed.

Debs is only one. The jails of America are filled today with men and women whose crimes are that they sought to lift the fallen and make easier the path of the world's toilers. Capitalist society has condemned many of them to long prison sentences. Robbers, embezzlers, thieves of all descriptions get out of jail with only a few months to their credit. It is a usual custom, especially where the prisoner has "influential" friends on the outside. It is as tho the capitalist class recognized in the thieves a certain kinship that must be upheld. As a matter of fact, there is little difference between robbing a victim at the point of a gun and doing the same in the regular way—where the victim performs his daily task. Capitalism has immesurably more respect for the thief than for the philosopher, if his philosophy endangers the existence of the robber system—capitalism. The thief is extolled, the humanitarian is jailed when he is not assisinated . Such do the daily court records give us in the way of social contrasts.

The Newcomer to Akron is greeted with a sign at the Union Station "the City of Opportunity". Truly—since Akron in the past year sent more people to the Electric Chair in Columbus that any other city in Ohio.

"I am after some of the new books", writes comrade Frank Renko. He orders Bullitt's Report and states he will send subs for some of the premiums later.

HYPOCRICY REVEALED.

Slowly but surely the perfidy and hypocrisy of the burgeoisie is being revealed. It is becoming apparent to even the hitherto most credulous dupes of the governing element in society that deceit and duplicity, rather than honorable procedure, are the means universally employed by them to perpetuate their reign of exploitation.

The testimony of Wm. C. Bullitt, attache of the Peace Conference, before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, is a startling epose of the conspiracy of the Allied governments to wreck Soviet Russia. This, however, is no surprise to readers of history. No one conversant with the long record of chicanery employed by the master class, and the merciless use of force when necessary, to maintain their supremacy over the lives of the workers, expects them to be anything but liars, knaves and butcehrs, yet never before has the cloven hoof been so openly exhibited as since the close of the World War.

Mr. Bullitt relates a story of duplicity that is amazing for its brazen effrontery and practically every prominent representative of the Allied governments is charged with insincerity and double dealing. Returning from Russia, whither he had been sent for the "declared" purpose of studying conditions with a view to a declaration of peace with the Soviet government, he reported to the Peace Conference the terms the former would accept, which practically embraced all demands of the Allies. He tells in detail of his efforts to secure consideration of these terms and how the representatives of the various governments "passed the buck" on to others until the expiration of the date specified for a meeting, and all but charges these representatives with lack of intent to carry out the project. Reading between the lines one can discern the insidious machinations of the world imperialists to prevent recognition of the Soviet republic on any terms whatever.

Even though the matter be taken up on the floor of the Senate, as is probable during the further discussions on the League of Nations, it is safe to prophecy that the capitalist press will carefully refrain from giving it any publicity.

Every reader of The Toiler should procure a copy of "The Bullitt Mission to Russia". At the present time nothing is of more importance than the enlightenment of the workers regarding the nefarious practices of the rulers they have been taught to respect. This report will go far toward acquainting them with the real character of those who control the State to further their own selfish ends.

TOM CLIFFORD.

— By TOM CLIFFORD —

Victor Berger, twice elected to Congress from Wisconsin, and twice refused his seat by the loyal henchmen of capitalism who compose that body, may find some comfort in the knowledge that he is not the only victim of a world made safe for democracy. The five candidates of the Socialist Party elected to the New York assembly had the same "kibosh"—firmly, calmly and deliberately—put on their ambition to represent the working class in that emporium of legislation. The reason given for the "knockout" is the same as that advanced for the persecution of members of the Communist Labor Party. They are charged with being "revolutionists," and no denial of the soft impeachment will receive the slightest consideration from the "patriots" who have the might to exercise the right to prevent contamination of their sacred temple. Maybe this arbitrary procedure will have the salutary effect of making real rebels out of these milk- and water-protesters. The mills of the gods are still doing business at the same old stand and experience is a great educator.

Since last March 8,000 soldiers have deserted from the army that is being created for the purpose of holding the workers of this nation in subjection. To an humble observer it would appear that some of the strenuosity now being expended in rounding up innocent foreign-born residents might be more effectively utilized in controlling the insurrection in the army—speaking of course strictly from the bourgeoisie standpoint.

An occasional shaft of criticism is still being hurled by the capitalist dalies at the profiteers, but we notice that these later phillipies have the erstwhile stinging denunciation largely removed. The worst that now appears is a mild reproof, coupled with a reminder that continued exploitation of the consumers is liable to breed Bolsheviks. Of course the editors are aware that profiteering cannot be prevented and are only making a grand stand play to the public, but what must be thought of the "mutt" who persistently supports a profit system while continually bellyaching about the practice of its ethics? His carburetter needs adjustment.

The steel strike has resulted in a fiasco. The gentlemen comprising the Steel Trust must be chucking over the ignorance of the workers that enabled them to close down their furnaces and place the blame on the strikers. If the leaders of the strike were ignorant of the fact that there was an overproduction of steel due to the lack of markets they are not fit for the positions they occupy. But were they ignorant? I hardly think so.The Steel Trust has gained more than a victory. An impending calamity—the partial or entire closing down of the industry—has been averted. The possibility of that happening just now is the nightmare of capitalism.

And now the coal miners, through the beneficencent operation of a Federal court injunction, have returned to their jobs and are performing their duty to society. They now admit that whatever obligation they owe to their wives and children is of secondary importance.

Maybe they can partly meet the latter with the 14 per cent advance to graciously accorded them by Brother Garfield, Any way, hasn't the government promised to look further into the matter, and what more can they ask? It is true that some of them are manifesting a spirit of insurgency, and even go so far as to say that their officers should have emulated the example of Debs and gone to jail, but these misguided malcontents forget how helpless they would be without the wisdom of their leaders to guide them. Then, perhaps, it is the will of Providence. Let us pray.

Were it not for the phenomenal astuteness of those guardians of the public welfare, the secret service sleuths the nation might now be writhing in the throes of revolution. Yes, sir, you may not believe it, but they nipped it right in the bud. A few thousand men, scattered througout the country from Maine to California, if you believe the newspapers, were just on the eve of precipitating a sosial cataclism when the watch dogs of our nation swooped down upon them. That's the kind of dope the people are expected to absorb, and, strange to say, there are some one hundred per cent muts that lick it up like a cat does cream.

Communist Spirit Thrives Among Ellis Island Exiles.

The following letter was recently written by one of the deportees on Ellis Island to his brother:

"Between bad stomachs and the U. S. Department of Justice, it is hard to decide which is causing more trouble to the officials at Ellis Island. A week ago the probabilities were that they did not figure on having concentrated so many 'Reds' here.

"Now that they have us here the nvestigation committees come around, stay a while, and go away muttering, 'Damn those Bolsheviki! We can't understand them.' Of course they can't understand us, not even if they live 1,000 years.

"It must be admitted that the U. S. Department of Justice is working very hard to destroy the idea of Communism. Little do they know what they are doing. Instead of destroying Communist principles and ideas, they are helping in their progress.

"Our organization here is a miniature of a commune. The basis of existence is the predominance of the collective spirit as against the spirit of indivdualsm. So far has this developed that it is becoming difficult to tell the characteristic of one Comrade from that of another.

"Touching and interesting scenes are to be seen every moment of the day. When we first came here, the greatest luxury was to procure a shave. A Comrade receives a razor from home, and without any invitation a line is formed and all are shaved.

"Another luxury is rye bread. A Comrade receives some rye bread and distributes it among the Comrades. Another Comrade receives a can of cigarettes; half he keeps and half is turned in to the commune. Word comes to us that the lady Comrades are in need of money. Before one can count three, $61.50 is raised and sent to our lady Comrades. These instance can be multilied ad infinitum.

"There are nations who express their instinct for music through the individual, such as France and Italy. There are nations who express their instinct for music through the people as a whole. The glory of Russian music lies in the folk song and revolutionary songs, the result of years of persecution. The most wonderful spectacle is that of the Russian Comrades singing their folk songs.

"But the officials do not seem to like these songs, because they constantly interrupt and tell us that we make too much noise. Well, we can account for this: 'He who has no soul for music is either a scoundrel or a fool.'

"And so the spirit of Communism is daily unfolding itself here on Ellis Island, with the officials gaping and mumbling to themselves, 'Damn those Bolsheviki! We can't understand them.'"

The Truth About the Czar's Assassination.

(From the Moscow paper "Pravda".)

(The following translation of a Russian document from the Moscow Communist newspaper "Pravda" throws an interesting light on the charge frequently repeated in the American bourgeouis press to the affect that the Bolsheviki killed in cold blood the exCzar of Russia and his family. This document shows that not only were the Bolsheviki not guilty, but that the murder was committed by a political opponent of the Bolsheviki to discredit the Soviet Government. Yakhontov who was responsible for the order, evindently got himself elected to a high Soviet position in order to be able to accomplih this treachery, but was finally discovered and punished for the coldblooded assassination. The party to which Yakhontov belonged, the Left Social-Revolutionaries, is generally considered as the most treacherous opposition to the Bolsheviki, and this party was, before the establishment of the Soviet regime as well as since then, a terrorist party, which by its deeds of violence against individuals has always been discrediting all constructive revolutionary movements. It is interesting to note that when members of this same party killed in a similar manner Count von Mirbach, the Allies praised them to the skies.)

The Revolutionary Tribunal presided over by Comrade Matveyer, after a two-day examination, finished the case of the murder of the ex-Czar Nicholas Romanoff, of his wife Alexandra nee Princess of Hesse, of their daughters Olga, Maria, and Anastasia, and of divers persons with them.

As the results indicated, 11 persons in all were killed. The number of defendants was 28; three of them, Gruzinov, Yakhontov, and Malyutin being members of the Yekaterinburg Soviet, two of them, Maria Apraxima and Yelizaveta Mironova, being woman, while the rest were officers of the guard.

After a long examination of the witnesses and defendants the complete picture of the murder was revealed. The ex-Czar and the rest were shot and were not, according to plan, subjected to any ridicule. Yakhontov, the chief defendant ex-member of the Yekaterinburg Soviet, admitted that the murder of the ex-Czar's family was organized by him for the purpose of discrediting the Soviet regime in the interest of the Left Social-Revolutionaries to whom he belonged. According to Yakhontov's evidence, the murder of Nicholas Romanoff was attempted when he was at Tobolsk, but the watchful guards prevented the plan from being carried out. At Yekaterinburg, when confusion reigned among the Soviet authorities due to the approach of the Czecho-Slovaks to the city, he, as chairman of the extraordinary commission, gave out an order to shoot the imperial family and those around them. Yakhontov declared that he was present at the execution and, in any case took the responsibility on himself, but was not guilty of the robberies that followed the murder. In his evidence Yokhontov specially emphasised as the last words uttered by Nicholas Romanoff: "For my death, my people will curse the Bolsheviki."

The other defendants, including Gruzinov and Milyutin, declared that they did not know of Yakhontov's treason, and that they executed his commands.

After the speeches of the prosecutor and the defense, the tribunal found guilty of the murder of the ex-Czar's family et. al only Yakhontov, and sentenced him to be shot. Gruzinov, Malyutin, Apraxima, Mironova, and 9 Red Guards were found guilty of robbing the victims and were also sentenced to be shot. The rest were acqitted. The following day the sentences were carried out. The decision of the Tribunal is the best proof that the Soviet Government has taken all measures to detect and punish those who were guilty of this senseless murder. The clever plan of the Social-Revolutionaries failed.

THE SETTING SUN OF CAPITALISM.

— By WALTER E. DILLON. —

Once when I was a boy I made a trip by coaster from New Haven, Connecticut, to Machias, Maine, and during the six months that it took to complete this voyage I saw the sun go down in many different ways and under many and varying conditions. To-night, facing as we all do the setting sun of Capitalism, I recall particularly the night that we rounded Cape Cod in one of the worst sou'easters that is given to any sailor to experience.

Up to the time we reached Martha's Vineyard, the weather had been ideal, the sound a blue pond, the breeze a summer zepher, and the landscape beautiful and serene in all the clothing of late summer. But as the afternoon grew towards a close and the sun prepared to dip below the western horizon, a peculiar lull apparent even to me, a landsman, seemed to throw a pall over all. Our sails flapped listlessly in the intermittent breezes, the captain cast repeated and troubled glances at the heavens which to me appeared bright enough, and remarked to my father that we probably had a rough night before us.

As the afternoon wore on I grew sleepy and finally went down into the cabin and fell asleep in a rocking chair. My last waking memories were of two other vessels, one to the starboard and one to port of us, like ourselves with every sail bent, running wing and wing, trying to get the last ounce of speed out of the fleeting breezes, in order that we might round Cape Cod before the impending storm broke.

To me, we three vessels were merely running a race, and my thoughts were wholely devoted to matters of relative speed, happy when we appeared to be gaining on the other two vessels, angry if they seemed to be gaining on us. How like the grown boys of today as they look on at the struggles of the social elements, the workers who understand the current bending every energy in preparation for the impending gale, and the shirkes amongst the workers looking calmly on and lending no hand to avert disaster, even as I looked on that day off Cape Cod.

The storm struck in all its fury—but I slept on. It bore us in its teeth slowly but surely towards the treacherous sand bars. The men of the vessel fought valiantly, but I—I slept in ignorance of danger, slept while others sweated, groaned, suffered and cursed in the agony of their battle with the elements. Perhaps the weight that I could have added would have averted disaster, an atom by myself but the sorely needed atom that would have swung the battle—but I slept on. The good old vessel tossed and churned the seas and the men fought bravely to the last, but the elements proved victorious and we finally crashed bows on to Peaked Hill bar, plowed the full length of the vessel and hung with our stern caught fast.

The jar as we struck and caught threw me across the cabin, rocking chair on top of me. Still sleepy I picked myself up and sat down again, but another heavy sea sent me sprawling. Again I sat down and again went sprawling, and as I picked myself up my father came down the companionway, lantern in hand, dripping from the elements. His first words were: "Well, Walter, if we go down I will lose a valuable chest of tools, but I will carry you safely to shore."

Fully awake at last, I went up on deck and took the wheel. Luckily for us the tide was rising. The captain warned me to swing out to sea just as soon as I could feel her answer to the helm which we hoped almost hopelessly would happen at or near high tide. At last we swung clear, I held her grimly on her course, and the men of the vessel manned the pumps, reefed sails and we all fought our way around the cape into the untroubled waters of Duxbury harbor. It was high moon before any of us awakened and took an inventory of our losses and damages. They were quite grave but far from hopeless and we immediately began to repair them preparatory to another and fresh start.

This incident in my life, comrades, I am telling you because it so vividly portrays the struggle we are now engaged in. The few years just previous to 1914 were as the hours of the morning and earl yafternoon of that day on Long Island Sound; the present is the late afternoon of that same day; and the night—the night, comrades, is before us.

The setting sun of Capitalism is slowly sinking behind the hills of yesterday. In that sun the Capitalist Class sees all to plainly the demise of all that they hold dear. The sun is of a deep red hue, symbolical of the rise of the Socialist Commonwealth on the morrow. You and I, comrades, bid the setting sun good night, and we would go peacefully to our rest in the full knowledge that the dawn of the day would bring love and happiness to the whole world. But the spirits of the dark will not have it so, and as the sun sinks to its rest we Communists, the captains of the human vessels sailing on the sea of life, are warned of impending evil, and instead of going to our well earned rest we remain awake and watchful for the breaking of the storm.

The masses of the workers go calmly to their sleep, prototypes of myself on that day on the sound. Would that they could sense the storm as we Communists sense it, but they can't and so we are left to fight the battle all through the night. Let us, then, be vigilant. Upon us depends the future of the race, and the rising sun must find us still on deck though battle scarred and weary.

The "Iron Heel" of capitalism is now beginning its ruthless grind, and though we Communist Labor Party members and the members of the Communist Party are getting the brunt of the attack, our former comrades in arms, the Socialists, are receiving their share of attention.

Even in the strenuous night of our battles with the forces of Capital we can find time to smile at the plight of these same Socialists. The situation in particular of those Socialists in New York City who have now been barred from their seats in the State Legislature is very ludicrous. These are the men, mind you, who voted for and supported the Liberty Loans, who were averse to the St. Louis Proclamation after it became extremely hazardous to support it though they were perfectly in harmony with it so long as it was still an academic proposition. These are the men, if you please, comrades, who themselves or through others like them voted for the Liberty Arch across Fifth Avenue, New York City, on which is inscribed amongst other names supposedly symbolizing the heroic victories of American troops in Europe, the name MURMANSK.

MURMANSK, where the soldiers of working class Russia were slaughtered while defending their working class republic against the armies of Allied Capitalist governments; MURMANSK, the blackest and ugliest smudge on the escutcheon of all working class organizations that failed to rise in a very gale of terrific wrath to avenge their brothers who were slaughtered there; MURMANSK, where the first really great battle of the workers and the capitalists was fought. And Liberty Arch, standing across Fifth Avenue, emblazons to the world that passes beneath its shadows that we are proud of America's part in the slaughter of the workers of Russia at Murmansk.

In the bitterness of our hearts at this base betrayal of our comrades in Russia, we might at first feel inclined to laugh now at the discomfiture of those so-called Socialists who are themselves today the victims of the same brutal tactics of the same Capitalists, but we cannot afford to desert them as they deserted their former comrades. Their plight, comrades, is quite just, and they deserve their fate, but as the fight we are waging is against the Capitalist Class and these men are members of the Working Class and victims of the Capitalist Class, we must forget their wrongs to us and spring to their defense.

The long and bitter night of Capitalism's last stand is before us, comrades. Many workers who ought to be on deck ready to fight the elements and keep the good ship safely on her course are below decks blissfully sleeping in total ignorance of the dangers ahead, even as I slept that day years ago. But the shock of the bars ahead will awaken them, and in the meantime we must bend our backs to the task of keeping the ship at least over the waves instead of under them.

The night may be long but the dawn is a certainty. Though the fight rage all night and the elements keep the ascendancy at all stages we know that the dawn will come, and so we will keep on fighting though our ranks be thinned, our organization all but shattered and our nerves a taut set of silken shreds. Our knowledge of the goal to which we have set our course will renew our courage and with gritted teeth we will throw back the hordes of Capitalist Huns at every repeated attack.

The sun of Capitalism is setting, comrades, and the long and bitter night is about to swallow us, a night fraught with all the suffering and torment of a Capitalism in full knowledge of its impending demise, and resolved to die in an orgy of blood and terror, with its gleaming teeth and frothing mouth open to tear and rend every worker who stands in its path. But long as the night may be, and great as may be our suffering, we know that the Red Dawn will bring to all humanity the high ideals and generous warmth and light of true brotherhood, not to a chosen few, but to all mankind.

To the new day, comrades, let us devote our every energy and thought, and through the long night of Capitalist bestiality let us comport ourselves as befits the progenitors of the New Era. Erect and unswerving we will face the fire of Capital, gentle but just in our attitude towards those who seemingly are never able to get down off the fence, smilingly indifferent to personal insults or persecution but merciless and terrible in our exactions against all those who cause sufferring and misery to the Working Class as a whole.

Capitalism's sun has set, comrades. The darkness has set in. Let us turn from the black pall of the Capitalist West to the brightening East of Socialism's Dawn.

Long live the Worker's Commonwealth!

BABSON SAYS DEPRESSION IS COMING.

Mr. Babson's addresses on the labor situation before his clients in Hotel Statler and before the employment managers in the Chamber of Commerce were similar. He made these statements at both places:

"The worst of all forms of wild oats is the talk in favor of direct action. I question whether it does much good to put people in jail or deport them for talking about such things, but, nevertheless, all talk in favor of direct action is wrong. Revolution is impossible here.

"The appeals to patriotism have lost their force. The only means of reaching the wage workers is to let them learn by experience. Let them try in a small way some of the things which they wish to try. If these experiments are successful we all want them."

After his address before his clients questions were asked of Mr. Babson. Some of these and his answers follow:

Q.—Is it not possible prices will reach a point where people will stop buying?

A.—It would seem so, but it is not apparent yet. People are still buying the more expensive articles.

Q.—What is going to happen to rents?

A.—Rents are likely to stay up. Houses and apartments have been too cheap. I would advise you to lease for as long as you wish.

Q.—Why do you predict prosperity will last longer with a Republican than with a Democratic victory?

A.—Republicans represent the money, the initiative and largely the brains of the country, and the Republicans, if elected, will give the country one more hyperdermic. President Wilson once told me the Republicans were all brains and no heart and the Democrats all heart and no brains.

Q.—How soon will Liberty bonds be at par?

A.—In five years witouth question. They are the best investment at the present time, because in the depression they will posses the quality of absolute safety.

Q.—What do you think of profit sharing and bonus plans as remedies for labor trouble?

A.—Theoretically I believe in these plans, but I have not yet seen a satisfactory scheme.

The Black Sheep.

tion," Collins answered. "You told me once how your local preacher succeeded in persuading your parents to send you away from home. How he changed their love into hate. I remember, that during that discussion you said that the preacher controlled the economic life of the community. You were mistaken. What you should have said was, that he greatly influenced the social life of the community. You must not confuse the two terms."

"Let me illustrate: the church will hound a young girl whose fire burned a little too brightly upon the altar of venus to a suicide's grave. The church will make life a hell for a fatherless child. A church will dismiss a preacher who accidently uses his brain, but neither you nor any one else has ever heard of her dismissing from membership, a banker on account of the way he got his money. He may have obtained it by financing gambling dens or renting rooms to a vice syndicate. If he has the money he is a respected citizen, and child of God. They never mind, the fact that Christ loved the poor; that forgave the Magdaline; they never think of the fact that he forgave the thief. You must not forget that the cross is the emblem of the church, and during the days of the Roman empire the cross was the terror of the slaves.

"The preacher could persuade your father to send you out in the world unprepared for the battle of life. All he had to do was to point out the fact that your ideas would weaken your father's power over the rest of the family. Suppose however that the preacher had begun a series of sermons on the evils of interest, rent, and profit, or suppose that he had preached the necessity of a four dollar a day wage to the wandering worker, what then in your estimation would have become of that sky-pilot?"

"He would have been 'canned' for conduct unbecoming a minister," the boy answered.

"Exactly."

"This law of 'Economic Determinism' is a wonderful thing; it enters into every human expression, love, affection, friendship, trust, all that is purest and most beautiful in life seems to be affected by it," said Jack.

"He owns the land, the fruit, the coal—he owns you body estate and soul." Rudolph quoted from something. He loved to quote poetry. He enlivened many on otherwise lonely hour with passage from 'Omar Khyam' and the 'Kasidah', Church bells rang again and a fey minutes later female voices were heard in the adjoining rooms.

Collin's blue eyes flashed. "Church Janes, by God.; he fairly hissed. That is what I call the last hair on the tail of the limit; rob a man of his created value, rob him of his earned wages; rob him of his liberty and then force him to listen to their infernal bunk with no chance of escape."

"But they may be sincere," Rudolph protested "many of these women are."

"O Hell—so are snakes!" Collins retorted. Then turning to the boy he said: you talk to 'em kid, I'm going to sleep." He crawled into the bed and turned his face to the wall.

GOMPERS FRIENDS.

They own the meat we eat,
And own the coal we burn,
They own the shoes that's on our feet
And own the milk we churn.

They own the gas that gives us light
And own the clothes we wear.
They cause the wars and make us fight,
For us they do not care.

They own the lights upon our streets,
And I must tell you straight,
They even own the Congress of this old United States.
Now, Brothers, listen, this surely is unfair —
It is a grand thing for the poor man
That they do not own the air.

One of the poor men.

THE SPIRIT OF MID-WESTERN LABOR.

Plumb received an ovation at the Labor party convention. He is welcomed with like enthusiasm everywhere. The miners believe that they should have a share in the control of the mines, not because the leaders have told them so, but because of a deep-seated conviction born of long and bitter experience with the present system. The efforts of Foster and his co-workers to organize the packing houses and the steel mills through the machinery of the American Federation of Labor, has convinced many of the workers in these industries that the industrial union, or even the "one big union" presents, not only the easiest way but the only way out of the present difficulty.

Meanwhile the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, proceeding on the assumption that "for us the revolution has already come," recruit their membership to a 100 per cent basis; control the hiring and firing in many of their shops; tie the clothing centers together in a great industrial union, and gathering their membership weekly, in the big Carmen's auditorium in Chicago, give them, free of charge, and as a part of the return for their union affiliation, a concert by the best talent obtainable in Chicago, and a talk by some leader of economic or social thought.

Individuals fall by the way. Leaders lose step and are pushed aside, but the column of the common life moves steadily along. That is what is happening today in industrial centers of the middle west. Those who make up the bulk of the column are not at all sure where they are going, but they feel quite certain that they are on their way.

THE YANKEES IN SIBERIA

From The Nation.

In "The Press and the Siberian Situation," published in the International Relations Section of November 8, reference was made to the general public indignation in Vladivostok over the suppression, by order of the American Command, of the liberal newspaper Golos Primorya for its publication of an article dealing with the behavior of Americans in Siberia. We reprint below the article over which the controversy arose. It is entitled The Yankees, and appeared in Golos Primorya (Vladivostok) of August 28.

I.

Not so very long ago we knew of the trans-Pacific Yankee only through pictures. He seemed to us then a sort of magician in his star-spangled hat and his bright striped trousers; so very tall, and with a wedge-like, pointed little beard.

We knew that this Yankee, as by a magic wand, created at home towering skyscrapers; that he bulit gigantic steamers, invented machines. It appeared that the Yankee's life was passed in strenuous work, in the roar of monstrous machines, in the brilliant, blinding light of electricity; to us he seemed living in an unfamiliar atmosphere, master of nature, commanding her bounty by the mere pressure of the electric button.

And in our time of national crisis, we fixed our rainbow hopes on our Yankee friends beyond the seas. Soon, very soon, he would come to us, with real, genuine help. That was why he was a friend! He would press any one of his numerous bottons, and laden steamers would go out to us—a mere trifle to him. It seemed so simple and so natural. The Yankee's factories produced endlessly varied machinery, tools, and articles of first necessity. It would only be a trifle to him. He could do everything!

Friends in need are friends indeed. It is not true?

We all spoke of America, hoping so for her coming, and we thought that after this war we should look no more to the detestable Germans for the things we needed. We would open our great markets to America and her exports, and in return she would bring us her experience, knowledge, and capital, and help us to increase the productive powers of our industries, to exploit, our mines and our forests.

We were genuinely happy to welcome the first Americans, who came from so far away to give us a helping hand . We rejoiced and we hoped, with the confidence and faith so inherent in us Russians.

The Yankee came, not in his star-spangled hat and bright striped trousers, but in a business suit; not lean, but well set up and well fed, looking in no way different from our own speculators. He came without his magic wand, but he spoke much and with great grandiloquence about himself, and he wondered what we wanted. And when we modestly enumerated our needs, he smiled at our trifling demands, and said: "Oh, yes! We'll send you many steamers, everything, all right!"

And we began to await the promised steamers, and many of us watched hopefully for the smoke of America nvessels on the horizon. What talk there was about our idle mining and forest resources! We thought that now, with the coming of the enterprising Americans, their systematic exploitation would begin, enriching ourselvels and them. The question of transportation, too, seemed solved: the Americans would take the railways under their care, their carrying capacity would at once increase, for it would be a simply problem for American specialists; besides, rolling stock was already on the way. At last we should no longer wait a year at a time for a chance to ship our goods.

We even forgot the Bolsheviki. It was only necessary to behold the brave, husky, disciplined American soldiers and it was clear that Bolshevism must fall before their awe-inspiring forces.

Time passed. We came to know our visiting. Yankees better, and soon all hopes began to melt away. We were disillusioned. Some said: "Our friend the Yankee in only getting ready". Others only waved their hands in despair. There were even some who doubted the authenticity of our Yankee, who said he was spurious, and that the genuine Yankee was still at home. With her highly-developed industries America could do everything; didn't she make coffee out of old soles?

How simple and trusting we Russians are, like grown-up children!

But if we Russians are simple, the Americans are not less so, who think they are conquering our hearts and our markets and are doing something big. Only at home, where everything is under their absolute command, are they creators. Here, where one must build from the ground, where obstacles rise at every turn, where vision is needed, and where one must risk much, Americans fail, losing courage and faith, caring only about the invested dollar.

Their representatives made dragon-like conditions: immediate orders for large quantities of goods, with cash guarantees, and still greater orders for the future, also cash down; as though one could, under present coditions in Russia, at once introduce and accustom the population to new goods and machines. Things were no more hopeful in our export of raw materials. The Americans have not yet learned to buy them from us directly, but do so through Japan. It is less troublesome; the Japanese buys, re-ships, and the American pays a handsome commission.

We Russians are simple, but simpler still is Mr. American.

Time does not wait. Pretty soon the German travelling salesman will come, offering the most liberal terms, for German industries and foreign trade are great and strong, and her representatives adapt themselves to all varied circumstances.

I wonder what the Y. M. C. A. boys are thinking about that!

II.

Two years ago, in Japan, at the Hotel Imperial, a few Russian ladies of my acquaintance gathered for a social chat after dinner. I introduced to them my new young American friend, who spoke some Russian, wore his evening clothes easily, gracefully knocked the ashes off his cigar, and whistled a few popular and common American tunes.

In our little circle he deported himself freely, even familiarly, with the ladies, and talked much nonsensical stuff; but when the conversation turned to art and literature, my American friend listened with great wonder, in silence, although the talk was about English and American writers. He did not know them, and everything seemed new to him.

The ladies soon became animated, and imperceptibly the interest turned to themes of love and success in life. One of the ladies proposed that each should tell an entertaining story of some beautiful daring in which the narrator was the hero. We cast lots.

I told of a lively affair which pleased the ladies very much. The ladies modestly and adroitly got away with some facetious, witty nonsense. The turn came to the American who related the following. He lived once in a house where a beautiful young girl was staying. He became greatly infatuated with her, but she paid no attention to him. Once, when no one besides them were at home, he entered her room without knocking and seizing her began to kiss her. "And what did the girl do?" asked one of the ladies. "She could do nothing," he answered complacently. "I held her fast by the hands." This free confession aroused a long outburst of laughter, but he did not understand that the merriment was due to his utter stupidity. He remained convinced that we admired his "beautiful daring".

When the ladies took their leave, and we remained alone, he said thoughtfully: "How lucky you Russian are!" "Why?" 'Among you, one may enjoy the company of women and girls, pay court to them, appear with them in society, at theatres . . . " "Do you not enjoy these pleasures at home?" "No!" he declared emphatically. "If one pays too much attention to a girl at home, it is likely to end badly; she will either demand that you marry her or begin to blackmail you." "Blackmail!" I almost rose from my chair. "Very simple. She will demand handsome payment because she spent her time with you, was seen with you, because she expected a proposal, in a word, because you were attentive." "But suppose nothing really happened between you?" "No matter. If you don't pay her, she will sue you in court, and will win, because the law is on her side."

It oppressed me as a nightmare: the lady, blackmail, the curious law-suit, and justice on the side of a blackmailer.

Then he told me how cruelly American society is persecuting prostitution, and what hideous shapes, thanks to laws, secret vice is assuming, driven to ugly, underground methods. It was hard to believe that life could become so deformed in the free American states.

I greatly pitied my handsome yong American, dressed so showily, making dollars so fast, but without the slightest interest in or understanding of art, literature, music, which open beautiful worlds of exalting, soul-enobling emotions. But my American friend, lying back in the deep easy chair, his feet thrown far out, lazily moved the points of his shining patentleather shoes up and down, whistling the while a popular air. In the commonplaceness of his stupid little air one felt the true reflection of American life—noisy, deafening, showy, but without depth and content, and so foreign to Russian culture.

III.

Of course it is a trifle—that stupid, commonplace air. One might overlook it, if its place were only the backyard and the alley. But if noisy coarseness has occupied the central position in American song, it then offers condemning testimony. Music is the most free and sublime of the arts. It reached its apogee only at the uttermost limits of Jewish culture. It is the utterance of the most mysterious emotions of our soul's, for which language is poor, color pale and poetry incomplete. As no other art, music is the blamelessly exquisite image of man's spiritual life. Music does not repeat or imitate as do other arts. Music is a going out into the world of hopes and dreams, into the immeasurable empire of sound, a yearning for perfection.

And what do the Americans give us? Noisy, rude saucy little airs, galloping, trotting airs, such as circus horses like.

My childhood was passed in Little Russia. I learned to love songs woven of beautiful words, harmonious and rapturous as a prayer. When, for the first time, I overheard a stone-cutter singing, "Never was my love for thee so cruel, old hag!" I was seized with deep consternation. Such mockery seemed like the vulgar hiccoughing of a beast. Never could I bring myself to compromise with the coarseness of the factory worker who assimilated only the negative side of city life, the underside of culture.

In American songs I feel this "old hag" tune pervading all, a spiritual emptiness, cynicism and pertness, and I cannot compromise with it, for to me, a Slav, a song is a thing of beauty, as prayer and music are—the image of a bright hope.

American literature, too, is infected with "Pinkertonism". Characteristic is the work of Jack London, a brilliant, gifted, and original author, but discoursing of brutal strength, of cruel, despotic, conquering, coarse men—and little else. The animal in man shut off from his vision the deep, noble, compassionate soul of man a thousand centuries old.

American architecture has given us skyscrapers, vast, grandiose barracks, and the bungalow; the latter, however, has a charm and originality of its own. I know of no American sculpture and painting, but apparently they are undeveloped and inferior; otherwise American multi-millionaires would not roam over Europe greedily buying up, without thought of worth or price, all objects of art. Have they really awakened to spiritual things, or are they buying rich and famous decorations for their palaces? I hesitate to pronounce judgment. But it seems to me they are moneyed men with enormous stomachs buying luscious viands. One may buy pictures for dollars, but one cannot buy understanding of beauty which belongs to the soul that hath glory in it.

Universal, insolent, lying advertising; monstrous industry; enormous skyscrapers; feverish chasing after the dollar; these have crowded out all spiritual values.

I once watched, on a screen, an exhibition of American industrial development. I was at first with wonderment at their genius, their progress, but soon this vastness transfixed me with dread. I felt that these giants with their yawning traps and terrible antennae had overtopped man himself, had seized him in the flying wheel with steel paws, and had long enslaved the inventor. These black monsters with their infernal roar have smothered the spirit of man, killed the sense of beauty and sublimity.

Great strength is too often paralleled by weak intellectual development. Nature, so wasteful in the world of vegetating things, is frugal with man; endowing him with great physical strength, she limits and curtails his intellect. Whom she endows with strength, she deprives of an additional weapon for the struggle of life.

And American culture—is it not like the low-browed athlete of great muscular powers developed at the expense of mind?

WHAT DOES THE REVOLUTION MEAN TO YOU?

Capitalism is at death grips with the forces making for Industrial Democracy. The masses are rising against the classes that hold them in bondage. They are aserting their power and threatening the rule of the masters. Russia alone, of all the nations of the earth has completely conquered the exploiters and has instituted the reign of the people. The conflagration is spreading from Russia; in every nation the social atmosphere is charged with potential explosive elements. In every country the touch of a match to these embers may spring the entire social structure into midair. Capitalism exists from day to day, insecure, uncertain, fearful of the future, as it may well be, for the mass of mankind are weary of its reign of blood and slavery.

These are the times that try men's souls even as the times of which Thomas Paine wrote in the dark days of the American Revolution. The White Terror of the capitalist class has been launched against the workers. They have been assaulted, terrorized, deported, jailed, murdered. They have been deprived of the rights conferred by the Constitution. They have been victimized, bludgeoned into silence when they dared stand up like men before injustice. Eevery method which can be devised by the exploiters has been and is now being used to intimidate them and to quell the natural desires of human life. And the end is not yet. Frenzy has seized the ruling class. It sees its rule over the workers passing away. It sees its millions of profits threatened by the rising tide of revolt. It sees itself no longer the rulers of the earth and the arbiter of the fate of the masses. It views in fear and trembling the oblivion that awaits it, for the rule of the workers is presaged in every social fact and condition of the times.

These are the times that call for steadfast purpose and unrelenting determination on the part of the workers. We must realize that no physical terror of which capitalism is capable can quench the revolt against its brutal rule. We must realize in the white light of truth that it is the historic mission of the working—class to emancipate itself from the chains of wage—slavery. No other agency than the power of the workers themselves, can accomplish this task which is necessary before the earth and the fulness thereof can become the heritage of the oppressed. This is the historic mission of the workers, to rebuild upon the chaos and ruin which capitalism has wrought a new world in which the human family may reside undivided by class war and in unopposed economic interests.

This is our mission and we must fulfill it. We cannot evade it if we would. The economic urge of conditions and events of capitalistic society compell us to accomplish this task and the very life of civilization depends upon us. The workers are being driven into closer affiliation in their battle for existence. Civilization and the circumstances of time, the identity of interests of all who toil, are the forces that are driving us on to the fulfillment of this great and momentous task.

These are the times that call to duty every class—conscious worker. To all who realize the terrible evils which afflict us under the misrule of capitalism, the Revolution calls you to stand guard upon the frontier. These are not the days, nor is ours the work which appeals to "sunshine" socialists nor the "milk and water" variety. The work demands courageous effort and unending activity. It demands free giving and sacrifice. But do you know of a greater satisfaction than that which comes with work well done in this Movement? We know that you have never experienced a greater pleasure than the work which the Revolution calls you to do.

The powers of capitalism are ever seeking to divide the workers. With consumate cunning, spies in its employ work within our ranks for the purpose of sowing discord. False issues are forced upon the attention of the workers for the purpose of misleading them. Capitalism dreads above all things, a solid organization of the workers, for it knows the unlimited power that we can then weild.

But the Revolution will grow, it is growing wider and deeper with each passing day. No power can stop it. Nothing can hinder it—but the lack of aggressiveness of the workers, not for a moment will its advance cease—unless the workers lie down like beaten dogs and attempt to whine themselves into the good graces of their economic masters. And nothing would please our exploiters more than for the workers to take this attitude—and nothing would more effectively rivet the hideous chains of slavery upon our limbs and upon our children than this—that we should seek to gain peace where there can be no peace.

The Movement demands the best effort you can give. Not a comrade but that can be active, for work is so varied and so wide there is room for all talents. And this is a call to you to become more active in this work. The organization needs your help, it needs the money you can give for its organization and propaganda activities. The Toiler subsciption list should be double what it is. You can get subscriptions for it. The organization fund needs your dollars, you can give one or more. The workers are hungry for the message of liberatinon—you can get our literature to them. You can pay your dues and can induce others to see the error of falling in arrears. You can get new members and organize new Locals. You can circulate a list for general organization funds. You can buy Toiler press stamps from your Local secretary which funds will provide the payments on our new press. There are endless and innumerable ways in which you can build up the Movement.

SOVIET GOLD-AMERICAN GOODS WAIT DECISION FOR OPENING OF TRADE

Martens tells trade plans of Soviet Russia, Lenin, victorious wants peace and reconstruction.

Thousands of American manufacturers ready to ship goods to Russia.

Soviet Russia has $500.000.000 in gold to pay for goods from Europe and America Ludwig C. A. K. Martens, Soviet ambassador to the United States told the Senate Foreign Committee in Washington last week. "The idea is disappearing," he told the Committee, "among the Russian Socialists that revolution is necessary in all countries before the Russian revolution will be safe". Lenine believes Russia can now stand against the world and is ready, not for military aggression against neighboring nations, but for peace and reconstruction, he told the Committee.

Martens asserted that he had a list of 11,000 names of business men and manufacturers in America who were anxious to import and export goods to and from Russia as soon as the State Department gave consent. Contracts to the of $7,000.000 were now tentatively made, he said.

Martens denied all connection with revolutionary movements in the United States, though admitting some knowledge of them. He said they were "purely American, arising out of American conditions" and as Soviet agent here he had not helped or financed them or their folowers.

Recognition Object Sought.

He had instructions from his government, he said, to stay clear of interfenrence with American internal affairs. All of his publicity efforts, very extensive as outlined in his testimony, were devoted to explaining the Soviet system to the end that Americans would allow its recognition as the established government in Russia, and were not to extend it in the United States.

When the committee demanded copies of the actual governmental instructions to that effect, former Senator Hardwick of Georgia, attorney for the Soviet bureau, argued that to give them might disclose the "code" in which the Soviet foreign office corresponded with Martens, which should be entitled to immunity, but promised, notwithstanding, to furnish them in the original or in sworn translations.

The witness said he was spending $2,500 a week on the maintenance of an organization of some thirty-five employes. He gave the committee names and addresses of all of them including American clerks and stenographers, and press agents.

A Chapter in the History of Our Capitalist Courts.

That the permanent injuction recently granted by Judge Webster of the State Superior Court at Spokane, Washington, prohibiting further activities of the I. W. W. and making membership in that organizaton contempt of court, is a denial of the right of trial by jury, is frankly and cheerfully admitted by the Spokane Spokesman-Review. As The Nation has already pointed out, the legal way to deal with the I. W. W., in Washington as elsewhere, is to prosecute under the criminal law any individuals who violate the law. It is contrary to all established principles of jurisprudence to suppress an organization by injuction on the ground that otherwise some of its members might commit crimes. "Under the county prosecutor's plan," the Spokesman-Review explains, "made possible by the granting of a permanent injunction, no juries are required. A man is found to be a member of an I. W. W. local, or is distributing literature, or otherwise aiding the revolutionist propaganda. He is brought before the bench of the Superior Court and punished, if the charges against him are sustained, for contempt of court. He may be sent to jail for as much as a year. His rights are safeguarded to the extent that he may appeal to the State Supreme Court, but he does not have a jury trial." The Spokesman-Review adds that if the injuction is enforced "it will work much more swiftly and effectively than the State criminal syndicalism law." No doubt it will; autocracy has always been swifter and more effective than democracy. The jury system is admittedly slow and cumbersome, but a belief that it was a bulwark against executive and judicial tyranny led our forefathers to include it among the guarantees of the Federal Consttution. There probably are some people who still believe in it even if the Washington court, apparently, and the Spokesman-Review do not.

The Nation.

THE ANTICS OF JUDICIAL MONKEYS.

Perhaps the worst instance of ludicrous comedy in the annals of mock Justice so noticable of late in the courts of the state of Washington, is the temporary injuction issued by Judge (? ? ?)Webster of Spokane. This injunctions is issued against 65 persons of Spokane County restraining them from participation in the I. W. W. or any part thereof.

An injuction against people prohibiting them from belonging to an organization of their choice.

Think of it. Enough to bring a cackle from the lips of every dead tyrant. A huge satire on the Constitution and an insult to the intelligence of humanity. Here is proof positive that Justice is as dead as a smocked mackerel in the court over which this Webster presides. It is enough to jar one loose from his reason when he contemplates to what ends these characters will go. For if a Judge can restrain 65 from doing certain things why can't he restrain 65,000 of 65.000.000? He can and will, because this judicial imbecile is not restraining individuals so much as he is suppressing ideas, and the growth of the idea will determine with him how many people to enjoin.

However, as much cause as there is for gloomy pessimism in the contemplation of such a step by a so-called judge, yet we know that Labor will go on, amused not a little later on at the recollections of the ludicrous antics of the judicial monkeys of today. This article was published in last week's issue but we reprint it here to give emphasis to this instance of the "justice" of capitalist courts.

WORSE THAN UNDER THE CZAR

Russians Released at Seattle Say Oppression Exceeds That of Old Empire.

SEATTLE.—A number of Russians, who had been held by the Seattle police, in the wholesale round-up of citizens as well as alien residents in the widely heralded effort to "stamp out I. W. W." were recently released from Seatle prisons, nothing having been found against them to warrant their deportation or their further detention.

"You in America, have it worse than did the opponents of the Czars under the old Romanoff autocracy," said one of them in relating his experience in the Seattle jails. "We knew of the jails and persecutions in old Russia, and some of us suffered in them for being suspected of efforts to overthrow the Autocrat, but our prisons at least were clean and free from vermin."

"The obscene and abusive language toward helpless and unresisting prisoners is also worse than our officers used."

"We would go back to Russia now, even if Nichalas were still Czar, for you in America are less free."

BUENOS AIRES.—Government forces are massing all the conservative elements in the country for a fight to the finish against the Socialist party and other radicals at the coming March elections. Commercial, "patriotic," clerical and military forces are being mobilized for the contest.

NEWCASTLE, England — Unemployed workers here have threatened to recommend general strike in England unless the government make some provision for men out of work Due to the withdrawal of the unemployment dole there are about $3,000 men in England totally without resource at present.

THE NEXT STEP

(by WILLIAM Z. FOSTER, Secretary-Treasurer, National Committee for Organizing Iron and Steel Workers.)

The end of the steel strike does not mean the end of the steel campaign. On the contrary, it merely marks the beginnan of a new phase of a struggle which must go on until the trade unions have overthrown czarism in the steel industry.

Ordinarily when a big strike comes to an end without a negotiated settlement complete demobilization is the portion of the men. Immediately the strike is over the employers set afoot through their scabs, stool-pigeons and bosses a virulent propaganda to destroy the last vestiges of organization spirit among their employees. Every imaginable, slander and misrepresentation is pressed into service. The unions and their officials are accused of graft, cowardice, disloyalty, inefficiency. Just here is where the unions should be alive to protect their interests. But as a rule, beaten, they have already deserted the field. Consequently the disspirited and discouraged workers, finding no one at hand to combat it, fall easy victims to the employer's propaganda. The prestige of the unions fall lower and lower until finally it reaches zero. The workers are embogged in a slough of despair and pessimism. The employers are left absolute master of the situation. They proceed to enslave the industry. In such cases it takes years of effort to clear the name of the unions, to revive the workers' hope and to reorganize the industry.

The twenty-four unions in the steel industry are determined that no such condition will result from their strike. They will stand their ground and fight Judge Gary every foot of the road. They have elaborated a campaign which is bound to increase the high prestige now enjoyed by the unions in the steel industry, and which will make impossible absolutist rule by Mr. Gary and his Prussianized associates.

Steel Unions Won Prestige.

In the face of the supposedly lost strike it may sound strange to speak of the high prestige that the steel unions have. But such is the fact nevertheless. The steel strike leaves little or no sense of defeat and bitterness with the workers. They feel that a powerful and genuine effort has been made in their behalf. Op-

SKYGAC'S COLUMN.

With all the organs for moulding public opinion fairly screaming at you to be contented, not to strike, and above all not to attempt to remedy conditions by any means other than by the use the of the ballot once in every four years, it is an eye-opener to see the dominant class OPENLY REFUSE to seat candidates of the socialist party who have been legally elected to office in the approved master-controlled way.

In other words, you must not attempt to change conditions except by the use of the ballot and you cannot change conditions by the use of the ballot because the dominant class won't let you. How do you like it?

If I were an employer of labor and had a man working for me who always bungled the job, my patience would not last for more than thirty days until I fired him and tried either another man or another method. We have had bunglers on the job of allaying the public unrest for a good many years now, and yet these same bunglers are still trying the same old methods and asking to be re-elected again to the job to continue trying the same old methods, with unrest always on the increase. What a nation of rut-runners we are!

They are trying to make out that in America it is crime to be class-conscious. But they will never make it stick.

Now that the back-bone of the revolutionary movement has been broken, isn't it strange that there should be two reds where there was only one before?

It may be that Palmer, Grabitall and Co., are not good mediums, or else there is nothing in Spiritualism, else the shades of Czar Nicholas, Bismark, Napoleon and Co., would have slipped them the valuable information that the reds can not be crushed that way.

If the government can get any satisfaction in deporting a Russian who has tried for over a year to get a passport why of course it is entitled to all the satisfaction it can get!

You see, Henry, there was a big slush fund raised by the Capitalists with governmental aid to be used to rid the country of dangerous reds and those who got the job have to play to the galleries to make 'em think they are earning their money. Now they ask congress for a million and a half more! Well it they can get the money we can furnish the reds for "as fast as they can pinch us we can always get some more." All it takes to make a red nowadays is a lesson in class-consciousness, some governmental interference in strikes and a raid.

I used to think I was some agitator, but shucks, at my best I was only a piker, compared to the way the capitalists and their government are making them nowadays.

Mr. Hearst in an open letter to all of his employees tells them that most of the anti-red news that is sent in is sent from some central office maintained for the dissemination of capitalist propaganda. We knew it all the time, but we never expected to have any of the bourgeoisie newspaper crowd admit it.

The attorney who persecuted the Wichita bunch of I. W. W. during the trial at Kansas City in a recent newspaper interview said he wished that all the American people could have heard the evidence given at that trial. So do we. We will go farther than that. We wish they might know HOW and WHERE that evidence was secured. We wish the American people might know that UNSIGNED and undated notes which were purported to have been minutes of meetings were allowed as evidence.

The "NATION" says, that a year ago the Italian peasants were burning candles before the picture of President Wilson; today some million of men and women the world over, starving, freezing and dying are grimly denouncing the statesmen who sacrificed honesty and kindness and single humanity on the altar of outworn political ideas."

Why pick on Wilson and the Peace Commission? Isn't every little Rotary Club and commercial club by whatever its name just as bad? Do they not all sacrifice honesty and kindness and simple humanity on the altar of outworn political ideas?

Wouldn't the above make a good definition of our present day politicians, must we make our progress only by sacrificing honesty, kindness and simple humanity?

They are not stamping out the I. W. W. They are stamping it IN. Into the A. F. of L. Now watch for them to begin to kick on the A. F. of L.

By the same token they are not running the reds out altho they have run a lot in, but they have run the most under. Under cover where they will be a thousand times more dangeruos and more effective.

It is a recognized principle of capitalist industry that the proper thing to do is to get a job, stick to it and WORK UP. New when new machinery throws whole crowds of laborers upon the market by enabling the employers to dispense with their services they must seek new jobs, necessarily in a lower position and pay and again begin to WORK UP. This has more to do with industrial unrest than all the Russian agitators combined. Will Attorney General Palmer and his crew deport that?

Ruminations of a Rebel.

— By TOM CLIFFORD. —

To my surprise I find the following editorial in a late issue af the Miami Valley Socialist:

"If our Communist and Communist Labor comrades, whose propaganda is outlawed, whose shackled bodies lie prostrate under the iron heel of the capitalist state, whose wives and children face the bitter winter weather with husband and father gone to jail, or exiled to unknown ports, we most earnestly ask: "Was it wise to discard the ballot for this?"

The above is a tacit acknowledgement on the part of the writer that these victims of the capitalist State are actually guilty, as charged, of advocating a revolution of force. It would be carrying charity to the extreme to attribute this statement to gross ignorance. The writer knows that these men and women harbored no intention to use physical force, that they were rounded up for the specific purpose of capitalist propaganda ,with a view to prejudicing the American worker against his foreign born brother and at the same time create distrust of all working class political parties, including the Socialist Party. The writer also states a positive untruth when he charges the Communist Labor Party with having discarded the use of the ballot, for he is certainly conversant with its platform declaration. The above is only additional evidence of the bourgeois character of what is left of the old Socialist Party.They are frantically trying to "play safe" in the midst of the prevailing campaign of terrorism by assuming a harmless attitude toward the master class. For sheer hypocricy the buorgeoisie have nothing on them, but it will not secure to these comrades immunity from persecution. Nothing but the complete disavowal of the class struggle and the acceptance of the ethics of capitalism will avert the persecution they apparently dread. Are they ready to repudiate their erstwhile opposition to capitalism merely to keep out of jail? Some rebels, eh?

The capitalist press has suddenly discovered that the two bills now pending in Congress to legalize universal espionage threaten abridgment of all our Constitutional privileges—especially their own. Their opposition to these vicious bills is not prompted by a sincere desire to conserve the liberties of the mass, but rather by the fear that they, too, may be included among the sufferers. Given liberty of action themselves, they wouldn't care a damn if all the rest of the people were shorn of the right to express their opinions. Their ox is in danger of being gored. Hence their frantic cries of distress and vociferous demands for the preservation of Constitutional rights. During the past three years, while despotism reigned supreme and the Constitution was laid away in cold storage; while the working class was being terrorized, browbeaten and imprisoned illegally, not a "peep" of remonstrance came from these gentlemen. Instead they aided and abetted the lawlessness practized by the henchmen of the bourgeoisie, glorified the imprisonment and even lynching of American workingmen for expressing their honest opinions, and even expressed contempt for the very Constitution they now invoke. Well, well! Chickens do have the habit of coming home to roost. Nothwithstanding my opposition to the enactment of "gag laws," I would be almost willing to suffer just to see these "kept ladies" get what is coming to them.

By the way, there doesn't seem to be any real necessity for any laws to further abridge the rights of the common people. The Secret Service bunch are arresting and imprisoning thousands of workingmen in total disregard of their constitutional rights, and even Congress seems powerless to prevent them. Some power acting independently of the visible government appears to be the directive force. Well, we needn't despair. It will all come out in the wash.

The income tax reports show that we are harboring 20,000 millionaires in our midst. And don't forget that most of these fellows started as horny—handed sens of toil—so we are told— who by industry and thrift carved their way to the pinnacle of fortune and are shining examples of the possibilities in this home of undulterated democracy. You don't believe it! Neither do I. Yet it ought to be a source of pride to the American workingman that we have 20,000 of these gentlemen while Russia hasn't a damned one.

With the prospect of a dozen candidates for President and the injection into the campaign of every thinkable issue from prohibition to the League of Nations the American workers will have so much diversion that little matters like meeting rent and grocery bills will be merely inconsequential. He will be so occupied in considering the personal qualifications or demerits of the freaks of the capitalistic side show that he will lose sight entirely of his own economic interests. This is my guess. Te has fallen so often for this fake stuff that it is almost a forlorn hope to expect anything else. Yet I may be agreeably disappointed. Let us comfort ourselves with the thought that the unexpected sometimes happens.

I do not have much confidence in the sincerity of the indignation expressed by some of the capitalist press anent the arbitrary action of the New York Assembly in expelling the Socialist members. They merely realize that Chairman Sweet and his fellow conspirators have in this instance overstepped the bounds of prudence and that there is danger of reaction. A hypocrite cannot be trusted.

I note that Dr. Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, is [illegible] for [illegible] citizenship," [illegible] the [illegible]. The following [illegible] ought to [illegible] bourgeoisie of the nation, who desire that our institutions of learning be kept free from radicalism; "The university teacher is usually very conservative, very solid minded and very difficult to bring to the support of a new idea or a new project." Since this attitude is in accord with the heart's desire of the exploiting class there should be no hesitancy in response. What more could they ask than that no "new ideas"—especially of an economic or political nature—will be permitted in this "educational institution?" Of course, some carpng critics may be inclined to question the character of an institution wherein "new ideas" are not permitted, but these pesons, having more knowledge than money, are not worthy of serious consideration. Money talks.

The vacilating policy being pursued by the Allies relative to Soviet Russia is indicative of the clashing economic interests of the nations concerned, which, of course, cannot be harmonized. However, it appears to me that ordinary horse sense would prompt the adoption of a definite policy, inasmuch as their blockade and counter revolution program has resulted in inglorious failure. While the other members of the Supreme Council are wrangling over the question astute Lloyd George is quietly carrying out a policy that will secure for England trade advantages in Russia, and the American capitalists at Washington are making a beaten path between the Soviet embassy and the State Department in a frantic effort to forestall the wily Welchman. When they all join in the melee it will be interesting to note the cessation of denunciation of the Bolsheviki. The establishment of markets will lift the curse.

ARE CARTOONS WORTH WHILE?

AN OPEN LETTER BY THE EDITOR.

Dear Reader:—

What's your honest opinion of the work turned out by the Toiler Cartoon Department? Pretty good, is it not? We believe every reader will agree that it is the very best that appears. Many comrades have said so in recent letters to The Toiler. We believe that every Toiler reader reads the story each cartoon tells with a growing interest and pleasure.

And we are glad that this is so. For now that we are in agreement, we have something else to say. We do not publish cartoons just to fill space. Cartoons cost five times as much as type setting. We publish them for their educational value; because they give attractiveness to the paper; for their interest creating value and because the human makeup is such that "pictures" have an irrisistible appeal. All good and sufficient reasons are they not? Again, we are in full agreement.

We think we are pretty lucky to have a Cartoon Department. Eespecially, considering the terms upon which it operates. Let us tell you about that. Recently a comrade wrote us asking permission to submit some cartoons and offering them to us free of charge. And we said, send them on. And he did; and when they arrived and we found them so good, we sent him back a letter of THANKS. And he came right back at us and said—I have some more and you can have them regularly—on the same terms.

Well, that knocked us out for a minute. But we recuperated and wrote him again and asked—who are you, that makes such generous and comradely offers, we don't find your name on our mailing list. And when his reply came, it said—I get a copy of The Toiler once in a while and I think it is a good paper, and if you will use my stuff I'll be GLAD because I want to help in the work you are doing toward building a real DEMOCRACY. And now he gets the PAPER each week and WE and YOU—get his CARTOONS. Can you beat that?

But while the drawings are free, the engraving company labors only for profit. Each three colum cartoon costs us nearly $8.00. But they are worth it we say, and we know you agree. And we want to have a cartoon in every issue of The Toiler during 1920—52 weeks. Eight times fifty—two are four hundred and sixteen dollars. Quite a lot of money is it not to spent in making a better propagandist of The Toiler? But it is worth it, we repeat.

Do you know that The Toiler is about the only paper in the country that has not raised its subscription price? Some have raised 100%. We don't want to do that. And one way to keep from doing so and at the same time keep up the high quality of the paper and keep the Cartoon Department turning out a real live picture for us each week is to establish a CARTOON ACCOUNT, to be filled with nickles and dimes from the thousands of CARTOON ADMIRERS. That's the best way we can think of to meet this cost.

We believe this is a fair shake, at least for the readers. If ONE comrade is willing to give $400.00 worth of service to The Toiler, 20,000 readers and admirers of his work ought to be willing to give an equal amount—to help him establish a REAL DEMOCRACY in America. What do you say? We are going to give you a chance to express your admiration for the work of The Toiler Cartoon Department. Use the Blank belo w.

WHO WILL BE FIRST ON THE LIST?

FREEDOM CURE FOR FREEDOM'S ILLS.

There is only one cure for evils which newly-acquired freedom produces, and that cure is freedom. When a prisoner first leaves his cell, he cannot bear the light of day; he is unable to discriminate colors or recognize faces. The remedy is to accustom him to the rays of the sun.

The blaze of truth and liberty may at first dazzle and bewilder nations which have become half blind in the house of bondage. But let them gaze on, and they will soon be able to bear it. In a few years men learn to reason. The extreme violence of opinions subsides. Hostile theories correct each other. The scattered elements of truth cease to contend, and begin to coalesce. And at length a system of justice and order is educed out of the chaos.

Many politicians of our time are in the habit of laying it down as a self-evident proposition, that no people ought to be free till they are fit to use their freedom. The maxim is worthy of the fool in the old story, who resolved not to go into the water till he had learned to swim. If men are to wait for liberty till they become wise and good in slavery they may indeed wait forever.—Macaulay.

Just a little tip to Att'y Gen'l Palmer and the rest of the Governmental persecutors. They have started out to utterly crush the reds. They MAY succeed in driving them under cover, tho we doubt it, but if ever they do of this they may be assured; the revolutionary movement will proceed as before, with perhaps an additional acceleration of speed. As long as socialist and communist locals are allowed to exercise their constitutional priveleges, the general public looked to them as a kind of sponsor for the revolutionary movement. They expected the radicals to start a revolution—and be responsible for it once it did start. Now with the reds dispersed the matter of revolution must perforce become a community and not a local affair, with the community, not the socialist local, responsible. How would that condition of affairs suit you, messers Sec'ys of War, Navy, State and Att'y General? That is exactly what you will get if you are allowed to have your way, and when Mr. and Mrs. General Public get their mind set on THE revolution, the puny forces at your disposal will be puny indeed. No—you had better let sleeping dogs lie—and let well enough (bad as it is for you) alone.

Albert Rhys Williams, who spent ten months in Petrograd and among the Peasant Families of Soviet Russia, says that many Russians cannot read or write, but he adds: thatThey can think and They do think.

A Debs picture will go well with the book too. It costs but a quarter more and is worth double that.

Prison Visitors.

The door of the jail corridor opened and a little party of Christian Endeavor workers consisting of three women and two men entered. They took up their station at the end of the corridor where there was a soft light filtering in thru a little barred window. From this vantage point they could see the prisoners in both cells. They did not speak to them however, but opened their hymn books and one of the men a 'sallow, sob sister, collar stiff' as Collins called him afterward, said: "we'll open the service by singing hymn number eighty four."

They sang solemnly while Rudolph lay on his bed and smiled, Collins lay with his back toward them in an attitude of unconcealed contempt. Jack stood facing them thru the bars with a sort of a Mona Liza smile upon his enigmatic face.

"Lead kindly light amidst the encircling gloom, Lead thou me on."—The church workers sang. Collins snored, Rudolph grinned but Jack's brow was knit and Rudolph swore after it was all over, that there had been a strange light in his eyes.

"The night is dark and I am far from home Lead thou me on"—the visitors sang, all but one. The one exception was an auburn haired girl about eighteen years of age. She had closed the book and frankly stared at Jack. He was rather a unique picture in his present frame; he was large, he had a great mop of hair, and a rougish face. His expression changed continually running all the way from pensive thought to boyish mirth, but never to anger, cruelty, or scorn.

The hymn over ,the white collared man said: "Let's pray".

"Just a moment, please," Jack interrupted, "why do you come here? This is no church."

"We are Christian Endeavors the oldest of the women explained, "It's our duty to come, now let's pray."

"Excuse me once more," Jack persisted, "kindly permit me a couple of questions. You say that you are Christian Endeavorers?"

"Yes," responded the aged and somewhat hatchet faced female. male.

"That means you are endeavoring to be christians?" Jack queried.

"No, we are christians." This from the auburn haired goddess who had not participated in the last part of the hymn. The sound of her voice even awoke Collins who turned over to look at her.

"Why endeavor to be what you already are?" Jack asked in tones so grave as to sound almost solemn.

Before any one had a chance to reply the white collared man bowed his head and locked his finders, saying: "Let's pray"—'Oh Lord'—"

Jack again interrupted him, his powerful voice resounding thru the building. "Brother," said he, "do not weary him with any more prayers—, from thousands of churches, thru millions of throats and hearts he has been assailed today. Does not your Bible teach you to do something more than pray? Does it not say 'I am wearied of your prayers'—the scent of your insense is a stench in my nostrils, and as he said this, his face was eloquent with thought.

The hatchet faced woman now lost all patience, "Young man" she fairly snapped, "we came here to hold services, not to argue."

"I once read in my Bible—'I was in prison and you visited me!' Holding service does not make a very good visit."

"But we have to do these things. It is our duty." The young woman explained.

" You have to?—"

"Yes."

"I thot your religion was a religion of liberty. 'Stand ye in the freedom with which Christ made you free'" Jack quoted, then asked: "Do you come here because you love us, or because it is part of the routine work of your church?"

"It is our duty as christians to preach the gospel to those who are in prison," averred the antiquated dame.

"And what would be the result if you didn't?" asked the boy.

"We would be delinquent in our duties, as children of God." This from the hymn singing male member of the party.

"In which case you would expect to go to hell?"

"We would be sinning," said the woman.

"And the wages of sin is death."

"But the dying is unduly delayed," growled Collins.

"You must understand that we can only expect to go to heaven, if we do our duty, as christians. We must do all the good we can and pray God for forgiveness of our sins," explained the young girl.

"Do you mean that you have to pray to God for forgiveness for doing good?" Is that the essence of your religion, or are you merely trying to fulfill the technicalities of the law? Escaping damnation on a plea point as the lawyers say."

"We would like to talk to you," said the hatched faced individual, but really we have no time. We must finish this service and get home."

"For dinner?"

"Yes," she agreed.

"Is that more important than our eternal welfare? Do you weigh our immortal souls against a hunk of meat?"

All but the auburn haired girl fidgeted. She took up the conversation in an endeavor to convince Jack that she really had his welfare at heart. "We came here because we hoped that our singing and prayer would make you better men," she said.

"For whom?" asked the boy. And there was something in the tone of his voice that seemed to strike a responsive chord in the girls soul.

"We want you to live in such a way that you will not have to go jail," she said almost plaintively.

"How can we help it?"

"By being gentlemen."

"On a dollar fifty to two fifty per day, with steady work only three months out of the year. With blind pigs running with the consent of the christian voters; run for the sole purpose of getting the weak ones amongst us drunk, thereby furnishing an excuse to rob all of us in the name of the law?"

"I do not understand your meaning."

"Then I shall try to explain my meaning to you. You come here to pray for us. I will admit that you are sincere. You would like to see us out of this jail; dressed in up to date clothes, then we would be gentlemen. The matter of acquiring the clothes you would not inquire into so long as we got them within the law. But you must remember my dear girl that law and justice are not always twin brothers Some day we are going to be turned loose. Let us say that we have been influenced by your prayers and the sweetness of your song; we resolve to become gentlemen but we are broke; the judge has all that we have earned. Hunger comes to a man that is broke the same as it comes to you. Having no money, and at this time of the year there being no work, we must ask for bread and frequently get a stone. How can we who are homeless ,penniless, and despised by your class, be what you call gentlemen?"

"I don't know. You talk in a way I never heard a man talk before. You seem to think that men are arrested by criminals instead of for being criminals," she said reflectively.

"Let me tell you plainly why we are arrested, and then ask your father or your preacher if it isn't so. You have no saloons in this state, therefore you people like these ease the tax burden. You people like sewers, sidewalks and water systems. They cost money. Money must come from taxpayers. Taxpayers do not like to part with the money They employ us during the harvest time and we receive wages for our work." Then suddenly changing the subject he asked, "Did you ever hear your father complain about high taxes?"

"Certainly."

"And about high wages?"

"Yes."

"Good—we get a little money for our work. The good people know that we have it. They run us in, and fine us indiscriminately. That helps out on the taxes, and enables them to donate more freely to the church. We are robbed by the officers of the law—"

"Don't blame us for that, if it is true," said the sharp visaged lady. "Judge Duffy is not a christian."

"By that you mean, that he is not a good man."

"Yes."

"Then why do you place a bad man in so responsible a position?" the boy asked pointedly. "He is there by suffrage of the people and I hope that you are not so pessimistic as to call the majority of the people bad."

"O, well let's pr—go," said the man with the hymn book.

"There's no use arguing. No good can come of it."

The young woman manifested no inclination to go, but said to the boy, "I think you are wrong, and yet, I don't know. I know that I love justice and right."

"You're a variation from the normal type," Jack answered. "Your elder sister and the brother with the book, are more characteristically bourgeois." As he pronounced this

THE SCRAMBLE BEGINS

The scramble for profits in trade with Bolshevik Russia has begun. Notwithstanding conflicting rumors of uncertain attitudes of Britain and France toward the Soviet Republic, the outstanding feature of late events is the fact that commercial corporations in all countries including the U. S. are preparing to open trade relations with the arstwhile hated and despised Bolshevists.

> "Bolsheviks are serenading, since the allies quit > blockading;
> Down in Petrograd, the Reds are full of glee.
> Since we need their flax and barley, we must call > it quits
> and parley and forget we had agreed to disagree."

Thus sings a jokester in one of the capitalist dailys. To say the least, we have gone a long way from military aggression against a neighbor nation to admiting the truth of the above facetiously worded fact. We need their trade, need it badly, and so we will just conveniently forget the past and proceed to get while the getting is good such part of their trade as we can grab off. Such is the turn which the military successes of the Soviets have forced the allied military adventures to take.

The world is just learning to what extent the blunderers who have stood at the heads of the nations have gone in their juggling with the fates of nations and peoples. Their undeclared war upon the worker's republic of Russia has utterly failed. They have spent billions and sacrificed many lives in an attempt to re-establish capitalist institutions there. They have caused starvation and misery unspeakable by the unofficial blockade of Russian ports and merchant shipping. Not only have they starved Russians but the peoples of the allies have suffered indescribable hardships thru the of lack of imports from Russia.

Having so utterly failed to crush the Bolsheviki, the allies are now face to face with the problem of what to do about Russia. Doubtless the militaristic measures against Russia would have assumed a far greater scale if it had not been for the opposition of the masses. For months the British workers have been clamoring for the withdrawal of English troops and for out and out recognition of the Soviet government. The blockade against Russia has reacted against all the allies. British mills are sorely pressed for flax which can come only from Russia. The exporters and importers of all nations are now wildly scrambling for first chance at the Russian kopeck. Faced with economic necessity, the allies are finding grounds upon which to conduct business with Russia. The American capitalist press is changing its tone in regard to the Russian question. Quick to record the interests of capitalist profits, it has changed front in the face of the inevitable and is for trade.

We may reasonably expect a cessation of the slanders against Russia. Trade covereth many sins and if Russian trade proves profitable, "moral" capitalist forces will find a way to acomodate themselves to the business at hand. The Bolsheviks have won.

BACKING DOWN

After all, we are not to have such drastic legislation against the constitutional guarantees as was at first supposed—or hoped, choose your own word. From town constables to Mitchell Palmer, the cry has gone up for more drastic laws against the "reds". Judging from the contents of the original bills, about every thing that any one could think out of line with espousal of things as they are was included in the prohibitive clauses.

Naturally enough, a great howl went up—not from the reds, but from what might be termed the innocent by-standers. That great element of liberal minded folks who constitute a very large portion of the American population, suddenly awoke to the fact that if the proposed laws went into effect, they stood a good chance of spending long terms in jail unless they immediately changed their ways—and thinking.

Jails are not to their liking, besides they are not yet ready to give up the old traditions of American liberty etc. So they got in touch with the proponents of the measures and explained that what was expected to be suppressed by these measures would only thrive the more if they became law. Apparently, they got a hearing and so some of the stings at least will be taken out of the measures or new ones substituted. Even Palmer himself, refuses to sponsor his own bill. It would appear that the authorities are learning a thing or two since the recent wholesale raids were made. A very substantial reaction is now evident against the use of such tactics against the workers. Many forces are at work which have a bearing upon the question. There is a large willingness on the part of many foreign-born to leave the country, which in itself creates a condition of the labor market favorable to the workers. Employers are waking up to the fact that labor is scarce in many localities. They know that thousands upon thousands of workers plan to leave for the homelands for at least a cummer's visit, if not for good.

Another feature worth noting, is the lack of interest on the part of the worker in his work. The workers are asking "why hurry"? and are refusing to rush out the poducts. They feel a growing resentment against all which does not give positive assurance of benefit to themselves. To fail to give credit for much of this attitude to what they know to be infringments upon their political and civil liberties would be incorrect.

But the old time liberties will not be restored. Liberals may sweat and fume and perhaps gain a point here and there, but the old traditions are gone forever, they have been tramped into the mire beneath the wheels of the capitalist olighacy and shall never rise again until the workers become supreme. Capitalism cannot afford to take such chances with a rebellious and growing class-consciousness of the workers.

SPARKS.

Comrade Louis Wohin of Weston, W. Va., writes us as follows: I am herewith sending you ten dollars for subscription cards. Send them at once because we must get The Toiler into the hands of the workers for it hits the bull's eye every week. As soon as I sell these cards, you will get the ten dollars back for more cards". And the moral is—have you got a few dollars that you want to keep working for socialism? If so, let's put them to work at once. Selling Toiler sub cards is the method. Order $5.00 worth and get some literature free.

Comrade J. R. Waring, of Kent, dropped in to see us the other day and spent a few very agreeable moments—also several (also agreeable) dollars. Subscription cards of course and some literature. O yes, and he promised us a dollar on the "Cartoon Account". He says they are worth the price. What do you say?

Comrade Fred White remits for literature and states that he is on the firing line in Martins Ferry. And we know he is. And say, comrades of Martins Ferry, he needs a lift, why not give him a boost occassionally?

Local Akron held a splendid Meeting on the 18th. Comrade Tom Clifford was the speaker and from reports, Tom did himself proud on this occassion. A collection of over $40.00 was taken and literature sales were good. A large number of the Bullitt Report were sold.

Referring to the recent raids on radicals of more or less crimson hue, a comrade remarks:

> "We can always get some more
> We can always get some more;
> And as fast as they can pinch us
> We can always get some more".

And we wish to announce that since the raids we have considerable more than before. Pinch us some again!

Are your DUES PAID for January? Better step lively comrade, February is here now. Don't get behind. And while you are getting right with your dues card, stick in a couple of Toiler press stamps. Your secretary has them. But they are not his, they belong to you.

Have you taken advantage of our book premium offers for $5.00 worth of subscription cards? Then you must be lonesome if you have not. So many comrades are taking advantage of these offers that we can hardly keep in books. Lenin, the Man and His Work seems to be the favorite choice.

Many comrades are renewing their subscriptions now and while doing so, add another quarter to the remittance or a gift to another worker. Good scheme. Use the yellow slips to their full advantage comrades.

Nothing gives better evidence of activity than a cash order for Toiler subscription cards. When we receive communications containing amounts like those in a recent letter from comrade E. Fick of Sandusky, we know that the comrades are making an aggressive campaign against capitalism. Comrade Fick's letter contained $14 for National organization work, $1.55 for literature, $5.00 for sub cards. That's how business like they are in Sandusky.

The Bullitt Report and Lenin, continue to be the best sellers among books handled by the State Office. But we expect that the new book, Debs, His Authorised Life and Letters, by David Karsner, will be a close competitor. Notice the adv. in this issue.

Remember this at all times. We will give $1.50 worth of any of our literature free with a cash order of $5.00 for Toiler sub cards. You sell the cards and get your money back.

Remember this also. Send $5.00 for literature and receive a year's subscription to The Toiler free of charge. You read both and get more than your money's worth.

A hurry order for $14.00 worth of dues stamps was sent in this week by O. Ruchtaeschel of Cincinnati. Some one must want to pay up down there.

Comrade Paul Luhn, secretary C. P. German Br. of Cincinnati states he is lining up a bunch of subs for us. We guess that there is some of the spirit of unity down that way.

Comrade Ed. Brendel of Hamilton is busy these days with organization work. A live C. L. P. Local is due there very shortly.

"In reference to the press stamps, I shall certainly sell all in my possession. We must own our own printing plant." This is what comrade Fred Wilson, writes from Girard.

Organization work is progressing at Marion, O., writes a comrade.

And we say again, that you will be glad to read a copy of Mr. Block and the Profiteers. Send a dime for it.

A Comrade from Fremont writes that the "respectables" are greatly excited over the appearance of I. W. W. stickers in the city. Well, well. Maybe they will get used to things of that nature.

Have you a dollar for defense? Remember Chas. Baker. His defense rests in your hands. Give your dollars.

Judging by the literature orders coming into the State Office, the comrades are reading more than ever, and at the same time are backing the Pamphlet and Book Department in good shape. Read what we advertise and you can't go wrong in your conclusions. Patronize our literature department.

If the fire fighters of Canton fail to learn a bit while at leisure, it won't be the fault of comrade Cook. Thru his efforts, the Toiler goes to each fire station in the city.

"Stick to the good work. You are getting more advertising from the plutes in one day than you could thru our individual efforts in a year," writes a comrade, and he adds that The Toiler has the punch that hits their vitals. And he sends a sub which clinches the argument.

W. J. Rogers of Battle Creek, sends in a healthy list of 6 which we say emphasises the fact that Toiler subs were never easier to get than JUST NOW.

A reader from Holland, Mich., sends us this with his refusal to renew:

"The Toiler is the most worldly and most un-Godly paper any one can ever read". Pshaw, just pick up any capitalist daily. We don't stand no show a'tall with them guys.

When it comes to rounding up new subscribers, no one can get past comrade J. F. Wertz of Toledo. A dandy list came in from him last week. This is not his first offense and we are sure it will not be his last. He's got the habit.

Speaking of boosts, comrade Thos. Robinson of Louisville, Ky., knows how. He renews his sub and sends four more.

A campaign for new members is in progress at Fremont, we are informed. With regular meetings and ever comrade on the job, it should be easy to build up the Local.

Six dollars worth of subscriptions arrived last week from comrade P. R. Davis of Chesapeake, O. A copy of Lenin goes to him as a premium.

Comrade G. J. Braun of Memphis, Tenn., is on the job again. He requests a copy of Lenin for his $5.00 order for sub cards.

Comrade Mrs. Slager is on the firing line at Kalamazoo. Three subs sent in by her indicates that the Kalamazoo list will grow.

Five yearly subs from comrade Fred Willoughby of Indianapolis shows how the revolutionary breezes blow there.

Comrade Metcalf landed a bunch of 8 last week. Beats all how easy it is when you just step out after them.

Surprising how the subscriptions run to bunches of five. Here's another list of five yearlies from comrade Glenn Dallos of Dover. Guess 5 is our lucky number.

Again, we ask, have you bought a Toiler press stamp for your red book?

Literature sales were never so good as last week. Besides numerous small ones, some big ones also arived. Our book and pamphlet department is growing. Help it grow by ordering of us the literature you need.

But if five is a magic number, ten is a close second as comrade J. F. Fugitt of Portamouth proves with a list of that many half yearlies.

But comrade Johnnie Nelson of Richmond, Mo., has them all beat.

Just an even 20 half yearlies he remits for.

Comrade Ralph Munding of Toledo orders the first copy of Debs, by Karsner. But he will not be the last to order this good book on the life of our greatest and best loved comrade.

Comrade J. J. Hoge of Bellaire remits $5.00 for the defense of comrade Chas. Baker which is the contribution of another comrade who refuses to reveal his name with the exception that part of it is "Joe". He is the same comrade, who matched a $25.00 donation for the press fund last summer, says comrade Hoge. We thank our modest comrade for his donation and regret that he finds it necessary to deprive us of knowing his name.

Recent contributions to the press fund are as follow: K. J. Dennison, Youngstown, 50c; Chas. Kistler, Fostoria, O., $1.50; Fred Hesse, Muskegon, $1.00; Jas W. Booker, Baileytown, Tenn., 25c; M. Knieser, Lima, O., $1.00; S. M. Korte, Wadsworth, O.; from two friends, $1.00; I. B. Hinman, Lima, O., $5.00; Sarah A. Rohrer, Canton, $1.05; comrades Long and Wm. Greter of Crestline, O., $2.00; P. R. Davis, Chesapeake, O., $1.50.

Dollars Needed FOR Baker's Defense!

Charles Baker, organizer for the Communist Labor Party, has been arrested, and is charged with violation of the Lever Act, by interfereing with the operation of the coal mines in the state of Kansas.

Baker defended the miners in the recent coal strike. For this, he is now indicted and out on bonds approximating nearly $70.000. Ne will be tried in the Kansas courts in February.

Money is needed NOW for his defense. Baker has always stood by the workers. Now the workers must stand by him. Let your dollars work for freedom for Chas. Baker.

No Revolution ever rises above the intellectual level of those who make it, and little is gained if one false notion supplants another. But we must some day, at last for ever, cross the line between Nonsense and Commonsense. And on that day we shall pass from Class Paternalism, originally derived from fetish fiction in times of unversal ignorance, to Human Brotherhood in accordance with the nature of things and our growing knowledge of it; from Political Government to Industrial Administration; from Competition in Individualism to Individuality in Cooperation, from War and Despotism, in any form, to Peace and Liberty.

Votaries of Violence—Who Are They?

— By LINN A. E. GALE —

"You are encouraging violence by the workers against the capitalists", writes a critic.

I am doing nothing of the sort. I am opposed to violence at all times. It is a boomerang morally and economically and hurts the user far more than the victim. All clear-seeing Radicals are against it. The thousands of Radicals in prison in almost every land, prove this.

"Violence"? Why, violence is the very backbone, heart and soul of capitalism. The workers never want it. But the instant that the workers begin to show solidarity and to act in unity either in elections or in the mills, violence is the first weapon that the capitalists use. Violence is the chief instrument of the capitalists and the last resort of the workers.

Why is 'Gene Debs, compassionate, kindly, forgiving soul who is loved by every man who really knows him and hundreds of thousands who never saw him in Atlanta Prison? Because he was an advocate or practitioner of violence? Of course, not. Debs has [illegible] and opposed violence all [illegible]. He not only denounced in[illegible]olence but mass violence [illegible]stomarily dignified by the [illegible]. And he is serving a 10- [illegible] term in the United States [illegible], the champion of the [illegible]cerated because he was [illegible]ace, by a government [illegible]nt to the capitalists, [illegible]nce!

[illegible] Kate Richards O'Hare [illegible] 10 years? Why were [illegible]an and Alexander Berk[illegible] Why has Congressman [illegible]erger been sentenced to [illegible] prison and kicked out of [illegible]ve seat to which his con[illegible]early and decisively elect[illegible] Why are William D. Hay[illegible]nd hundreds of I. W. W.'s [illegible] the United States under [illegible]ces of severity unparalleled [illegible] in the Germany of the kaiser [illegible]e Russia of the czar? Why was [illegible]r Praeger lynched in Illinois? Why were Pacifists ministers horse whipped, tarred and feathered and subjected to unnamable outrages during the recent war? Why were the far visioned Liebknecht and the motherly broad-minded Rosa Luxemburg mureded in Germany? Why did I and thousands of other "slackers" have to flee to Mexico?

The answer in every case is that the persons in question opposed the organized violence, the huge, horrible exercise of force that has been named war. They were men and women who believed in Peace and a peaceful settlement of the differences of the government of the world. And they paid for their loyalty to Peace by being slaughtered or locked behind steel bars or compelled to flee to foreign lands!

Who started the war? Who conscripted men to fight when they didn't want to? Who is responsible for the killing of 10,000,000, the wounding of millions more, the rapin[illegible] of thousands of helpless girls and women, and the starvation of thousands of babies and mothers? The capitalist governments of the world of course. Communists, Socialists and Labor organizations everywhere opposed war. Most of them yielded eventually and gave some kind of support but none of them did so willingly. They only acquiesced thru fear when they acquiesced at all.

Why has there been hurled at Soviet Russia all the virulent venom of foul falsehoods that prostituted minds could manufacture? Why were Lenin and Trotzky called "German agents?" because Russia waged war on anybody? No. Because Russia made Peace with Germany. The world has kept ignorant of the fact that she also tried to make Peace with the other countries, failing thru the treachery of the duleet-toned dissembler in the White House.

Always and forever the proponents of violence are the capitalists and militarists and their agents. Read the articles of Guy Empey in his magazine, "Treat 'em Rough" and see how he tells people to knock Bolshevist speakers off soap-boxes.

Read what Ole Hanson in Seattle tells the public to do to Radicals. Read the American Coal Journal which openly speaks of "the worthless lives" of the workers, says that Labor, as at present operating, must be suppressed" and that this "cannot be accomplished with too fine a regard for existing laws."

Read the brutal, murderous advertisements of Edwin Selwin in the Seattle Post Intelligencer, the Seattle Business Chronicle, and the Tacoma Ledger, in which he said of Radical agitators, "We must put to death the leaders of this gigantic conspiracy."

Take the recent shooting affair in Centralia, Wash., U. S. A., when four American soldiers were shot and an I. W. W., also a veteran, was lynched and his maltreated corpse dragged thru the streets of the town. The facts now show that the soldiers began the trouble by attacking the I. W. W. hall and that the I. W. W. members merely acted in self-defense. Edward Bassett, war veteran and commander of Bute Post of the American Legion, an intensely "patriotic" organization, says, "The I. W. W. in Centralia, Wash., who fired upon the men that were attempting to raid the I. W. W. headquarters were fully justified in their act. The evidence received at the coroners' investigation showed the same thing. A blind man in Centralia selling Radical papers had his stand twice demolished and his stock burned up, besides being once kidnapped in an auto and taken out of the county. Mobs of "patriots" in all parts of the United States—and the same thing happens in all countries under capitalism—are raiding houses, offices and club rooms, assulting and shooting people and destroying their property with cynical contempt for right and decency. International imperialism is trying its best to force the United States into war with Mexico so that it may exploit Mexico's rich resources without interference.

"Violence" is the very essence, spirit, brain and body of capitalism with its by-products of militarism and patriotism. By violence do the owners of the earth's wealth keep control over the masses, seize trade balances, dominate "backward" countries and strangle every outcry against their countless iniquities. By violence are men made to butcher their brothers in wars in which they have nothing to gain and everything to risk.

Sometimes, after patience has been exhausted, after the limits of endurance have been exceeded, after elections have been stolen, strikes have been broken, protests been sneered at, and pioneers of a Better Social Order have been jailed, tortured and slain without number, smoetimes, then the workers themselves resort to violence.

Can we blame them much? Should t surprise us? True, it is foolish and futile. But what else can be expected? And how week indeed is the heaped up whole of all the acts of violence ever committed by Organized Labor in all history compared with the monstrous mountain of crimes of the capitalists, kings, kaisers and priests who for thousands of years have filled the world with the woe and waste of their wicked and wanton wars!

What [illegible] irony for defenders of capitalism to prate of the "violence" of Labor in the aftermath of an orgy of international "violence" that has left the earth a charnel house of ruins and a sepulcher of shapes that once were men!

"TREAT 'EM ROUGH"

The miscalled Department of Justice which is really a department for doing the dirty work for the dominant class, has given the American people many reasons for believing them insincere. The Attorney General, a Mr. Palmer, who is rumored to have the pesidential bee buzzing in his bonnet, is alleged to have given as his reasons for the persecution of the reds, the allegation that the reds advocated the use of violence. That there are people who DO advocate the use of violence, OPENLY and evidently with the [illegible] approval of the Department of Justice and Mr. Palmer, (we say 'evidently' advisedly, for the culpsits have done so repeatedly and the department of justice AND Mr. Palmer and the whole army of sleuths, professional and otherwise have never attempted to bring the guilty parties to account.)

Here are two samples, taken verbatim from a magazine edited by Guy Emprey, and called "Uncle Sam," dated January 1920 and sold openly on all news-stands.

They are headed, "Treat 'em Rough."

"Dr. Mayo "sees science extending American life limit'. What we want to see is Patriotism reducing Bolshevik life limit. THE NECESSARY INSTRUMENTS MAY BE OBTAINED AT YOUR HARDWARE STORE." The caps are ours but the wording is surely a direct bid for the fanatical to go to the nearest hardware store and there purchase fire-arms with which to shoot to kill any one whom the fanatic sees fit to call a red.

Here is another one, a plain and open incitation to murder. "Far be it from us to advocate violence, even against Bolshevists. But when the only way to get an idea out of a man's head is to remove the cranium and shake the idea down the neck, what are you going to do?"

The Department of Justice will please take notice. The American people will also take notice that the Department of Justice is blind to uch open advocacy of violence beause it is done in the name of 100 per cent. Americanism.

Socialist Party Going Strong!

Special Correspondence.

New York, Jan. 20, 1920

New York after all is the barometer. New York gives the Socialist Party its national color. And it's not red.

The Socialist Party has exposed itself. All that has been said about it by its critics of the left has been proven true by its actions since the expulsion of the five Socialist Party legislators from the New York state assembly.

Coming close upon the heels of the red raids the news reached the nation that five Socialist Party assemblymen had been expelled by the New York state assembly. It was a deathblow to the Socialist Party until—prominent capitalist politicians lawyers and masters of industry sensed that this action on the part of the New York assebly proved the contention of the Communists that simple political action would never emancipate the working class and that the capitalist class dictatorship would never permit a working class majority in any legislative assembly to function, even in a suedo-revolutionary manner.

The "agents" of the master class wanted to do a good job of the clean-up they were making. And they went right ahead, denied representative government, constitutional guarantees, boasted liberties and democracy and everything, just exactly as they will again do at any time the dictatorship of capitalism is threatened. Wise heads among some of the capitalists and their retainers, saw the danger. They decided it was too early in the game to take extreme measures, especially against a party which was not dangerours, a party which is reform and moderate and a splendid safety valve to keep capitalism from exploding.

What underground wires were working between the Socialist Party leaders and leaders of republican and democratic parties only few know. However, as if they had been paid for it and handsomely, prominent lawyers and politicians of ruling class views began making public their opposition to the action of the New York state assembly.

Charles Hughes and the New York City Bar Association began by resolution and public interviews, to criticize the action of the assembly. Other "big" men lent a hand. Several capitalist papers of New York City decided to champion the cause of the expelled Socialists. All this was done to help preserve representative government — for a little while longer, we might add.

Had the Socialist Party and its officials acted independetly of this support which was coming their way from an enemy source, some respect for that party might have been maintained. The direct contrary happened. The leaders of the Socialist Party began bending the knee to the big lawyers who smiled upon them, lawyers which have and will again spit upon them. Hillquit, the big man in the party, salamed his best when news reached him that Hughes was against expelling the Socialist assemblymen. And when the bar association elected a committee of five, Hughes among them, to go to Albany and help fight for representative government, Hillquit, in a letter in the Call, graciously bid for Hughes support as one of the counsel for the party. Note that it was not a case of hiring Hughes as counsel, but a sheer compromise with a capitalist class representative in a fight which should have been made independently if the Socialist Party had any honor.

Now comes the New York World, a daily capitalist sheet and starts a fund for the defense of the expelled Socialists. The money is to be used to defray the legal expenses. Does the Socialist Party refuse this enemy money? The World itself gives $250.00. Ralph Pulitzer gives $100.00. And low and behold, here is Barney Baruch with a hundred in blood money made out of the war. Forward steps Hillquit again and tells the readers of this capitalist sheet which is gathering these dollars from enemy sources, how the money so obtained will be spent. That means that the Socialist Party approves of these contributions from the capitalist class.

The Socialist Party is done for as a weapon for the working class. Only those will remain in its ranks who are dishonest or who do not understand the difference between reform with its compromising program and revolution with its deadly opposition to the master class.

The Socialist Party is now a lightening rod for the capitalist class. From it will be born a Noske and a Scheidemann. It is going strong down the wrong road, not in numbers, for the masses have left it, but in tactics. Its flag is pink and here in New York it is turning yellow.

And if the New York assembly decides to make the expulsion of the five Socialist assemblymen permanent? Then what?

Order a coffin!

The Black Sheep.

word Collins turned over and stared at him, and Rudolph in the other cell said as he looked up to the big man in the other cell "Some growth", the kid's already using the lingo. We are all right to them, when they need us in the harvest fields, but after we are no longer needed, we are bums. If they saw us burned at the stake they would feel neither pity nor sympathy, but would solemnly divide their coat tails and warm themselves." At this Collins roared with laughter, while the visitors fidgeted uneasily.

"Young man," said the male leader of the endeavor squad, addressing the boy "you are here because you fought."

"And I fought because I was attacked, and I was attacked because I had money with which your taxpayers wanted to lighten their own burdens," Jack persisted remorselessly. "And I will tell you something else that you might as well know, for the knowledge may do you good. You come here as a matter of routine and not from a sense of the love of service. It is as much of a burden to you as it is a bore to us! 'Woe unto you scribes and pharisees, —who for a pretense make long prayers'. Don't come to us with your dead formulas, ressurrected from the tombs of Jerusalem. We are your victims, be men and women, and treat us as such."

"Christ never fought," snapped the older woman.

"Ever heard of the money changers in the temple," Jack flung back, "ever heard of white washed graves and inward rotteness. I will tell you ladies and gentlemen you twist the words of your God to fit the needs of your purse."

The girl watched him intently as he spoke. It was as if she were trying to read his very soul. "Is it necessary for you to be rough just because you have to work? Can you not be decent and mingle with good people?" she asked.

"Labor is the brand of Cain," he answered. "We come from afar to harvest your crops—we struggle with you to get what we can for our work —you struggle with us to get what you can out of our work. It is the class struggle; the barrier that divides the House of Have from the House of Want. But some day it will be different. We shall throw you off our backs, and help you to stand upon your feet."

The party nudged one another and moved on down the corridor—all but the girl ;she lingered and looked at the boy thotfully. "I wish you were not so bitter", she said as she offered him her hand thru the bar.

"Come Olive," said the hatchet faced female, as she fairly dragged the girl thru the door.

pressed and down-trodden as they have been for many years, the trade unions were the first to make a real fight for them. It is true the strike did not lead to a clear-cut victory. But what of that? The world could see that the effort was honest. And what more could be expected? The generous aid furnished by the commissaries (which will be continued for weeks after the strike's end) disproved forever the lying propaganda of the bosses that the unions were in the field merely to rob the steel workers. By this strike the unions have won the deepest confidence of the steel workers. In the labor movement the latter see their first ray of hope. Their attitude is that this is only the first skirmish. Later on, when better organization is secured, the big job will be done. They will make another try for freedom when they have recuperated from this one.

As for the officers and organizers who conducted the strike, they are filled with enthusiasm and hope for the future. They are proud of the steel strike. A wonderful thing has been done. The great steel industry, the despair of unionists for years, was organized in the face of the steel trust's bitter opposition. Every big mill in the country came to a stand-still on September 22nd. The impossible has been achieved. The citadel of the United States Steel Corporation was captured, even though it could not be held for long. And what has been done once, can be done again, and more effectively. No one familiar with the situation can deny that the prestige of the unions is now higher than ever before in the steel industry. Mr. Gary may claim the material victory, but the moral victory rests with the unions.

Will Preserve Confidence.

To preserve and to cultivate this precious good will and confidence of the steel workers, so that re-organisation may be hastened and conditions in the industry bettered, is now the big task of the twenty-four unions. For this purpose they have arranged to keep a large crew of organizers constantly at work in the steel industry, under the direction of the National Committee for Organizing Iron and Steel Workers. These men will, of course, do all possible to maintain and build up the weakened organizations. But their chief duties will be of an educational nature. They must combat the steel trust propaganda and prevent the workers from slipping down into the customary post-strike demoralization.

A bulletin, printed in several languages, will be gotten out. At least 100,000 of these will be scattered weekly throughout every steel center in America. Each issue will carry a striking trade union argument bearing on affairs in the steel industry. When a company lie is set afloat among the men, the bulletin will nail it to the barn door. When Mr. Gary "gives" his men the 8-hour day, as seems likely in the near future, the unions will promptly point out that it is the first fruit of the great strike and not due to an overwhelming generosity on Judge Gary's part. When a financial statement is issued by any steel company, its full meaning will be thoroughly explained to the employees of that company. When the United States Steel Corporation launches the company union it now has in mind, its men will be instructed how to comport themselves so as to turn it to their own advantage.

Gary's Absolutism Gone.

Enjoying as they do the confidence of the steel workers, there can be no doubt but that the unions will exert a tremendous influence thru the proposed educational campaign. The steel workers will be kept thinking alike and in a critical frame of mind. The power of such a great army of men merely thinking along the same lines will be enormous. Mr. Gary will find that henceforth he has to deal with men who know what they want and are determined to get it. He will be compelled to grant them concessions. His absolute control is a thing of the past. On the first occassion he attempts to foist some injustice upon his men he will awake to find them all members of the trade movement again, and ready to make a new struggle for their rights.

The immediate effect of the new program of the steel industry unions will be to prevent the demoralization of the steel workers, which would surely result if they were left to shift for themselves. The ultimate effect will be to reduce to a minimum the time necessary for them to recover from this effort and to get ready for the next. To carry the program through will require great exertion by the unions. But they are equal to the task. It would be a crime to abandon the steel workers now.

MILAN—Two hundred Austrian children between 4 and 12 have arrived here to be cared for during the winter. Vienna reports that 60.000 children there are starving to death and citizens of Milan are preparing to care for as many more as possible.

LONDON—The parliamentary Lebor party has apponted a commission of six prominent members to go to Ireland and gather the facts of the situation there.

FOREIGN LABOR NEWS.

WINNIPEG, Can.—"Thousands of children in Canada are being starved for want of milk," this is the statement made by the board of commerce of this city in commenting upon the shortage of milk in the dominion. "Invalids of the poorer classes suffer likewise. The human asset is depreciating and in fact in poorer centers is being stunted. All this in order that the foreign butter, cheese and condensed milk demand may be taken advantage of to make as much money as possible, for the Canadian producer and trader."

The report of the board of commerce closes with an appeal to the people of Canada to consider "whether we should let the children starve merely in order that Canadian dollars may make more dollars."

PARIS—Drastic steps will be taken by the Miners' federation to force the government to retract an order for deportation of Druart, a miner of Belgian birth, prominent in the syndicalist movement. Druart, a war veteran, twice wounded, was sent from the country and forced to leave his family because he was "a menace to public safety".

BALE, Switzerland— In opposition t othe Swiss Federation of Labor, a conference of workers' unions was called here, to found a unified organization of the whole working class called "The Federation of Swiss Workers".

THE HAGUE—The Labor party of Belgium and the Social-Democratic party of Holland have exchanged pledges of mutual aid in economic development and in protection from outside aggression.

BERLIN—The Independent Socialist party, through its official organ, Die Freiheit, hotly censures the attempts by the present government to cover up Germany's part in responsibility for the war.

Following on the heels of its expose of the documents faked by the reactionary forces to convince an allied tribunal of the kaiser's innocence, Die Freiheit reveals an attempt by Count Montgelas at a conference of newspaper men to gloss over the crime of the militarists, and show Germany blameless. This attempt to use the newspapers "as mediums for showing up the mendacity of the Noske government," is sharply criticized.

—BRUSSELS—The Dutch members of the Wood Workers' International worked all day Christmas for the children of Austria. They succeeded in getting their employers to contribute a sum equal to their day's wages to add to the fund, which aggregated about $1,600.000.

This action was decided upon at the international convention here of Wood Workers at which representatives of 11 countries were present. The union is opening homes and sanitariums in Switzerland for the reception of Austrian children suffering from malnutrition.

Danish delegates annouced that members of the International in their country were also preparing to provide for groups of children from the starving country.

PARIS—The Labor party of England will soon take over the government, declared J. H. Thomas, M. P., secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen, in an interview here. George Lansburry, labor editor, supplemented this declaration by asserting that the people of France and England must join to prevent the destruiction of the two countries by financial interests.

"The English workers are not Bolsheviks," he said, "but we are willing to have a general strike to enforce the policy of nationalization. And we are determined that Ireland be allowed to decide her own future."

MEXICO CITY.—More than $35,000,000 has been invested in the northern states of Mexico by Americans within the last few months. The bulk of the investments is for mining property.

MOSCOW—Courses in music are now required of students in Russian labor schools.The best musicians and teachers in the country have been mobilized as teachers.

Among recent contributors to the liberation fund is comrade Fred Meinche of Davenport, Iowa. Comrade Meinche is 70 years of age but he is still young in mind and heart as his donation of $11.00 proves.

PEACE AND TRADE WITH RUSSIA NEAR.

Urgent demands of commercial bodies to make State Department show its hand soon in clouded Russian situation. Soviet Envoy Martens tells how his work as business respresentative is financed with money secretly brought by curiers.

That the clouds which have long hung over the relations between the United States and Soviet Russia will soon be lifted, is the conclusion reached by interested onlookers at the senate investigations now proceeding at Washington, where Ludwig C. A. K. Martens, Ambassador of the Soviet Republic is being questioned as to his purposes in America and the methods by which his work is carried on.

Officials at Washington openly predict that because of the complete collapse of the anti bolshevist forces, and to save the border states of Russia from further chaos, peace and trade are at once necessary.

The Russian diplomatic situation will be cleared it is thought, so far as America is concerned, if Secretary Lansing replies to a letter addressed to him by business men seeking to inaugurate trade with Russia.

Chairman E. P. Jennings of the American commercial association for promotion of trade with Russia framed the letter addressed to Lansing, asking if the State Department would give full support and protection to a commission of business men whom the association has decided to send to Russia at once.

The letter also demands that the State Department explain why export trade licenses to ship goods to Russia are denied to American business men.

"Business men of England and France", said Jennings, "now are preparing to resume trade relations with Russia. There is no reason why American business men should be denied this privilege. We are not at war with Russia.

The association was organized in New York last week to promote reopening of trade with Russia. Forty manufacturers and exporters attended the meeting.

Senators on the Foreign Relations Subcommittee delving into Russian propaganda will be furnished with a list of American concerns which have closed trade contracts with Soviet Russia.

Martens already has delivered to the Senate committee a list of hundreds of American concerns seeking to close business deals with Soviet Russia, thru the local envoys.

Following Martens, the committee expects to question Santeri Nuorteva, secretary of the Soviet "embassy," and possibly two or three other members of the Lenine delegation.

A list of 941 names of firms in 32 states who have made positive statements of their desire to do business with Russia, was given to the senate committee by Martens last week.

The firms, numbering some of the largest importing and exporting houses in America, include almost every line of American manufacture, such as medical and optical supplies, dyes, paints and chemicals, agricultural machinery, leather, textiles, shoes, electrical supplies, paper, talking machines, stoves, automobiles, tractors, tools and printing presses.

How Martens got funds.

Couriers from Soviet Russia, daring imprisonment and death to carry funds and letters to Martens business offices in the Woolworth Building in New York, is the method by which his work as business agent of the socialist republic is financed, was told the committee, alst week.

Martens' business offices occupy one entire floor of the famous Woolworth building, where about 35 employes are busy carrying on correspondence with business firms relatives to the opening of trade. He is spending $2,500.00 a week in his efforts to secure recognition of his government by the State Department and to reopen business between the two countries.

Martens flatly declined to answer further questions on the subject of the couriers, and left the committee to consider whether or not his plea of "diplomatic immunity" from further examination should be allowed, while he went on to recount his personal activities in endeavoring to get his government recognized by the state department, and in placing provisional contracts for $25,000,000 worth of food, clothing and machinery with American business houses.

~~This latter effort,~~ he said, had resulted in placing two or three letters before President Wilson, urging recognition, though the state department has remained firm in its refusal to recognize him in anyway.

Out of twenty of the mysterious messengers who started during the last year from Moscow with funds and letters to him, Martens said, seven had gotten through the barriers of armies and international frontiers. Several had been shot summarily in Finland—"three that I know about," Martens said casually. Of ten who tried to get through Germany, nine were captured and jailed

The first man to reach him, however, carried $30,000 and his credentials as soviet ambassador to the United States. The couriers carried money in the form of Finnish marks or Scandinavian currency, Martens said, and had various varieties of passports.

Althogether, $150,000 had come to him through the underground route.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—A wireless from Moscow says a declaration signed by Premier Lenine, Foreign Minister Tchicherin and Minister of War Trotzky, addressed to the Polish on behalf of the council of the people's commisaries, invites a friendly settlement of all disputes and questions outstanding between Poland and soviet Russia.

The declaration says it is "incumbent on the Polish government to decide whether or not to make war on Russia. It accuses the agents of Winston Spencer Churchill, British war minister, and M. Clemenceau, former French premier, of endeavoring to incite Poland to a "senseless, criminal war against soviet Russia."

The declaration asserts that the soviet government from the first recognized the independence and sovereignty of the Polish republic, and that this will be confirmed at the February meeting of the supreme executive committee of the soviet. Further, it declares there are no territorial, economic or other questions which cannot be solved peacefully by negotiation, concessions and mutual agreements, such as are now being arranged with Esthonia.

BRITISH READY TO TRADE.

LONDON, — The peaceful invasion of Russia has already started and as soon as the ice-bound harbors are clear orders have been booked to keep great fleets moving indefinitely.

Hudreds of tons of Siberian butter are en route to England, followed by wheat, flax and fats from the Ukraine.

The British Foreign Office points out that, because of the favorable rate of exchange for England. traders will be able to force down the high prices demanded for various products in Denmark, Holland and Sweden. At the same time it is intimated that if lifting the blockade does not materially weaken Bolshevist Russia, full recognition of the Lenine and Trotzky government is inevitable.

LUMBER vs. LABOR

Workers! Judge for Yourselves about Centralia

As a result of the Centralia tragedy on Armistice Day one member of the Industrial Workers of the World, Wesley Everetts, was lynched. His multilated body was dragged back to where other members of the organization were imprisoned and the captives were forced to bury their desecrated comrade. Later it appeared that the victim himself was an overseas veteran.

Every known I. W. W. in town at the time was seized and jailed without warrant. The only local attorney who was brave enough to stand by law and justice was seized, and when a Seattle lawyer arrived to defend the prisoners he was driven out of Centralia.

Ten members of the Industrial Workers of the World and the local attorney, Elmer Stuart Smith, were held on a charge of murder. They, too, will be lynched—this time by due process of law—unless the workers of America prevent it.

If the lumber and mercantile interests of the Northwest have their way, the eleven men will be legally lynched.

If the "Allied Industries", the capitalist's combination in the section carrying on the open shop campaign against all labor, has its way—the eleven men will be legally lynched.

If the private interest that instigated the attack on the union have their way—the eleven men will be legally lynched.

The situation is not a new one in the Northwest. The Centralia affair and its aftermath are only a more dramatic chapter in a story of black reaction dating back to the days when the lumberjacks first asserted their right to humane treatment. No group of workers is immune from the attacks of those whose profits are endangered by any manifestation of working class solidarity.

The same interests that entomb Hulet M. Wells, a prominent member of the American Federation of Labor and at one time President of the Seattle Labor Council, and harrass the "Seattle Union Record"—a labor daily in no way connected with the I. W. W.—now seek to kill the eleven who await justice.

Workers! read the facts of the case, and judge for yourselves. The account that has reached you through the capitalist press of the country is one-sided, distorted, malignant. Every possibility of the truth simmering through was precluded by the immediate suppression of all labor papers during the days when stories of roving bands of terrorists were foisted upon the country. A strict censorship was even placed upon telephone and telegraph intercourse the night of the occurrence.

With the affected workers gagged and the public mind in a white fever of credulity, the reactionary forces were able to circulate a lying version of the events. Briefly, the charges made against the accused men are these: That two or three weeks before the Armistice Day parade members of the I. W. W. had plotted to kill ex-service men; and that in conformity with this plot they stationed themselves in windows and other places of concealment and wothout provocation fired on those who were marching in the parade.

Here are a few bare statements of fact. How do the charges look in the light of these?

1. "Two or three weeks before the tragedy," when according to the Mayor's statement "the plot to kill was laid," no plans had as yet been made by anyone in Centralia for a parade. The first intimation in any form that a celebration of Armistice Day was being planned was a small item in the "Local Notes" column of the "Centralia Hub," on November 4th, only ONE week before the unfortunate affair.

2. The route of the Armistice Day parade was a distinct departure from the usual Centralia parades. The I. W. W. Hall is four blocks from the business section of the town where parades are usually confined. In other words, those in charge directed the marchers a good distance out of the way in order to pass the union's headquarters. In view of the consequences we ask: Why?

3. Several of the I. W. W.'s involved, including the worker already lynched, are themselves ex-service men. Yet the only motive adduced by the enemies of labor to explain th act is that the accused men were angered by the uniform.

4. The uniformed men killed and wounded in the affray fell INSIDE the Hall. Does that look like a deliberate attack by the inmates?

5. Testifying at the Coroner's inquest, Dr. Frank Bickford, one of the paraders, said 'THAT HE WITH OTHERS HAD STOPPED IN FRONT OF THE I. W. W. HALL AND SOMEONE SUGGESTED THAT THEY RAID THE HALL."—(Centralia Hub.) "I SPOKE UP AND SAID THAT I WOULD LEAD IF ENOUGH WOULD FOLLOW, BUT BEFORE I COULD TAKE THE LEAD THERE WERE MANY AHEAD OF ME. SOMEONE NEXT TO ME PUT HIS FOOT AGAINST THE DOOR AND FORCED IT OPEN, AFTER WHICH A SHOWER OF BULLETS POURED THROUGH THE OPENING ABOUT US."—(Seattle Post-Intelligencer.)

Not only do these indisputable facts give the lie to all charges of a plot and deliberate, unprovoked shooting. They also show that those who are now charged with murder shot in self-defense—and that only after their property was violently invaded and their lives threatened. In defending themselves they struck a blow for Free Assemblage in a hall for which they had paid rent.

We must bear in mind that an attack on the I. W. W. Hall would be quite in line with the unlawful, vicious acts perpetrated in the past against the organization and its individual members. Imprisonment, lynching, tar and feathers, shooting in cold blood, destruction of homes,—every torture has been visited upon members of an organization whose legality is intact despite the efforts of an army of corporation lawyers to outlaw it.

When the excitement inspired by a corrupt press has subsided and America begins to think and see straight on the Centralia matter, it will realize the absurdity of the accusation against the arrested men and the horrible crime committed by the murderers of Wesley Everetts. It will understand that ten men would never plot to shoot into a public parade of hundreds unless they were stark mad. But madmen could not plot even a mad project. It will realize that no motive can be established for a deliberate shooting such as is charged. If the killing had been planned and unprovoked, would the plotter have chosen a vantage point where escape was impossible?

Workers! judge for yourselves, NOW, before Capital succeeds in strangling eleven more who dared question the domination of wealth.

Justice and law is on the side of these men. They stood up bravely in defense of their constitutional rights. They fought the battles of labor and are therefore marked for annihilation by the overlords.

CANON CITY, COLO., JAN. 16.

The Daly Record tonight prints the following editorial. The owner and publisher of the Record is Guy U. Hardy, member of Congress from Colorado.

"WANTED—A ROPE"

"When the 249 Reds were deported they raved and cursed the government, and vehemently declared that they would return and wreak vegeance upon every agency that stands for law and order.

"And they will return—be sure of that.

"There are only two effective means of curbing a Red—iron bars or a coffin."

Colorado has recently passed a law against anarchy making the advocacy of lawlessness a 20 year felony. Mr. Hary, however, being one of the eminently respectable citizens of the town, it is not expected that the government will bring any criminal action against him.

WHAT SOCIALISM MEANS

Socialism means that the true object of industry should be to produce the necessaries of life for the common-good and not for the profit of certain individuals.

Socialism would assure comfort, independence, leisure, and education for all. It would relieve industry from the burdens of rent, interest and profit which private ownership now puts upon it.—Manchester Labor Leader.

UNREST SPREADING AMONG FARMERS.

Farmers, in reply to government questionaries, show resentment with idle profit-takers of city; threaten to curtail production to get even with unjust economic conditions.

Indications of a wide spread and deep seated resentment among the American farmers against the conditions under which they must work and market their produce is revealed in the replies of more than 40,000 farmers to a questionaire sent out by the postal department. In fact, so threatening is the attitude of the farmers according to the replies received, that officials admit the whole economic structure is threatened.

A summarization of the replies were made in a report submitted to the senate postoffice committee by George L. Wood, superintendent of the postoffice department's division of rural mails on Jan. 29th. Mr. Wood stated that of 200,000 questionaires sent out into the agricultural states, views of over 40,000 farmers had been obtained, the intention of the questionaire being to secure suggestions from the rural producers as to ways in which the postal department could aid in the cutting down of the cost of living.

Answers show the major complaints of the farmers in numerical order to be:

Inability to obtain labor to work the farms, hired help and the farmer's children having been lured to the city by higher wages and easier living.

High profits taken by middlemen for the mere handling of food products.

Lack of proper agencies of contract between the farmer and the ultimate consumer.

Many of the replies indicated that the writers contemplated either leaving their farms or cultivating a smaller acreage because of one or more of these three major grievances and because of the growing feeling against nonproducing city dwelelrs.

One postal official stated:

"Such a condition at a time when the predominant cry is for production and still more production cannot but constitnte a grave menace."

Excerpts from a number of letters taken at random from the more those on file at the postoffice department, showed the trend of thought among at least a considerable proportion of the farmers of New England, the middle western states, Georgia and the eastern agricultural section.

"The time is very near," wrote a farmer at East Chatham, N. Y., "when we farmers will have to curtail production and raise only what we need for our own use and let the other fellows look out for themselwes."

Declaring that the whole onus of the high cost of living rested with the middleman, a Missouri producer advocated the establishment of municipal markets to be served by parcel post direct.

"I sell butter to the dealer for 45 cents a pound," his letter said, "and the same butter sells to the consumer for 80 cents a pound.

"You may ask what we would do with the middlemen. I will suggest that it be arranged for them to go on the farm and help produce things. I understand that they might not relish working fourteen hours a day, but if we get by the near future there will have to be some useful work done by every one."

The tendency away from the farm to the city was blamed by a middle western farmer for the high cost of living.

"I attribute it a great deal," he wrote, "to the good times in the cities. The young men can go to the city and get big pay for eight hours work, while farmers have to work fourteen to sixteen hours a day at hard manual labor. All of the young men in this vicinity of any account move to the city, and there are only a few old men left to farm."

Declaring that while the farmer had to take what the commission man and retailer would pay him for his product, he was compelled to pay whatever the dealer asked for his clothes, farm machinery and other necessities, another farmer said:

"Farmers work from twelve to sixteen hours a day. City labor works six to eight hours a day. The city man makes two or three times as much as the farmer. The farmer labors and produces, but gets a smaller return than any other class."

That's the English view of self determination!

"Zapataland"

An amazing flood of misinformation has reached to the four corners of the earth in the last few months regarding "Zapataland!', which is described as a "rebel communist state in the present day Mexican Republic" with a population of four million people and a history of seven years of remarkable achievements. To read the glowing account of this alleged Communist Utopia one would think that the combined dreams of Socialistic and idealistic philosophies all the way from Plato down had been translated into realty and concentrated on this particular spot on the globe.

In the first place, Zapata was captured and killed by soldiers of the Carranza government under the command of Gen. Pablo Conzalez a little less than a year ago.

In the second place it must be understood that the wonderful fairyland of Communism alleged to have existed in Zapata's territory was mostly a myth.

Even in the heyday of his greatest strength, Zapata never controlled more than a fraction of the land said to have been under his sway. Nor did he have four million followers or anything like that. There is no way of telling what is the population of the isolated mountains sections which he for a time dominated but it is not likely that they amount to more than a hundred thousand or two, acording to the most generous estimate.

It is true that Zapata had a crude sort of Socialism in practice in a small portion of the state of Morelos in the central part of Mexico. It is not true that socalled "Sosialism" was of any higher order than the primitive Communistic living that obtains among various savage tribes today in undeveloped parts of the earth. It was simply the Communism of native tribes that live in a tropical climate where little work is necessary, little clothing is worn, and practically no modern inventions or industries exist. Nothing more and nothing less.

The idea of such a tribal state being advertised the world over as a brilliant and striking example of Communism put into practice is even comical.

Most of this literary effervescence is directly traceable to one William V. Gates who wrote a series of articles on "The four Governments of Mexico" in the World's Work, an American monthly magazine in the spring of 1919. It now develops that this man Gates was closely allied with some of the most vicious and bloodthirsty bandits that curse Mexico and if he was not actually in their pay, it was only because he was instead in the pay of American capitalists who seek intervention in Mexico. By his own admission he visited leaders of various gangs of brigands and some of the rebel chiefs in an effort to arrange a union between them. His obvious purpose was to bring these minority factions toyether under some leaderstrong enuf and bold enuf to oust Carranza. There is excellent reason to think that Gates was sent to Mexico by American oil magnates with this specific object in view. He went back to the United States and wrote the series of articles mentioned, giving the American public a jumble of distortions and misrepresentations and even absolute lies that was calculated to demonstrate the important need of intervention in Mexico.

[illegible] dign, but wherever he got the idea the following description of the success with which it is being carried out in Soviet Russia proves how the idea may be made to work for the education and organization of the workers.

Lenin's first "red Special" began its work early last fall and is thus described in the German Bolshevist paper the Kommunist, as reproduced in the Stockholm Bolshevist paper, Folkets Dagblad Politiken, on Dec. 16.

The train which is called by the peasants and workmen Lenin's train has lately returned to Moscow after a circular tour in the western parts of the Soviet Republic. This train consists of fifteen carriages, adorued with pictures in bright colors with plain and vigorous revolutionary inscriptions. It contains a cinematograph, a bookshop, and a branch of the telegraph bureau, which at very station placarded the latest news and sent out bulletins with the latest telegrams. In this train were representatives of nearly all the People's Commissariats and a staff of agitators.

"The train was away about two months. It traveled through the Governments of Pskoff and Vitebsk, Latvia, White Russia, and Lithuania, and extended its journey to Kharkoff. It ered 3,390 versts. At all the places through which it passed tens of thousands of leaflets and proclamations made twenty five long stops and cov were flung out; it distributed socialistic or revolutionary pamphlets and books, organized popular meetings, lectures, and gatherings, conducted propaganda and educated and animated the masses. The representatives of the Commissariats who accompanied the train visited the Soviet institutions and informed themselves regarding the work of the local Soviet organs, corrected their mistakes and supervised

"During its journey the train distributed books, newspapers, and pamphlets to the value of over half a million rubles, distributed [illegible] 180,000 proclamations and leaflets, put up more than 15,000 placards, and provided 556 organizations with various publications. About 90,000 workmen, peasants, and soldiers of the Red Army were present at the lectures, meetings, aing questions. The local organization was informed by telegraph of the and gatherings; about sixty lectures mere organized on all kinds of bur train's arival and came to meet it at the station. Sometimes the reception was very ceremonious. In adition to its propaganda work, the personnel of the train introduced improvements into local organizations, listened to the wishes and complaints of the inhabitants, and where they ascertained that misconduct had taken place immediately proceeded to carry out an investigation.

"At present efforts are being made to organize five of this kind, likewise boats with similar functions for the Volga and its tributaries; also motor lorries, which mare it possible to get to places where are neither railways nor waterways. Before long a train named 'October Revolution' will be sent to Middle Russia and the Don districts. Two other trains, 'The Communist' and 'The Red Army', will be ready very shortly. The whole of Soviet Russia will soon be covered with a living net of similar trains and boats. Thanks to them, the centre is coming into close contact with the republic's remotest districts; it learns their wishes, answers their questions, and instils into them enthusiasm for the revolutionary battle."

[illegible] professors [illegible] their standards of living [illegible]. Have the professors lost their manhood, or is it that they cannot apply the economics they have been teaching in school? We have had arguments of this sort in the paper by professors who should know better; people are poor because they drink to much, or that the housewife uses the telephone to have her meat and groceries delivered, instead of carrying the basket to the market; also that the people should eat more beans, because they are more nourishing than cake and pie. We were also told that if we don't like our job and are not getting enough pay, why we have the liberty of going elswhere.

Miss Helen Taft also mentioned that men like Jack Dempsey get 300,000 dollars for one fight and ball players getting 120,000 dollars a season; now why does she mention this? Why don't she apply the teaching she received in school; that is that the professors should become fighters and ball players, they have the same liberty as the workers to change their jobs.

Is it because they are afraid that they will be called a Bolshevik if they demand more money, or is it that they are so muddled with the false teaching of economies that they don't know how to act. It seems rediculous to me that such learned men must have women to advocate a rise in salary for them.

Probably their wives will teach them the true economics, and some day, they will be on their feet again.

The same economics for the professors will work for the toilers, and I hope when the professors have found the true economics they will insist on teaching the truth, so there will be a much clearer understanding among the people.

Come out with the Truth, professors, be men once in your lives, even tho you may be called a Bolshevik.

The people demand the Truth.

JOHN F. SMITH

CORRESPONDENT TO LEARN OF LENINE REGIME.

DORPAT, Feb. 2.—Through joint permission of the Estonian government and of the Moscow government, Arthur Copping, a newspaper correspondent is about to visit soviet Russia to report on conditions now prevailing in that country.

At present, he says, the vital problem is not what did the Bolsheviki set out to do nor what occurred in the early stages of their power, but what sort of government are the Bolsheviki running now, and what are the fruits of that government.

In an interview, Mr. Copping stated:

"Since coming to the Baltic states I have in gathering information resulting from Yudenitch's advance, tapped a new stratum of evidence, hostile to the Bolsheviki. But, on working the ground carefully, I detected isolated facts of contrary tendency.

"At Gatchina, that beautiful domain of imperialistic Russia, south of Petrograd, what was my surprise to find the town and palace unharmed, and the abundant art treasures of the district in cultured custody.

"It was a tantalizing moment when a Gatchina school mistress spoke nicely about bolshevism.

"You must not suppose," she said, "that it is merely a system of violence and spoilation. On the contrary, its professors were idealists honestly striving to uplift human society."

"Then came a witness who amazed me by the nice things he said about the Bolsheviki from whom he had fled, notably as to infinite pains taken over the feeding, instruction, recreation and general welfare of children.

"Leaving prejudice behind, or at any rate, desiring so to do, I go into Russia seeking the truth."

ASSOCIATION THREATENS SUIT TO OPEN DOORS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 2.—The American Commercial Association to promote trade with Russia decided at a meeting here today to send a mission to soviet Russia to foster commerce. To its executive committee were left the details of the commission's personnel and date of departure.

Meanwhile "pressure will be brought to bear" on the federal government to lift the present restrictions against trading with that part of Russia in control of the Bolsheviki.

A suggestion that one of the members of the association seek a writ of mandamus from the United States supreme court to compel the state department to permit American firms to do business with Russia, either through the soviet government or with the soviet government direct, also will be considered by the executive committee.

That evening for the first time in the eighteen years of her existence Olive Anderson listened to the Rev. Mr. Goodman's sermon with critical ears; she was actually interested in what he had to say. She desired to learn and not merely to sit in church for custom sake. She wanted to know if what that boy had said were really truth or fancy. But from the parsons lip escaped no hint of the mechanism of man's social relation. His sermon consisted of the usual platitudes, "be good, do good" "contribute for the conversion of the heathen and God will bless you."

She listened intently being conscious of a growing resentment to the things the preacher said. She asked herself the question, "Is that man saying all these things simply because we pay him to say them? Does he dare to ask God's blessing on officers whom he knows to be crooked simply because we elected them? Does this man really sell his soul for bread or is that boy lying: At that thought Jack's face would appear before her a picture of calm power. She felt intuitively that the truth was with him and not with the preacher.

From the preacher her thought turned to her father; he cared little for the church; he was a man of the world. Her father had come to Dakota in the early days when the territory contained nothing of importance but Indians, mosquitoes and alkali. He had worked hard in this youth, selling whisky to Indians, stealing cattle from ranchers and later selling real estate. That was the business in which he was still engaged. It furnished him the money that made him respectable. He furnished the money with which his wife and daughter help to defray the expenses of the church. He had farms, but did not work them; they were rented. Thus Anderson was a man of business. He was expert in but two things, money and the way to get it. His renters called him 'wolf' and other choice names. His wife called him Gus when she spoke to him, and that was not often. Mrs. Anderson was a religious fanatic who could not tolerate her husband's materialistic attitude of mind. But to his daughter, he was papa. These two loved each other sincerely and devotedly. His daughter was his idol whom he tried to keep in ignorance of the business affairs of this world.

At home that evening she sat moodily at the piano and to played furtively, odd strains of songs and hymns, stopping from time to time, She pillowed her chin in the palms of her hands and sat motionless, as if gazing at something far out in space.

Her father, enthroned in his old Morris chair noticed her restlessness and wondered. He knew that she was deeply stirred by something, but what that something was he could not define. It hurt him to see her troubled, but he did not speak of it; instead he let his paper slip from his hands, and entwined his clumsy fingers upon his capacious abdomen. Thus he sat and watched her. He inclined his head at such an angle that his steel rimmed spectacles slid half way down the bridge of his nose, causing his large blue eyes to fall unscreened on the slender form of this daughter. There was a look of sincere love and devotion in his eyes.

Usually he would sit for hours and enjoy her playing, but this night she had about her an atmosphere that got on his nerves and made them tense and restless. Her mood even seemed to affect the piano, or so it seemed to him; the instrument did not play, it wept, And then there would be times that it rang with defiance.

He filled his pipe and emptied it into his cuspidor after one or two puffs; then he filled it again; his trembling fingers scattering a fine spray of tobacco over his grease stained vest.

The girl played a few bars of "Lead kindly light," and then walked over to the window and stood peering out into the darkness. Out side the wind was blowing a gale driving the snow in clouds over the ground and wailing dolefully about the eaves of the house.

"Are you not well Olive?" her father asked kindly.

"No," she answered," and there's a good reason for me feeling blue and down hearted. I have been down to visit the jail today. They have a young boy who ought not to be in such a place. He told us some awful things about our selves, and I am really afraid that they are true. He told us that our religion doesn't play a very big part in our daily lives. He practically told us that it was nothing but a social toy, and when I heard Rev. Goodman preach this evening I was constantly reminded of that boys words."

"I've heard of that kid," her father confessed. "Small Head and Duffy seem to be afraid of him. They tell me he seems to be well posted on [illegible] — but then I suppose he did it reading while decent people worked."

He had no more than said the last word when he saw that he had offended her, and Anderson would rather do anything than cause his daughter pain. At least he thought so, and in this he was perfectly sincere; he did not realize just how far he was bound by property ties.

"I think you're unfair to him," she said almost petulantly. "I tell you papa that he is not an ordinary hobo". Then suddenly changing the subject she asked, "Why did they arrest him any way? Why did they arrest all these men? Only a few of them fought. They say it was to get their money. That isn't so is it papa?"

"Well, — we might as well take their money, my dear if we don't take it the saloon keepers will." Then excitedly, "that's what I have against this church stuff; they bring young girls in contact with jail birds and gallows fruit instead of running their church show. Let men of the world, run the affairs of the world. A jail is no place for the daughters of decent people to be hanging around. A jail is a place to punish offenders— "then catching himself in an angry mood he suddenly changed his tone, saying: "then you must remember that those fines help out on our taxes."

"But it ain't right," the girl protested forcefully. "You rob these people out of pure selfishness. It is horrible. It's unjust. It is mean. I did not believe it when they told me, now you tell me the self same thing. I'm ashamed of you, ashamed of myself, ashamed of everything. It is sickening."

"Now, now Olive, don't take yourself too damned serious," her father argued. "You know that the saloon keepers will get their money as soon as they get out of the state, and they will make them drunk to boot. We just beat the saloon man to it and keep them sober in the bargain. We really take this money for their own good." Then, suddenly changing the argument he said with a slight expression of disgust, "I am surprised to see you sympathize with these bums, when its patently against your interest There ain't no business sense in women. I've told you that often enough. Business and politics is a man's job." Then tenderly, "You just play the piano, and sing in the choir, and go to school, and leave the hoboes to us. We men have to raise the money to keep you, so don't bother us."

"But if you elect officers for the purpose of robbing working men then it is they and not you who pay the taxes. I was surprised when that boy told me these things. And now I am disgusted, not with him, but — with every thing."

Anderson laughed merrily. "When I save sixty or seventy dollars on taxes and use that money to get you some nice clothes or fix you up a nice pew in church then its's all different, ain't it Ollie?"

"If my clothes and happiness must come from robbery I will not wear them. I shall go out and earn money for myself. I will not wear things which have been stolen from working men," she said pointedly.

"Not working men but hoboes," her father corrected.

"Not hoboes but victims," his daughter snapped. "Daddy don't say such things, you don't know that boy, you haven't heard his story, He earned his money by honest toil. Even tho he drank, it was his money. Duffy took it from him and you voted for Duffy knowing that he was unscrupulous." She said no more but walked over to the piano and sat down. Here she remained silent and motionless until her father asked her what she was thinking.

"I was thinking," said she, "That the night is dark and that those boys are far from home, just because we are too stingy to pay our honest taxes. I am hurt, mortified!" She arose and sailed majestically out of the room.

"Well I'll be eternally damned," muttered Anderson. "Women have no sense when it comes to business." He emptied his pipe, stretched himself and prepared to retire.

Olive spent a restless night. Jack Thurston had preached for her the one and unforgetable sermon. He had spoken the word that had touched the secret spring of her dynamic energy. He had cracked the enamel of her environment and brought into play the dormant powers of her heredity. He had made her happily miserable. Happy because she had learned the truth and miserable, on account or the dismal nature of that truth. He had fired the shot that broke the wall of her delusions and brot her face to face with the real and battle scarred world.

The next morning on her way to school she overtook her chum and class mate. Miss Tillie Duffy who was jauntily braving the bitter north wind armored in a splendid coat.

THE AMERICAN HOME.

The other day we saw a picture entitled, The Great American Home. The time was evening; the husband was lying asleep upon the "sitting room" couch, the daily paper crumbled upon the floor by his side. The breadwinner of the family has apparently taken flight from this world's sordid cares in the arms of Morpheus. The wife stands before him dressed for the street. She is upbraiding her worse half for his disinterestedness in the business at hand—a trip to the movies. The artist had depicted in striking lines the boredom that resides in millions of homes and the means by which the victims attempt to escape.

For we can but view the present day movies as little else that a means of momentary escape from a worse affliction—the boredome that arises from certain conditions of life. Seldom indeed, does a picture appear which has either the virtue of interest or education as an excuse for its existence. The cinema, with its tremendons possibilities for education and truth revealing, is used principally as a soporific to the working class. (I trust it will not be disputed that the movie is the wirker's theatre). A moment's respite from a dull day of drudgery, a tiny thrill to stir the blood a little faster, something to excite the mind; the glimpse it affords into another, and often, an ureal world; "a place go", this is the movie as it is. What straws the human biped snatches at before he finally succumbs to the almost irrisistable suction of the quicksands of common, every-day monotony and aimless living.

The other Saturday afternoon we stepped into one of Cleveland's librarys. It was a rainy day and we thot as we entered the quit lobby, what a retreat for an afternoon's reading. Most Cleveland workers have a half day holiday on Saturday, and we felt a keen sense of disappointment to find the entire library vacated with the exception of the attenants and one little boy and a betpectacled young man. In a ten minute's walk from the library, we passed five movie theatres. They were jammed. We looked at each "bill of fare" and found only the usual "wild west thrills," comics and lovemaking scenes advertised. And we asked ourselves, WHY?

But you are mistaken, gentle reader, if you think we placed the blame for this condition upon the American home. Not by any means. We are compelled by the force of logic to regard the home, whether American or any other, as a product, not a cause. If we are to place the blame for the aimlessness, purposelessness and general all around emptiness of the average human life, we will seek it in the general economic conditions surrounding the great majority. And, doing so, we find that the great mass of mankind are but tiny units of a great industrial machine, under its rule individualism never has a chance, the machine crushes it out. It creates automatons, mannikins, who have lost the power and incentive to strike out adventurously on untried lines. It has re-created man, after its own image—a creatur devoid of all save the ability to produce profits; devoid of ability to make headway against the benumbing influences of the machine life; an automaton which obeys orders, and failing to receive them, drifts without deep purpose upon whatever tide rises high enough to lift him out of his lethargy.

This is why the American Home is but a place to eat and sleep—and why the pitiful offerings of the popular movies find such ready takers.

UNAPPRECIATED.

Accept as a truth, the fact that the world has never appreciated the teacher. Also, make room for this fact in your head, that unless you can show the ruling class of any society that your teaching will conserve their immediate economic interests, you will be left to starve in the street, however great be the truths of your philosophy. In fact, you may consider yourself fortunate if you are left to starve in peace, lucky that a mob be not sicked upon you and you'be stoned to death.

The way of the teacher is hard—and growing harder. Just now there is a nation-wide agitation about the situation in our public schools. The teachers, who have heretofore pruned themselves more or less upon the supposition that they were in the "professional" class, are learning that they are yet amenable to the same economic laws as the day laborer. They have failed to recognize the necssity of amalgamating themselves into labor unions for the sake of self preservation. Now, that the economic shoe is pinching harder and harder, they are giving up their "profession" for better jobs. From the four corners of the country the cry has gone up that the teachers are leaving the schools. Investigations of teacher's wages and living conditions are under way and many are the solutions offered to improve the matter. Some are rather novel too. Out in South Dacota it has been proposed as a means of combatting the high cost of being a teacher, that they cut out the gee-gaws and wear plain gingham uniforms. But we think that as long as pretty young teachers can pick up any old kind of job that will insure silk stockings and such, they will hardly fall for this method. Pittsburg furnishes what looks like a business like solution. Thirteen men teachers there who were in army service recently, have proposed to the board of education that they be put on an army basis for pay and board. Thirty three dollars a month and board and lodging they say, is more than they now receive. In Indiana, many country schools are closing on account of inability to get teachers.

All of which brings to the fore the question of why teachers are not paid enough to enable them to stay on the job! The difficulty with our educational system is that the funds for its maintince are raised thru property taxation. Property holders naturally desire to keep taxes down. They hate to part with any of the emoluments that arise from the holding of property. They look upon it as akin to robbery. Naturally, they don't want to be robbed. We live under a system that demands of each that he grab all he can and keep it if possible. Naturally the social conscience is undeveloped. Teacher's wages are low because taxes are low or the funds badly administred. We are niggardly with out teachers because we have failed to develop a social consciousness which realizes the value of the teacher's services to the body politic. The fact of the hundreds of thousands of illiterate native Americans proves how miserablebly our present educational system has failed. As long as the funds for the maintainance of public schools are raised from property taxes, and the property owning class make and administer the laws, we will have but a makeshift public educational system with starvation wages for our teachers.

The deficiencies in our educational system will, among many others have to await a decided change in the economic system before they can be rigted. In the meantime, we hope the teachers will learn that they are but working folks and that they will join hands with the rest of us in not only maintaining a decent standard of living, but in helping to build an economic system which will allow the fullest development of education for the coming generations.

SPARKS.

If we had ever doubted it, we are now convinced that getting subs for The Toiler is dead easy. Why? Oh, just because a comrade out in Kansas sent in a bunch of 26 this week at one whirl. What's more, he promises us as many more next week, so we are doubly convinced. His name is F. Evans and he is a miner, which probably accounts partly at least for his activity. And we are brought to think that if one comrade can do this well in ONE mining camp—well, that others schuld be able to do the same. How about it, you miners?

Comrade A. M. Toohey of Toledo, spoke at Akron Sunday the 25th. Comrade Toohey reports a very good meeting. Local Akron is holding meetings each Sunday and they are proving lively ones too.

We want to thank the comrades who renew their subs for the many many "little boosts" they send us in the way of three months subs for acquaintances. We'll guarantee that those friends will thank them for putting them next. Every little boost means a move forward.

"The best in this country for the workers"—that's what comrade J. Manoyhovich says about The Toiler. Well, We'll agree.

Comrade Glenn L. Dallos of New Philadelphia, O., is in the field for Toiler subs. Two yearlies proves he knows the job.

Comrade Ira Jones of Millfield says the miners about there need The Toiler. Result he remits for $5.75 worth of subscriptions. Which would seem to indicate that where there is a need it can be filled. How about the workers you know, comrade?

Down at Huntington, W. Va., comrade F. H. Payton is making the fur fly rounding up subribers. About every three days we recieve a handful from him.

And we repeat here, that we want Toiler agents in every township. Write us, we will offer you a chance to do effective work in the Movement that will please you.

Comrade Carl Guillod of Canton remits $10.00 for literature and the defense fund. Good for Carl, we say.

An open forum will be opened in Youngstown soon, we are informed. And we say it is good idea and we request that all Youngstown readers connect up with the live bunch that are putting this across.

Sales of Debs splendid picture are going good at the State Office. If you have not gotten one send us a quarter and create a pleasant surprise for yourself.

How many Toiler press stamps can you show in your dues book, comrade? Get them from your Local secretary. Also and by the way, are YOUR DUES paid up. Don't sabotage the Movement by becoming delinquent in dues payments.

And we say it again with particular emphasies—that the way to make a movement grow is to arrest its adherents. We can prove it. Party business has not been as good for many weeks as for those since the big raids were made. Pull a few more like the last one Mr. Palmer and we will enlarge our activities another 100 per cent.

Comrade [illegible] of [illegible] cycle, states that he is [illegible] busy supplying [illegible] for the [illegible] but nevertheless, finds time to round up a half dozen subs. Every hour spent in this kind of work is an hour GAINED.

With emphasis, we state that the only thing worth being afraid of in this world is INACTIVITY in the cause of Industrial Democracy. Better fight shy of it comrades. There's a job for you and if you fail whom do you expect to do it?

Another order for dues stamps from Local Cicinnati means that the hall wreckers there have conspicuously failed in their dastardly attempts to break up the Local.

As an indication of the success of the Akron Local meetings, comrade Cunningham, literature agent remits $40.35 for literature and orders another hundred Bullitt Reports. Going some, Akron comrades.

Wm. True of Dayton is selling his quota of sub cards. We suppose this means another order for $5.00 worth more in the near future.

"Yours for many more," writes comrade J. D. Schieber of Payne as he renews and sends another.

"I wish that every worker would read such a paper as the Toiler" writes comrade W. S. Jones of Columbus. Well, he does his part with three yearlies and two trial subs.

We appreciate the cordial letter from comrades W. H. Adams and the goodly bunch of subscriptions which he sends us. Comrade Adams writes that even the comparatively independent mountaineers are waking up to the fact that there is something wrong with our social system under which the masses contribute to the welfare of the classes. He also orders a number of books and pamphlets.

A sample copy brought us his sub, Walter Brown, Chesire, O. He says some nice things about The Toiler. Thanks for boyh, comrade.

Say, wait a minute. Give this week's cartoon the "once over", and express your satisfaction by sending a dime or a dollar for the Cartoon Account. Of course if you don't like the cartoon, don't remit. Which will it be? There are more where that one came from.

Comrade P. Luhn of Cincinnati, secretary of German Communist Party branch refers to the Toiler as "an enemy paper." We appreciate the joke. Comrade Luhn forwards 6 subscriptions. Such enemity as this can be borne. Now Luhn has a copy of Lenin working in his neighborhood.

An order of a dozen copies of Bullitt Report to comrade Ilkenhans of Hamilton is positive proof that he is doing some constructive educational work there.

Order a copy of the Manifesto of the Third International. It's but 10c and the Party members who have not read it are missing valuable information.

Now, are we right when we say that comrade C. R. Denbow of Akron is a new booster. Right or wrong, the two yearlies he sends indicates that he knows how.

Comrade A. Storm of Niles is after them, too. Seven subs from him and of course he chooses Lenin as a premium.

OPEN FORUM MEETINGS.

NORTH CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OPEN FORUM.

The public is invited to attend the Sunday evening open forum lectures at the North Congregational Church at East 72nd and St. Clair Ave., Cleveland. Questions will be requested from the audience after each lectures as well as three minutes speeches.

HOSEA PAUL
Will speak Feb. 8th

Subject: Lincoln, the Man and the Myth.

Lectures begin promtly at 7:30.

It just occurs to us to ask if you are one of the lucky 25? You don't know about that? What we mean is, are you one of the 25 comrades who take advantage of our premium offers each week and get your choice of good literature for $5.00 worth of subcards? If you haven't yet gotten in on these offers, a good time to start is NOW.

"No other paper interests me so much as The Toiler". This word of appreciation comes from comrade Wilder of Norwood. He renews and sends three "trials" to others. We dont' know a better way to prove his words than that, do you?

Our old time booster J. S. Faubus of Combs Ark., is back on the job we note. Five hi delivers this past week. We wonder if he can do it each month?

A pleasant surprise came to us last week when the mail brought us a letter from our friend and comrade Samuel Sadler, now a cumpolsory guest of Uncle Sam at McNeil Island Penitentiary. Sadler and Hulet Wells were given sentences of two years each for alleged anti war activities. Wells is doing his bit at Leavenworth, having been transferred to the latter institution when the Seattle Labor Council, of which he was one time President, began an investigation of his ill treatment at McNeils.

J. W. McCann of Wampum Pa. sends $6.00 for sub cards. A copy of Lenin goes to him for premium.

To the many comrades who have sent us one or more subscriptions this past week, we wish to thank you all. It is the little boosts that count, for they prepare the way for bigger ones in the future. Keep on the job comrades, for it is by your constant efforts that our porpaganda is carried on.

Comrade N. C. Howell of Delphos N. M. will go on the road shortly on a business trip. A house to house canvasing trip with the Toiler and literature as side lines is his plan. Here's hoping he makes good, for we know that where there are workers there our message should go every day in the year.

Drop a quarter in the Cartoon Account and see the "picture" next week. You'll like it.

Ever hear a picture talk? Well, listen to the Toiler cartoons. Hear anything?

We wonder if the cartoons we print are worth as much to you as the price of a movie. What say? Let a quarter speak for you — or a dollar.

BILLY SUNDAY SPEWS.

The Columbus Citizen credits Billy Sunday, the notorious, with the following, claimed to have been spewed form his filthy mouth on the 15th of January.

"The next job of housecleaning will be to rid our country of this gang of good-for-nothing, God-forsaken, weasel-eyed, hog-jowled, bull-necked, rag-shagged, bob-tailed, riff-raff bunch of radical, revolutionary, anarchistic, Red, I. W. W. Bolsheviki imps who are a deadly poison to every element of American civilization.

"Then we can sing 'My Country, 'Tis of Thee' and 'Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow' with a new meaning".

Coming from a proffered "deciple" of the Lowly Nazarene, whose gospel was meekness and love toward the misguided, the oppressed and the outcasts of society, we desire to express ourselves as believing that Billy Sundays is just a plain ordinary skunk with the spirituality of a hyena, the sympathies of a snake and the intelligence contained in 1000th of 1 per cent of the brain of an ass and a faker besedi.

WAR ON IGNORANCE.

We have declared WAR on IGNORANCE. Will you enlist in the ranks of the ENLIGHTENERS? ORGANIZATION WINS!

Alwas does organization win. You know it, we know it, the capitalist class knows that by organization, the working-class can take charge of the world and all its affairs. That's why we oreach and practice organization — because it is the shortest way, in fact, the only way to win.

But without funds no organization is possible. To do our work effectively, and in the shortest time possible, we must have funds with which to carry on organization work. And we are going to give you a chance to help do this work. There are many ways in which you cannot help but here is one way in which even the hardest hit worker can do a little.

Use the blank belov. Build up the organization by building up the Organization Fund.

(By TOM CLIFFORD)

The Cleveland Press, running "true to form," has again demonstrated its ability to blow hot or cold, as its interests, or the interest of the class it represents, may deem necessary. In the realm of mental gymnastics the high and lofty tumbling of this bourgeois phonograph is in a class by itself. During the past three years it sponsored violations of the Constitution which reduced that document to a mere scrap of paper; it aided and abetted the persecution of those who contended that both the letter and spirit of the fundamental law of this nation was being ruthlessly violated; it not only winked at but openly glorified the mob, and spared no effort to condone the lawlessness under the guise of patriotism. In fact, during these years of terrorism, in which thousands of workingmen, in violation of the Constitution, were railroaded to jails and penitentiaries, no evidence was apparent that it respected constitution rights any more than does the ordinary bourgeois. It is only when its ox is in danger of being gored through the sedition bills now pending in Congress that it suddenly invokes the Constitution it helped to shelve at the behest of the master class. In a late editorial we find the following: "When force is opposed to argument, the result is tyranny." All of which is true, but it is also true that the Press never said so while tyranny was working overtime and then some in this supposititious land of the free. Free speech and free assembly is of no moment to capitalistic sheets like the Press, but when the freedom of the "press" is endangered by sedition laws framed by those lacking the judgement to exclude the latter from its provisions, old "economic determinism" rises to the occassion and emits a roar about "constitutional rights" that makes the solons at Washington back up instanter. As an exemplar of hypocracy the Press has all the rest of the capitalist "educators" faded to a finish.

But the Press is not alone in this seeming "eleventh hour repentance." Apparently orders have come from "headquarters" to assume a reactionary attitude and play up the Constitution and the rights supposed to inhere in it to check the fire they have fanned into a conflagration. In short, they have discovered that "too much is too much," and they evidently fear that the people will not stand any further invasion of their rights. Watch the editorial pages of the daily papers and note with what remarkable unanimity they sing the song of Constitutional rights. Of course, the only rights they lay any store by are time honored privileges of the bourgeoisie to plunder the masses and immunity for themselves in the practise of their nefarious business of deceiving the public.

Some foolish people are still hoping that our government will exercise some measure of paternalistic regard for the common people and compel the profiteers to be decent. What a wonderful thing is hope! It is questionable whether it be a blessing or a curse. As a sedative it might be considered the former, but when we assume a rational view of this state of expectancy the verdict must be for the latter. for hope is the dominant factor in keeping the working class in a condition of inertia. It behooves the master class to keep hope alive in the brests of the workers as long as possible, for therein lies their only "hope" of security. Prolongation of the era of ever increasing living costs may at any time rouse the sleeping giant of labor, and hope deferred too long may inspire him to seek a remedy at the ballot box. When that day arrives the doom of the bourgeoisie will be sealed and profiteering be laid away in the tomb of time. So mote it be.

Timothy Shea, President of the Brotherhood of Firemen and Engineers, is doing the bucking broncho act anent the Cummins railroad bill, and denounces it as an attempt of the financial interests to disrupt labor organizations. Well, well! Mr. Shea is getting quite pugnacious. Why should he expect these gentlemen to do otherwise? He has a "hunch" that when the railroads are returned to their former owners on March 1 they will reduce the wages of the railway workers and break any resulting strikes by fining and imprisoning the strikers. Sure thing, Timothy! You have the case diagnosed correctly. They will do all that and more by the help of the capitalist government you and millions of other workers perpetuate by your votes. By the way, Timothy, we never heard a word of remonstrance from you when this same capitalist government was jailing Socialists. Its your turn next.

Donations of millions are going to colleges to provide "higher" education for the sons and daughters of the master class, while the teachers in our common schools are quitting by thousands because of their inability to exist on the meager salaries paid. It looks like a systematic plan to impair the efficiency of our public schools so that the children of the working class will secure but little mental training and thus become more servile slaves.

MUSINGS IN [illegible]

By [illegible]

Sunday afternoon in January.

A typical Sunday afternoon in Chapultepec Park, the garden spot of Mexico City.

The golden sun high above in a mighty ocean of azure sky and fleecy clouds, poured its torrid rays in unstinted measure upon me as I sprawled out in dreamy, torpid ease on the soft, comfortable couch of green grass.

Some rods away I could see the continous stream of automobiles and carriages and fashionably dressed men and women passing to and fro along the wide drive that leaders to ancient and historic Chapultepec Castle.

A clump of bushes and small trees in another direction partly hid from view the beautiful lake, the lake house and the groups of children gathered at the water's edge.

An occasional tree, a bit of underbrush and a stray plant, here and there, dotted the slightly undulating lawn on which I lolled at full length in languid contentment. A gentle breze, faintly fragrant with the pleasing and delicate oder of Mexican flowers, lightly brushed my face at times. A lone bird chirped cheerfully from the limb of a nearby tree, relapsing into periodical silences as if lacking sufficient ambition to sing continously.

Half — dozing, half-awake, vague thots wreathed themselves in and out of my mind as cigaret smoke curls up one moment and then dissolves in air and fades away the next.....

The day, the scene, they very atmosphere, were all so characteristic of Mexico — the serene, tranquil, primitive Mexico of majestic mountains, winding valleys, unceasing sunshine and rich and prodigal soil — the drowsy, indifferent Mexico that lives and lets live, uninterested in the gelid calculations of modern commerce, the savage competition for profit and power, and the mad race for the capture of foreign markets.

Here, where I lay and mused, had once strolled the Indian aborigines, living in native solitude and contentment until the greedy, querimonious foreigners came with itching palms and feverish brows, to build counting houses, mills and stores among the beautiful pueblos, hills and plains of "Nueva Espana".

Here the liberators of the race, Hidalgo, Juarez and those who came after them, had looked lovingly on this land of wealth and plenty, and vowed to make it truly free for the humblest and lowest.

Altho a little way off gay crowds were motoring in the broad boulevard, dining in Cafe Chapultepec, listening to the music from the band stand by the park entrance, witnessing a ball game in the public diamond or watching the children speed across the open-air skating rink, latter-day civilization had made little impress on this refreshing spot at once so vernal and verdant.

An oasis of Nature, free from uptodate "conveniences", sordid shop cries and the bedlamn of "business", the very place seemed redolent of rest and repose.

The Class Struggle? There was no Class Struggle here.

War! These coquettish, laughing sunbeams, slowly waving grasses and whispering zephyrs know no war. They neither slay nor urge others to slay.

Only Man, brutalized and debased by a cruel, senseless system, stoops to such iniquities as wars. The blockade of Russia, the starvation of women and children, the financing of bandits to provoke intervention in Mexico, the sinister propaganda that would embroil the nations in another orgy of blood-letting — Nature knows nothing of these things.

What a relief to escape from the poisonous, pestiferous stench of capitalism and inhale the sweet, wholesome air of a retreat near to Nature's warm, generous heart!

Like this balmy, reposeful field, just away from the clatter and clamor of the noisy street, is Mexico — a quaint, primeval land of glorious landscape bright flowers, luscious fruits and fresh, health-imparting air that half-intoxicates with its delicious ozonescent — a country pristine, immature, untainted with the virus of commercialism....

Crude, archaic, uncultivated, is this "backward" Mexico of ranch and river and llano. It has no skyscrapers, no roaring "L"s, no money-crazed mobs that push and crowd and rush in never-ending nervousness and hysterical haste for the sake of the Almighty Dollar. Hills and dales still constitute the greather part of the country. Its cities are scattered and few. There are luxuriant parks even in the smallest villages. The humblest adobe hut no less than the splendid residences of Spanish and American arcitecture, has its flower pots, foliage and plants.

Let not the harsh hand of international capitalism and militarism profane this flowery oasis that, untamed by the tools of greed and uninfected with the germs of gold-getting, still sends its bloom out in the world-wide desert of death and desolation, avarice and anguish!....

Brisk, metallic voices smote my ear and woke me from my reverie — voices of "efficient", energetic business men absorbed in developing the country and exploiting its rich resources.

"Fine building lots this park would make", said one of them. "Of course, you'd have to keep some of it for a park, but it's a hell of a shame for it all to be wasted in this fashion.

"God! What a fortune there is here, with proper development and under a decent colonial government with Americans to run things! And labor is cheap as dirt here! '.....

• • • •

My musings were over.....

Capitalism is omnipresent like the Deity.

One cannot escape it even in a secluded spot in beautiful Chapultepec Park on a gorgeous Sunday afternoon.....

[illegible], The Workers And The Ballot

"The successful business man, no matter how wealthy he may be, has but the same voting power as the laborer. America affords equal rights and opportunities for all."

The above falsehood is a closing paragraph in one of the many leaflets distributer by the Loyal American League of Cleveland, the successor to the American Protective League of notorious fame. Leaflets of this character are distributed in practically every large manufacturing plant in Cleveland for the "instruction" of the workers along the lines their economic masters would have them learn. And it is no different from the others in the amount of falshood contained.

Cleveland has afforded some striking instances of the "power of the ballot" in the hands of Cleveland workers. Very recently the socialists elected two city councilmen and one director on the school board. After a short service in the interests of the workers, the two councilmen were ousted by the vote of council according to instructions from above. Their places were immediately filled by a republican and a democrat chosen by the council (?) About the same time, the school board member, A. L. Hitchcock, whose activities in the interests of the teachers and pupils had brought down upon him the hatred of all "business interests" of the city, was "framed" by enemies of the workers and he was put away in Atlanta prison for two years on a charge of obstructing the sale of liberty bonds. In this manner, has the so-called power of the ballot operated in the city of Cleveland.

Then there is the case of Berger. Twice elected to Congress, he is denied admittance by the politician puppets who warm the seats in that delectable institution. By this perfidious act, thousands of American citizens have been disfranchised, the power of their influence and their ballot destroyed by the dictatorship of capitalist interests. The Loyal American League may prate of the power of the worker's ballot and attempt to deceive them with their silly sophistry, but the wide-awake worker is watching events with a sharp eye and is forming his own conclusions and choosing his own weapons for the comming struggle with his exploiters.

We may also mention the socialists of Albany as an example of the questionable value of the worker's ballot. The issue there is not yet decided, but whichever way it goes, we must keep in mind that if the assembly believes it is a proper policy to pursue, it will at any such time deprive the recalcitrant workers of any political force. Whether the socialists are allowed to be seated or not, the issue will be decided solely upon the grounds of political expediency and not upon legal and moral grounds.

In the face of these proofs of the supremacy of capitalist interests over the power of the ballot in the hands of Amrican workers, can they be blamed if faith in the country's constitutional guarantees succumb to a swift and violent death? The workers have wittnessed repeated assaults and violations upon their political liberties and the supposed sacredness of the ballot. They have seen with what craftiness of capital-serving mineions their historic rights of citizenship were violated when they attempted to use those rights in their own interests. They are being taught that their so-called rights are theirs only when used to keep their masters in power and themselves in slavery to them.

The American worker is learning the difference between "rights" and "privileges" He is being taught in the hard school of experience that rights conferred by constitutions under capitalism cease to be of value to him in the struggle for a larger life and freedom. He has seen himself divested of these "rights" repeatedly. He is learning that the only rights worth any thing to him are those which he himself takes by his united power with his fellows. He is learning that his "rights" are merely privileges conferred by capitalism so long as they are allowed not to be used in the worker's interests. When an attempt is made to use them, they are snatched away and whether the "sacredness" of the constitution is violated or not cuts no ice.

But we do not mean to infer that workers should not use the ballot. Far from it. But we do assert that it has a secondary value in his struggle for economic liberty. As a means of propaganda, it has a very positive value and should be used to the limit. Let us vote as we strike—all together and for ourselves and if we are disfranchised when the ballots are counted, then let us tell th world of it and thus educate the workers in the class-character of capitalist political institutions.

It was for this reason that Gates painted Zapataland in such colors and ascribed to Zapata's little savage territory a significance that it never possessed. It was all a part of the American capitalist canspiracy to intervene in Mexico. Gates' campaign of misinformation was one of the preparatory steps toward intervention.

The Carranza government is by no mean a Radical but there is no assurance that if Zapata had ever become president it would have been any better under him, and there is little question that if Villa had become the ruler of the country, he would have inaugurated a series of brutalities as bad as those of Porfirio Diaz without the redeeming feature of Diaz' genius for construction.

In a word, Carranza is a liberal with good intentions and broad sympathies who has never been able to carry aut the revolutionary promise of restoring land to the peons because of the danger of intervention but who has produced a large measure of order in the long suffering Republic. He is not as says Gen. Zogg "a member of the Socialist Party of Mexico". There was no Socialist Party at the time of the revolution and if there had been one he would not have belonged to it. He is simply a liberal—no more.

Zapata was a native Indian with vague proletarian ideas, but too provincial to have been able to govern the country if he had secured the power. He was an ardent champion of restoring land to the masses and continued his guerilla warfare against the Carranza government because of Carranza's failure to accomplish this restoration, so he claimed. In relity Zapata would have been as unable to give back the land to the people as Carranza. Carranza's mere attempt to tax foreign oil corporations a little more has nearly brot on war with the United States. It is obvious that any steps toward nationalization of land would have produced still more serious results.

Villa is a drunken blood-thirsty butcher of the worst sort with considerable military genius. He is not a Reddical nor anything like one and any pretensions he may have made to that effect are simply camouflage to excuse his hideous crimes on the American border.

Felix Diaz is a nephew of president Porfirio Diaz and stands for the same imperialistic ideals as his czar-like uncle The other socalled rebel chiefs of the country are simply bandits who claim to be in revolt against Carranza because of ponitical reasons but who would fight any government unless they had fat sinecures under it.

As I have said, none of these men are Radicals but it is only just to say that the Carranza government is far more stable and democratic than a government headed by any of these other men would have been. Even if he had been given a free hand, Carranza would have done no more than install a mild system of state Socialism in Mexico It is not even certain that he would have done that.

Probably somebody will ask "What about Socialism in Yucatan?" This may be answered briefly and definitely. There never was any Socialism in Yucatan so far as the state government was concerned. Gen. Salvadore Alvarado, an ambitious politician, rode into power as governor of the state on a semi-Socialist wave and a whole state administration of Socialist officials was elected. Some excellent reforms were inaugurated and conditions greatly improved. One of the most important changes was the transfer of henequen groving from the control of private capitalists into the hands of the state which paid the workers and sold the crop to concerns in New York. However, that was as far as it went and the Socialist Party of Yucatan was immediately utilized by Alvarado as a political machine for the advancement of his ambitions to be president of Mexico. There are some honest Socialist left in Yucatan but they comprise but a small portion of the much advertised Socialist Party of that state. In the last election Carranza soldiers were used to assist in defeating the Socialist ticket and electing candidates of the Liberal Party. The contest was simply an ordinary political scramble in which the Liberals were probably as Socialistic as the "Socialists". The 'Alvarado experiment, like Zapata's imaginary empire was far from being really revolutionary.

There is a Communist movement in Mexico represented by the Communist Party of Mexico which is as yet a small organisation but which is steadily growing. The centuries of suffering have made the Mexican masses hostile to all form of capitalism and they are easily converted to Communism. Sosialism or similar philosophies. Systematic propaganda will bring about some vast changes in this country in a short time and the propaganda is already under way on a goodly scale.

But "Zapataland" is a pipe dream. Neither Zapata, Carranza nor Villa were or are Communists and there is yet no real Communist state in Mexico.

A RENNEBERG RAMBLE

We're not thirsting for blood, and do not fight,
With boms nor swords nor gun.
But we use Mental Dynamite,
Its a cleaner job and that is more fun,

Mans force, is but small with a dagger in hand,
And Ignorance can not be slain with a gun
But once you use Mental Dynamite
You can step aside and watch the fun

And here is the rule by which to abide,
Take high cost of living high taxes *) and rent.
Mix well with small wages rub that in his hide,
And watch it grow into discontent.

When discontent, has sprouted galore,
He is your convert and will see the light,
All darkness that was in his bean before
Is blown out with mental dynamite

TO MY SON.

— By W. E. REAYNOLDS. —

Truth consists of an accurate knowledge of the relation anu one fact in existence bears to all other facts in existence.

Know the Truth, the simple, true things,
Know the reason WHY men do things,
Let this be the rule of life that guideth you.
They have fooled you with false preaching,
They have fooled you with false teaching,
They have soaked you in convention thru and thru.

They would make your mind a garrett
Where you'd gabble like a parrott,
All the out-worn junk and phrases
Creeds, and ologies and hazes
That befog the minds of older men then you.
Oh, but can't you hear it calling, calling,
Like the sands of life a falling, falling.
Can't you hear the TRUTH a calling,
Calling you?
Know the Classes, know the Masses,
Know them most for stupid asses,
Who accept a faith for fact,
Who believe but dare not act,
Who can not hear the TRUTH
That's calling you.
The race, when young, possess
Little knowledge—mostly guesses.
Then each guess by sire repeated
Wilder grows—and slender—meated,
Till as lies they should be treated—
Nothing like the TRUTH
That's calling you.
Know out-doors in all it's splendors, know the text that Nature renders,
Know that God needs no defenders
In the far-flung battle-line
Or in the pew.
Change effects by changing causes,
Use your head, with frequent pauses,
To hearken to the Truth thats calling,
Calling, calling you.

"O, Tillie," cried Olive, "where did you get this beautiful coat? Isn't it just dandy."

"Yes" agreed Tillie, "but I don't like the storm just the same."

"Why not?" Olive asked.

"Oh, just because." Tillie answered woman like. "You see it drives the hoboes to the coast, and dad promised me a nice set of furs if he was lucky enough to catch another bunch of bums."

"Could you wear them if you knew they were gotten in that way?" Olive asked earnestly.

"I should worry, how they are gotten, just so I get them, she replied cheerily. "What care I for these floaters?"

Olive said no more. She was sick at heart as a result of what she had heard Jacks ideas verified from the lips of her father and her friend. She resolved to find out if other people thot in the same way about this bloody business. She would ask her teacher and the parson and every other influential man or woman with whom she could come in contact what they thot of it. She would not rest until she knew why that boy with touseled hair and steel grey eyes had to stay behing prison bars for the crime of defending his honor and his property.

Secret Couriers Cross Boundaries.

Spartacan and Bolshevik agents carry messages from leaders giving details for carrying on propaganda.

While a few arrests have been made of secret agents passing between Berlin and Soviet Russia, it is believed that many get thru the frontiers safely with messages for the Communist groups in these and other countries.

London repoils state. — Bolshevist agents intrusted with messages regarding sensational widespread Red plans have been for a considerable time traveling between Berlin and Soviet Russia on false credentials, it is stated in official quarters. The credentials they carried are said to have described them as delegates of the American Red Cross mission in Berlin to conduct investigations regarding the exchange of German prisoners mrom Russia.

These couriers, it appears, were carrying dispatches between Moscow and Bolshevist organizations in other countries, including the German Spartacides and the Swiss Communists. Lithuanian authorities discovered the illicit traveling after Lithuania's borders had been crossed many times and a number of arrests followed. Not all the couriers were provided with American papers, but such forged credentials were found on several of the prisoners.

Two men who carried Red Cross passes admitted they had nothing to do with the American mission, but in reality were working for the Communists. One woman, similarly equipped, who worked from Dwinsk, said she had been instructed to deliver documents to persons she did not know personally.

Most interesting of the captures were two men en route to Moscow by way of Berlin. They carried letters concealed in their neckties One of them was a German, and a member of the Independent Socialist Party of Germany, and the other was a Swiss belonging to an extremist organization called the Socialist-Democratic Organization of Young People in Switzerland.

The German carried a letter from the head of a Spartacist organization in Germany to M. Tchicherin, Russian Bolshevist Minister of Foreign Affairs. The letter indignantly denied the report that German Spartacides were counter-revolutionary to the Russian Bolsheviki. It declared that Karl Radek (the Bolshevist propagandist who recently left Berlin) could testify to the writer's communist sympathies. It was said further by the writer that he was arranging with the Russian Bolshevik Zinovieff with regard to spreading communist propaganda in all parts of the world by special courier service from Berlin.

VANDERLIP PREDICTS EUROPEAN CRISIS.

Food Situation Certain to be Extreme Before Harvest.

Believes United States Should Aid Foreign Nations—Conceives Revolt in Germany.

Basing his predictions on economic factors which he said were clearly observable, Frank A. Vanderlip, former President of the National City Bank, claims that dire times were near for Europe. With countries on the other side of the Atlantic facing an inflated currency and an unwillingness on the part of other nations to extend credit to them, he said, there was reason to believe the present crisis would be more acute. Mr. Vanderlip believed the United States, as the only solvent country in the world, should have the ability to assume world leadership. What the world needed was moral leadership, he maintained, and it was practically up to us to aid in the rehabilitation of the other countries.

Mr. Vanderlip said, that when he assumed the role of a prophet last year on his return from Europe he was termed a pessimist. The march of events since then substantiated his predictions as to what was going to happen on the other side, he said.

"APPALLING SITUATION."

"The same conditions are present now, except they point to a worse condition," he said. "The food situation in Central Europe is certain to become extreme between now and the next harvest. There is an appalling situation just ahead in Poland, Austria and Armenia There political outlook is portentous. Look at Germany, with her indefinite indemnities, disorganized politically. Then there is Poland, hungering without the means of obtaining credit to alleviate this want, presenting the possibilities or a political revolution.

"It is conceivable that there will be a political revolution in Germany, Bolshevist in character, which will hold out a friendly hand to Soviet Russia. What we should have done years ago to remedy all this trouble was to make loans, but not through the Government. I say this because our Government has loaned $10,000,000,000 to nations which think they ought to pay it back And there is something to be said on their side, too, as many of them can't pay it back."

Mr. Vanderlip went into detail to explain how inflation was brought about through the printing of paper money not backed by reserve. He traced the credit system from its earliest beginning to the present time and showed how credits had been expanded to the breaking point. Here in America the expansion had not quite reached the limit allowed, he said but the effect of the increases was the basis of the high cost of living. He declared that this country should take note of the results of over expansion and not bring about a similar crisis here.

GITLOW FOUND GUILTY.

Summing up in his own behelf, Benjamin Gitlow, former Socialist Assemblyman on trial before Justice Bartov S. Weeks on a charge of criminal anarchy, last week asserted that the revolutionary principles of the Left Wing Socialist Party are the principles he believes in:

"I will fight for those principles." Gitlow added. "My life is devoted to them. I ask no clemency. Regardless of your verdict I claim that these principles are correct."

The defendant was permitted by Justice Weeks to make the summing up address, despite the fact that Gitlow did not take the witness stand during the trial, and therefore had not been subjected to any cross-examination.

"It is an unusual request," said Justice Weeks, "but is not to be denied this time."

The Justice cautioned Gitlow not to make any statements not bassed on evidence submitted at the trial. Gitlow disregarded the warning, however, with the result that he had several clashes with the Court, after the last of which the defendant ended his address.

"I'M A REVOLUTIONIST."

"I admit that in the eyes of present day society I am a revolutionist" Gitlow asserted.

Judge Weeks banged on the bench with his gavel.

"Mr. Gitlow, you are not permitted to give your views and beliefs," said the court.

"I'll try to make my remarks impersonal," said Gitlow. "Now in the United States all of our banks, factories and mines are maintained for private advantage. Suppose John D. Rockefeller with all his bonds, stocks and gold, went to the Sahara desert. Do you think he could get for himself the comforts of life? He could look at his mountains of gold, but he could not buy himself a drink."

Gitlow then launched into a state-

No Use Calling This Cop.

The 'Cost of Living' and The Workers.

A news dispatch states that the Department of Labor has sent a detachment of secret agents into 30 industrial centers of the country on an investigation of the costs of about every thing ordinary humans use in their daily lives with the exception of food. Why food is excepted, we do not know, unles it is that the Department considers food among the luxuries, too high in price for the average individual to aspire to.

There seem to be unlimited occasions for "investigation" these times. About every department of the national government is making from one to 57 varieties every day. Some six months ago, the government heads, with Woodrow in the lead and every little aping politician, following, essayed to engage in mortal combat with the Giant, familiarly known as H. C. of L.: It was a great fight. Perhaps no other governmental affort was ever accompanied with as much noise, bluster and general hullabaloo as was Wilson's war upon the high cost of living. The government unloaded all its surplus war stocks of food upon the market in order to reestablish the law of supply and demand in the markets. Governmental price fixin the markets. Governmental price fixing was again put in practice, and it looked on the sufrace tho Goliath would surely receive a fatal blow from the hand of Woodrow, the valiant and virtuous.

But have you noticed any slump in the price of any thing you use to keep your self above ground? We doubt if you can name three articles which are a penny cheaper now that when Wilson and Goliath locked horns. Just consider the following inspiring figures for a moment and ask yourself if Wilson and his kind, by their methods are likely to create any change favorable to you?

The price of clothing is still making enormous advances, but the American Woolen Co. made a cleaning of 56 per cent in 1917 and 1918. There can hardly be said to be a shortage of cotton with 11,000,000 bales plus 3,000,000 left over from 1918, but this does not stop the speculators from boosting the cotton crop values 50,000,000 or more in a day. In one week, while the war was on, they boosted it one half a billion dollars. No reason here to wonder why cotton costs more now than silk used to

A 50 per cent increase in the price of shoes by next summer is predicted by one of the largest shoe manufacturers. At the same time, leather companies and shoe manufacturers are declaring "extra" divindends. As a matter of fact, with each "shortage" in any line of commodities which is said to occur, the stock of all companies dealing in that line at once goes up in price.

From July of 1914, to November 1919, food prices advanced 92 per cent, clothing 135 per cent, fuel 48 per cent and rent 38 per cent.

Just now there is said to be a "sugar shortage". The increase in price will add a billion or so to the previous robberies of the gentlemen whose private control of the necessities of life enable them to extort almost at will such huge sums from their victims.

Turnig to the cases which the government has started against the profiteers who have been caught in the wide meshes of the anti- profiteering laws, we find that there have been 179 alleged profiteers nabbed. In but three cases fines and sentences were imposed.

The government was exceedingly harsh in its traatment of these thieves as is seen in the punishments meted out. One was fined $100.00 and spent a few days in jail. Another paid a fine of $250.00 and spent three months behind the bars. The other drew a $500.00 fine and six months.

LEND A HAND!

We've a few questions which we want to ask every reader of The Toiler—every Party member, every radical who reads these paragraphs, every thinking worker who lifts his eyes from his work long enough to catch a glimps of a better day for Labor.

We realize that there is a peculiar state of mind among America's workers just now. Labor is in a state of revolt, but it has not found the methods by which to cope with the decaying institutions of the capitalist system and the old forms of labor organization. It is earnestly searching for the way out, searching for the proper method by which to break forever with the slavery of the past and present. It is groping, often in the dark, with eyes blinded by ancient superstitions and fraudulent teachings for the sword with which to cut the chains that bind it.

Labor will find the sword to cut its chains. It will lose many battles with capital, but each lost strike will prove to be a lesson that will teach the true meaning of the Labor struggle, It will lose many skirmishes—but it will win the war, it will win in the end. The future belongs to Labor and no matter what bitter defeats are ours, we must rise again ready to serve the Cause of Emancipation.

The master class realizes that Labor is in revolt. It is seeking by various means to curb and control this revolutionary tide. But its methods will be in vain. Whether it attempts a policy of repressession, as some advocate, or whether it establishes a system of paternalism toward Labor, the result will be the same. Capitalism's hordes of parasites will be forced to dismount from the back of Labor and to take their places in the ranks of useful producers. This must be the final result. Labor will not be beaten, it will prove the victor.

We call upon every worker who reads these lines to engage in this struggle against the exploiting class. We call upon you to unite with the revolutionary elements of this country for the overthrow of the capitalist system of production and the establishment of working-class control of industry. We call upon you to LEND A HAND in the work of the Revolutionary Movement. We ask you to not delay for one moment the help which your activity will give in this battle of Labor for a better life.

Whether you are a "red" of just a "radical", or whether or not you have classified yourself as either, we say to you—if you find anything good in The Toiler to give it your support. If you don't find it good, we know you won't support it, but if you do, we know that you will find your place in the ranks of those who stand behind us with their support. Don't fail to give your little, for it, multiplied by the same from many others, spells continuance and in the end success. We are fighting your fight. We want you to back us up with that which makes it possible to keep up our present high standard. We want the subscriptions which you can get, the dollars which you can give.

Nothing could give a longer lease of life to the parasites who fatten upon the profits wrung from your sweat and toil than the destruction of the worker's press—The Toiler among them. From more than one source the word has reached us that certain semi-official government agents were "going to get" the editor. Devious and dark methods have been used by those in governmental authority in more than one attempt to destroy this paper. Intimidation has been practiced, open threats of business losses have been made against those with whom we publish.

We are not afraid of their damned jails, nor of anything else which they can hand us. We are afraid of but one thing, the inactivity and lethargy of the workers. This is the only thing which can injure us, it is the only thing to fear. And yet, such a fear SHOULD be groundless. There need be no reason for it in fact. For we know that there are hundreds, yes, thousands of wide awake workers whose hearts and souls are in the Revolucionary Movement. We know that they are ready and willing to give time, energy and money for the Cause. And we want every one of you who read this, and every other reader who finds any good in The Toiler to begin AT ONCE a campaign of support and subscription getting for this paper. There is not a locality anywhere in this country where the fires of revolt are not seething. There is not a locality where readers for it cannot be obtained. And there is not a locality where it will not prove a means of inspiration and development to the Revolutionary Cause.

We call upon our readers to begin to-doy, each one in his own way, a campaign for subscriptions and support of The Toiler. If we are doing the work you want done—support us, help us to do it better. Lend a hand! Give us your support. Join the ranks of those who are doing things. Back up the Movement for working-class emancipation.

If you believe we are a worthy factor in the worker's struggle for emancipation, you should lend a helping hand in the work.

[illegible] But what?

Trade with the people but don't trade with the soviets!

Make a decision and reverse it and make another reversible decision.

Send a "strong armed force" into the Caucasus because the Bolshevists are menacing India.

The whole tragic farce reminds one of the celebrated rat and mouse convention. A certain cat noted for its prowess as a mouser and rat-catcher created such a wholesale depletion of the rodent ranks that the rats and mice called a convention to discuss ways and means whereby the depredations caused by the cat might be avoided. After much discussion of many plans and schemes it was finally decided that the best thing to do under the circumstances would be to put a bell upon the cat so all would know ot its approach in time to make their escape.

It was a lovely scheme but when volunteers were called for to place the bell upon the cat, lo and behold the rats and mice were scattered and none could be found.

Moral. Wanted,—Somebody to put a bell on the Bolsheviks.

If the Bolsheviks menace India, are they menacing the Indian PEOPLE or are the menacing the RULE of the Indian People by England? And if England feels that her divine right to rob and rule the people of India is endangered, why doesn't England protect her own interests? 'Twas always a hobby of England to get somebody else to pull chestnuts out of the fire for her.

Wages, the sugar coating which makes a capitalist job endurable are [illegible]

Wages are determined by the average cost of production of labor power. This not only includes the day-by-day production of labor power, but also the cost of rearing a family of children to REPLACE those worn out and thrown upon the scrap heap of industry. In the past it has been a clever scheme of the employing capitalists to import their laborers already grown, with the cost of their up-bringing paid upon a foreign soil. All that they had to pay those 'ignorant foreigners' was enough to reproduce their day-by-day labor power.

Now, when the foreigner is no longer ignorant but insists upon a wage sufficient to enable him to support a family in decency, —Ah! That is a different story. He is branded a red and his deportation "back to where he came from" is asked. Back to where he was BROUGHT from, would be a term more nearly correct.

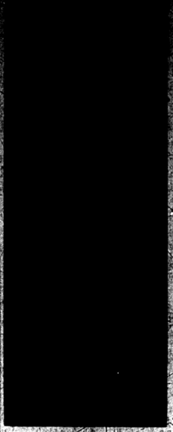
How quickly Anciant History is made!

[illegible] No name in history ever had pronounced upon it the anathemas which have poured upon this name. None ever wielded as great an influence upon the affairs of mankind as this simple Russian word. It has been cursed in America alone, numberless millions of times by the hired dames who scribble the made-to-order editorials of the prostitute press.

But while capitalist hirelings may rend their hair in agony for a new adjective to apply to Lenin and the principles upon which his Social Democracy is based, the world's workers are learning to pronounce it with pride and hope and longing. Russia stands for all that is hopeful to Labor and Labor's millions are turning their faces toward the land of Lenin as the sower turneth his face to the morning sun.

There are many names which but a year ago were resounding thru the world as great and good. To-day, they are but as sounding brass. Abhorred by the masses whom they betrayed, they grow fainter and fainter as they pass down the corridors of time. The world is learning to pronounce new names and leading them all is—LENIN



This picture of Lenin, standing in the countyyard of the Cremlin at Moscow, was recently brought to America by Isaac McBride.

Russian Trade Regulations.

Reports are current that $100,000,000 worth of buisiness has been placed by Ruzsian representatives with American firms and that the purshasers, are willing to deposit cash in American banks to cover their orders for the manufactured articles which the Russian people are said to be so sorely in need of. But the policy pursued by our State Department of refusing trade licenses has hampered our manufacturers from exporting their products. If the reports are true, that the allied countries and even Germany have resumed trade relations with Russia, then our Government should adopt a similar policy.

American manufacturers are willing to supply the Russian people with the products they need, at what promises to be attractive prices. American importers, too, are desirous of importing those materials which Russia has in abundance and which we need. Prior to the war, Russia produced 79 per cent of the world's supply of flax, 51 per cent of the hemp and 97 per cent of the platinum. She is rich in ferro manganese, in antimony and other metals. We need these products.

If other nations have taken active steps to capture the Russian markets then our manufacturers should be protected, for when we finally determine to take an active hand in Russian trade we may find little opportunity left for us to do so. —

WHO WANTS TO TRADE WITH RUSSIA?

Ludwig C. A. K. Martins, Ambassador of Soviet Russia, has furnished the Committee on Foreign Relations with a list of American corporations whom he testifies have made contracts with him for supplying millions of dollars worth of supplies to his government. This list contains the names of some of the country's greatest exporters. Among them are the following who are ready to open trade relations with the Soviet government as soon as the state department permits ships to clear from American ports.

This list included:

Morris & Co., Chicago, meat packers, 50,000,000 pounds of food products at prevaling market prices when shipments are made possible

Elia Berlow, 110 Duane Street, New York, a $3,000,000 contract for boots and shoes

Fischman & Co., 395 Broadway, New York, $3,000,000 worth of underwear

Weinberg & Posffer, 120 Broadway, New York, $3,000,000 worth of machinery and tools.

Lehigh Machine Company of Pennsylvania, $4,500,000 worth of printing presses.

National Storage Company, New York, miscellaneous merchandise to be delivered in Petrograd, valued at $10,000,000. This contract, Mr. Martens said, was made on Sept. 16, 1919.

He stated, that in addition to the contracts listed, "the negotiations of the commercial department of the Soviet Government Bureau have covered a schedule of articles required in Russia to a total of approximately $300,000,000., consisting of railway material and equipment, farm implements and machinery, tractors, trucks, and automobiles, foodstuffs and canned milk, mining, printing, and road-making machinery, hardware and tools, woolens, textiles knit goods, shoes, leather, chemicals, medical and surgical supplies."

POLAND IS KEY TO PEACE WITH REDS

Harmony of Europe Depends on Warsaw's Negotiations With Bolsheviki.

LONDON, — The peace discussions between the Poles and the Bolsheviki are being watched in diplomatic quarters here with the deepest interest, since the general feeling is that the peace of Europe depends upon whether the treaty is signed

In other words, Poland is regarded as the keystone of the present situation and it is felt that as long as hostilities continue between Poland and soviet Russia tranquility cannot be re-established in the rest of Europe.

If Poland should accept the Bolshevik proposals, diplomatic circles believe that she would be placed in the uncomfortable position of being asked by the reds to agree to a plebiscite for the Bolshevik territory she now occupies. While Poland has a large number of nationals in this territory, she admittedly is in the minority and the Bolsheviki undoubtedly would make strong propaganda among the population.

Since the recent visit of Stanislas Patek, Polish minister of foreign affairs, to France and England for conferences, various reports have been published regarding the allied attitude toward the situation with regard to Poland and the bolsheviki. Highly placed diplomatists, say these reports have, in general, been erroneous and that the word the Polish foreign minister really carried back to Warsaw was substantially this:

"The allies do not propose to use Poland as an arrowhead to pierce Bolshevik Russia. The allies cannot place themselves in the position of advising Poland to attack the Bolsheviki nor can the allies promise assitance to Poland in such event.

Should the Bolsheviki make an unprovoked assault that would alter the situation. Poland's attention has been called to the fact that the allies are establishing certain trade relations with Russia. Whether Poland shall make peace with the Bolsheviki is a matter for her alone to decide.

"During Harrison's administration, Mr. Stevens was minister to Hawaii, and he asked that some naval vessels be sent there to protect American lives and property. In reality he had entered into an understanding with a small group of missionaries and their descendants to bring about a revolution, overthrow the existing government and annex the islands to the United States so that their sugar and their products could come into our market free from duty. A naval vessel was ordered to Hawaii, and, after it arrived, 13 conspirators met in a room and decided to overthrow the government.

"At night, 150 of the marines from the American battleship were landed and marched to a point 75 yards from and in front of the government building in Honolulu. The 13 men, having arrived at the front of the government building, read their proclamation and were immediately recognized as the government of the Hawaiian islands by the American minister."

Who were these "conspirators", who were so promptly accepted by the United States authorities as the new government?

That question is answered by one of the mots charmingly frank documents that ever was penned by an apologist for things as they are. Hawaii was not annexed to the United States until 1898. In the meantime, every form of pressure was brought to bear upon the senate to force through the treaty of annexation. Among the documents written with this end in view was An Address by the Hawaiian Branches of the Sons of the American Revolution, the Sons of Veterans, and the Grand Army of the Republic to their Compatriots in American Concerning the Annexation of Hawaii.

The "Address", published in 1897, gives this version of the revolution:

"The revolution (of 1893) was not the work of filibusterers and adventurers, but of the most conservative and law-abiding citizens, of the principal taxpayers, of the leaders of industral enterprises." The address notes further, that, "of the capital invested in the islands, two-thirds is owned by Americans."

There may have been "Bolsheviks" and "Reds" in Hawaii in 1893, but they get not the slightest credit for overthrowing the government. On the contrary, the work was done by conservative, law-abiding citizens, by the leading tax-payers and the leaders of industrial enterprise. True to form, the ruling class of Hawaii disposed of the existing form of government when it had no further use for it.

Shakespeare's melancholy Jacques found his lessons in stones. State legislatures and national officials are evidently taking theirs from our island possessions.

WHAT OF IT?

Scott Nearing

At last, after months of prattle, comes a word of sense from Washington on the H. C. of L. "I see no prospect of any considerable fall in prices for several years to come", says Royal Meeker, commissioner of labor statistics. Then he explains why — because "it will be impossible for the governments of the world to pay off their debts very rapidly."

It will!

But that is not the real reason why prices will stay high. Prices will stay high first because the efficiency of the capitalist system has fallen so low that goods cannot be turned out fast enough to meet the demand. Second, because the payments in the form of rent, interest, dividends and profits are so great a fixed charged on industry that even though efficiency were maintained, the cost of production plus this cost of parasitism would keep prices high.

High prices today mean that the worker cannot buy back, with his wages, what he has produced with his energies. This is the very essence of the present ludicrous system of economic life.

A little chat with the principal of her school that morning on the right and wrong of Jack's incarceration proved to her that that individual was not in favor of the fining system. He told her that he had heard of Jack's prowess before the judge and gave it as his opinion that the boy was right. But when Olive asked him to do something for the boy he immediately changed his mind. He told her that Smallhead's wife's cousin's niece's brotherinlaw was a member of the school board and it was therefore not policy for him to say or do anything which might reflect on the integrity of Mr. Smallhead. He averred that he could not mingle in politics and keep his prestige as a teacher. He advised her not to speak of these matters as they were entirely out of the sphere of young ladies and were liable to be misinterpeted.

This homily however did not do her any good from the principal's view point. It only irritated her and made her more determined than ever to go ahead. Ahead to what? She could not unlock the jail door so she decided to do the next best thing. To awaken the interest of the influential people of town to a realization of what was going on she never fully realized her position in this matter. There were three men in jail Hundreds had been fined, and yet, only one stirred her to action.

She told the principal that it was just because she was a woman that she had to let the putrescent system of injustice thrive. She insisted that she knew the boy was innocent of any crime and yet he had to lie in a filthy jail simply because good people were cowards and bad people were greedy.

She went to her classes leaving the principal amazed not only at her temper but at her reasoning as well. "What is she, a Carrie Nation or an Amelia Pankhurst" he asked of Miss Kramer who happened to be in his office at the time. "That young fellow must have a remarkable personality. It seems to me they ought not to have put him in jail."

Miss Kramer whose individuality had been dwarfed by thirty years continuous associaition with children, simply said that she was surprised at Miss Anderson. She assured the principal that she would do her best to remove that fantastic notion from the child's mind. "A young lady of her standing, to come to the defence of nameless hoboes—the very idea."

That evening on her way home from school Olive stopped at the livery stable to see Judge Duffy. She found that worthy sitting in his office reading the latest copy of the 'Police Gazette'. It was his official magazine and the only literature that interested him.

When Olive entered, he greeted her jovially, saying: "Hello there Ollie, how's your Pop?"

"Quite well, thank you." Olive answered, then coming directly to the point she said: "I visited the jail Sunday with the Endeavor people."

"Yes, so I hear. How do you like our boarders? We've got a bright kid in there Ollie, but he needs coolin'."

"Why is he in jail?" she asked almost defiantly.

"Oh, he was drunk and fighting," said the judge as he rolled a cigar from one corner of his mouth to another. "Sorry to pinch him; he's so young, but we must have order, you know. If we didn't lock up characters like that, why then you and Tillie and your Mum wouldn't be safe on the street."

"But, Mr. Duffy, I do not believe that boy was that kind of a character. If he fought at all, it was in self-defense; then there is another thing I wish to ask, why did you fine all these men when they were not all drunk? Is it because the town needs the money?"

"No, no child, that would not be right. The town don't need the money any worse than I do. We fine these men so that they will not have the money to loiter around the pool halls and disturb the peace and dignity of our municipality." Then after laughing at his own witticism, he added, "Now run along little girl, and don't ask so many questions. Run up to the house and see Tillie's new coat. I'm busy just now." He arose tickled Olive under the chin and then walked out into the stable.

Olive did not go to see Tillie as the Judge had suggested. She made her way to the office of the 'Anamoose Record' where she interviewed Mr. Ralph Cranston, the editor.

"Cranston's sense of humor was aroused by her earnestness and lack of worldly wisdom. He decided to have a little fun at the child's expense. He would just let her take a glimpse of life as it really was. He admitted freely that what Judge Duffy had done and was doing was morally wrong and to be condemned if it [illegible] done at a distance. "We would go to war if such things were done in China," said he. "But at home, when our morals conflict with business expediency then we chuck morals overboard and do what is expedient." Then he continued as he whirled around in his swivel chair and rested his elbow on his editorial desk, "Do you know Miss Anderson that this is legally a dry state, and that it is a crime under the laws of this commonwealth to own and operate a place in which intoxicating liquors are sold. Yet we have them here, in the very shadow of your churches. I ask you why?"

Olive was silent. She wanted to hear what he had to say. She wondered if he too would find a way to justify this self evident crime.

"I will tell you" the editor went on, "this is a wheat country. A few men come in the spring to sow and to plough, but thousands come to the harvest. They come not because the crops need cutting, in fact they do not care if they are ever cut. They come because we are forced to pay wages if we want to see our harvest gathered. Wages are paid with good hard money, which these men take out of the state when they leave. So much for one side of the question. These men make their money by work as I make my money by printing and your Dad makes his money from rent. The difference is, that we have land and business; that we are located here. But these men who come here to work have no land and no business, except to work. For their work we pay them money which they would take out of the country unless we find some way to stop them."

"But why stop them?" Olive asked wide eyed. "Isn't the money theirs? Haven't they worked for it?"

"Tut, tut child don't get excited. We stop them because the money will do us more good than it will them. We business people do not produce; we exist on margins. Never forget that. There are too many of us to grow rich from the farmers alone; we must get a part of what goes out in the shape of wages. The town is in the fining business just exactly as your father is in real estate—Mr. Marvin is in groceries, Duffy in horses. They are all after the margin. The town is only a collective citizen. What it does, is for the benefit of its people. If we do not get our margin as officers and business men we become either farmers or bums. Your Dad buys a cheap farm and rents it at a high rental The margin so achieved buys your colthes. He persuades an ingorant man that his good land is poor and that he can do better on an alkali flat. He gets the good farm cheap and sells it dear—the margin sends you to school. The fact that the renter and his wife sweat blood to pay the rent and that the ignorant man starves on alkali flat does not bother you. It is business and business must have victims. What is true of your Dad and you is true of all of us; we live upon that which we have not earned."

"We do not like the 'blind pig', but the men who come to harvest our crops are homeless wanderers; they must have a place where they can meet socially, where they can mingle and talk the things they know and understand. They want a place where they can forget their trouble and remember their misery no more as the Bible says. In other words it brings them to town where they buy clothes, hats, shoes, tobacco, and snuff; where they eat at the restaurant, buy papers at the book stand, all of which means money in our pockets. That is why we tolerate the 'blind pig'. If Anamoose has no 'pig' and Harvey has two then the merchants there will make just twice as much, as the merchants here from the hobo trade."

"But why fine them when they are caught in the trap you yourself have set for them?" the girl asked.

"Again that is to our advantage. Taxes are high and the town needs improvements. To hold down the tax bill and at the same time improve the town, that is the test of official efficiency. You know, Miss Anderson, that it takes money to run a town—it has to come from somewhere—the taxpayers do not always figure the cost of these things — they only know that they want them, but they do not want the bills that follow. When bills go too high, they change officers; the officers need their job: they, too, must eat so they try to hold down the bills. People are naturally more interested in cheapness than in the method by which cheapness is brot about, so the officers take a chance to get easy money whenever it presents itself."

"It is not a christian way of doing," the girl protested.

"Oh, well, Christians don't like high taxes any better than Jews. In the world of business we recognize neither saints nor sinners. The very land we live on we stole from the Indians and not even you would return your father's farm to the Red

January, [illegible], 1920.

In view of the more or less fantastic speculations as to the possibility of the re-establishment of trade relations with Russia by dealing with ''Cooperative Societies'' but in other respects ''got changing the policy of the Allies toward Soviet Russia'', it seems necessary to call the attention of American manufacturers and exporters to certain obvious facts, namely:

FIRST: The resumption of trade relations entails problems such as the re-establishment of Russia's foreign credit, the matter of transportation, of harbor facilities, of representatives abroad, to take care of the clearance of ships and other matters of consular nature, the issuance of passports for commercial travelers back and forth, the mutual protection of foreign visitors in Russia and Russian visitors abroad, — which cannot be solved without formal contact with the authorities in Russia.

SECOND: There exist in Russia no such cooperative societies as are being announced in the plans of some people who apparently desire to find in Russia somebody whom they might utilize in bringing about friction between the Russian people and its Government. Under present conditions in Russia, the formely separate and independent cooperative societies have changed their nature, their position and their function. They are today distributing agencies of the Russian economic system and they work in complete harmony with the Soviet Government. So-called ''representatives of Russian Cooperative Societies'' in London, Paris and New York do not represent the Russian Cooperatives and have no authority whattsoever to speak in their name or to enter into any obligations on behalf of any number of people in Russia. Such foreign representatives as are now announced as negotiating with the Allies were representatives of the old Russian cooperative movement. They have been deposed by the Russian cooperative organizations and other representatives have been elected in their places, but have been prevented by the Allies from taking change of the offices of cooperatives in foreign countries. The status of these alleged representatives who now purport to negotiate in the name of the Russian cooperative movement with the Allies in Paris is about the same as the status of former Czar and Kerensky ''Embassies''. They do not represent anybody except themselves. Such representatives have no supplies in Soviet Russia to exchange for foreign products and have no right to negotiate obtligations in anybody's name except their own.

The foreign trade of Russia is nationalized and the Russian Soviet Government is in full control of all supplies in Russia, of the means of transportation, and of such other resources as can be made, and which the Russian Soviet Government is ready to make the solid basis of Russia's foreign credit. The Russian Soviet Government is perfectly capable and ready to satisfy all requirements for the re-establishment of trade with Russia. According to information received by us from Mr. Litvinoff in Copenhagen, the Soviet Government of Russia is ready at any time, when the blockade is really lifted, to prove in practice Russia's ability to [illegible] the field of foreign trade and to begin purchasing on a very large scale, on conditions quite acceptable to all parties concerned.

Soviet Russia is eager to open her markets for American products, and is prepared to buy hundreds of millions of dollars worth of materials. In order to facilitate the development of this trade, the sooner all restrictions of mail and telegraphic communications between Russia and foreign countries are abolished, the better. It is in the interest of this trade, and we feel confident that manufacturers and export merchants will understand, that any restrictions of this character will harm them just as much as they will harm Russia.

(SEAL)

Since each government must be deemed the sole judge in determining the status of its citizenship, I take it that these documents esthlish beyond all doubt the fact that I am a citizen of the Russian Republic. Nevertheless, I wish this Committee to be in possession of all the facts so that no further misapprehension may arise in this matter.

I was born in Russia of German parents, who had emigrated to Russia in the first half of the last century. At the time of my birth my parents were permanent residents of Russia. I was born in Bachmut, Province of Ekaterinoslav, Russia, on December 20th, 1874. I was brought up in the City of Kursk and in Petrograd, and educated at the Kursk High School and the Petrograd Technological Institute.

Under the laws of the United States the American-born son of a German immigrant is a citizen of the United States. But under the archaic laws of the old Russian and German militaristic goverments, I was considered technically a German subject, altough born and raised in Russia. At the age of seventeen I applied for Russian citizenship, but the Russian authorities insisted that I should first serve in the German army, which I refused to do. I continued to reside in Russia, and in 1896, by reason of my affiliation with the revolutionary movement against the Russian Czar, I was imprisoned by the Czar's government. At the conclusion of my sentence in 1898, the Russian authorities delivered me forcibly to the German military authorities, who impressed me into the German army and compelled me to serve two years as a common soldier. I continued my affiliation with the Russian revolutionary movement up to the revolution, which began with the abdication of the Czar, to the establishment of the Provisional Government on March 16, 1917. The Provisional Government proclaimed amnesty for all political offenders and invited all political [illegible] to Russia. I was in America at that time, representing the [illegible] Company of Petrograd, one of the largest steel and mining concerns in Russia. Because of my technical German citizenship, I could not avail myself of the amnesty and invitation to return, since Russia and Germany were then at war. Desirous of facilitating my return to Russia, my relatives applied to the Provisional Government of Prince Lvov for naturalization papers for me. Such naturalization papers were granted in May or June, 1917, by special decree of the Provisional Government. This Provisional Government was officially recognized by the Government of the United States. These naturalization papers were dispatched to me by registered letter. I was informed of this by letter form my sister, Mrs. Popoff, who resides in Petrograd. I did not receive the letter containig my enturalization papers. I resume that it was intercepted in the mails by the British or other censor. At that time many important letters and cables relating to my buisiness transactions in this country, regarding the purchase of American materials for my company, etc., were being intercepted by the censor and never reached me.

I entered the United States on January 2d, 1916. The United States was then at peace with the world. I registered my technical status as a German subject with the port authorities, explaining to them at the same time that I was born and resided in Russia and that my German citizenship was only a technical of German law. I have in my possession documents issued to me by the English Government exempting me and my family from internment or deportation as enemy aliens, in order that I might go about my buisiness in England. It was by the virtue of these documents that I was permitted freely to leave England, irrespective of my status, and I submit these documents to the Committee and ask they be incorporated in the record.

The general Rules and Regulations prescribed by the Attorney General of the United States for the registration of German enemy aliens were issued December 31st, 1917, pursuant to the proclamation of the President of the United States, dated November 16th, 1917. At that time I was already a Russian citizen by virtue of a decree of the Provisional Government of Prince Lvov, a government officially recognized by the Government of the United States, and I was therefore not subject to registration under those rules and regulations.

This should suffice to clear up all misunderstanding about my citizenship. The fact that the present government of Russia has certified that I am a Russian citizen and has made me its official representative in the United States disposes of this question without doubt. In addition, there are the facts which I have just stated; that I was born and raised in Russia and was given legal Russian citizenship by a former Russian Government which was recognized by the Government of the United States.

men if you could. Still you know that the land had been theirs for ages when we came and took it.''

''But the Indians never used the land,'' Olive urged.

''Neither does your Dad; he rents it,'' came back the Editor. ''Furthermore, just because you never looked at your watch, does that justify me in stealing it?''

Olive looked demure for a moment, she said, ''Honestly Mr. Cranston I am bewildered. I want to see justice done in the case of this boy, and that's pure selfishness, for I clearly see that universal justice cannot be done without creating ruin and if possible still greater injustice.''

''It is a dog eat dog world and you can make nothing else of it,'' said the scribe, as Olive left the office.

She stopped for a moment in the door and looking back at the editor she said, ''There is no doubt but what you say is true but it will not always be true, I know that for I will not permit it.''

''Some Molly McGuire,'' laughed the scribe, ''or is it Joan of Arc? Remember little girl that business and sentiments don't mix and this is a business world.'

She disappeared down the street on her way to the preacher's house.

in prison. If they had been workers and had stolen a pair of shoes for a barefooted kid, they would probably have spent as many years at hard labor in one of our penal institution.

In order to secure the welfare of the workers, we must cease relying upon any schemes proposed by the advocates of the capitalistic system. To believe that profit-taking should become less than profiteering at every opportunity, is to expect the impossible. The profiteer and the profit-taker are twin brothers, fathered by the same sire. Profiteers can develop only under a profit system. It is useless for the workers to cry out against the profiteers and then by their ballots and their activities as union men, suport the system which creates these leeches. In order to put down profiteering, we must put down the economic and Industrial system upon which hjt thrives and fattens.

The law making power, even if it were sincere in its attempts to deal a death blow to profiteering, would be helpless to do so. Do not be deceived about the powers of laws. The law making power — the political power under capitalism, is part and parcel of the capitalist system

The political government is shackled to the capitalist system with chains of gold. It is the inplement of the system in conserving the interests of the ruling class.

We will witness the continued bludgeoning of the workers by the profiteers. Their ability to keep it up is accentuated by the tremendous concentration of wealth which is taking place. The old laws of supply and demand have practically ceased to exist in the world's markets. The era of capitalistic world imperialism is passed forever. Politicians and notoriety here. The old order of free competition is hunters may try to make meal for their mills in atterapts to create the conditions of by-gone industry, but they will fail.

The profiteer is King and the only way to stop his rule is to take his kingdom away from him, and place the working-class in control. This is the historic mission of the workers. This is what the communist movement of the world means — A WORLD CONTROLED BY THE WORKERS.

AN IDEA.

The most powerful thing in the world is an IDEA. If an idea is wrong it will stop itself. But if it is right nothing can or will stop it. We may arrest, jail, kill or even deport men— but cannot arrest, jail, kill or deport ideas. In fact ideas feed, fatten and multiply on suppression and tortures visited on their possessors. History if it teaches us anything, proves this to us. The ideas that govern mankind today were shot at, hung and crucified in bygone days. Their tormentors and persecutors are dead and forgotten, but the Ideas which they tried vainly to suppress and annihilate rule and govern today. Still other ideas are today seeking entrance on the stage and those in power today refuse as stubbornly to give way to the New as the old refused to give way to those in vogue today. However the way or progression is eternal and the old must ever make and give way to the New, the old demonstrated. Error to the newly accepted Truth.

Here is a sample of the ultra conservatism of the American worker, which appeared in a late issue of the Cleveland Press, and which, of course the editor commended:

''I am not a Red, but I am a wee bit radical. The man in overalls is my blood brother and his cause is my cause, yet I love him too well to cheer him when he is wrong.''

Note that this workingman is expressing himself in terms of 'right and wrong, which is the dominant weakness of the American working mule. He doesn't know that the ruling class has always defined what is right in terms of their economic interests and he has just naturally imbibed the thought that anything inimical to his master's welfare must necessarily be wrong. His beclouded brain never entertains a suspicion of the wrongs he suffers through exploitation. Not understanding his position industrially, not realizing his wage slavery, he is a stranger to the fact that a slave cannot possibly be wrong in any effort he may make to emancipate himself. However, his admission that he is a ''wee bit radical'' indicates that a few scales have fallen from his eyes, which is hopeful for subsequent thorough enlightenment. His economic vision will then be clearer and he will no longer be deceived by the precepts of the bourgeoisie. He will then see the class struggle in all its intensity and become an active participant in the world—wide movement for labor's emancipation. Then he will have learned that conceptions of right have their root in economic conditions.

After an understanding had been arrived at with Holland respecting the disposition of Kaiser Bill, the Allied governments launched a hue and cry for his deportation and trial. Holland demurs, as per arrangement, and the capitalist press, after emitting a yelp or two of indignation, allows the matter to quietly drift into oblivion. We are now informed that a demand has been made of Germany for some two hundred of Kaiser Bill's loyal henchmen, who are charged with abetting Bill in the precipitation of the World War, for the ostensible purpose of placing them on trial. All camouflage, brother. You may safely wager your last iron dollar that there will be nothing doing along that line. Trust the bourgeoisie to deal kindly with their own ilk. Now, if they were workingmen, it would be just as safe to gamble that they would be summarily dealt with.

John Spargo, erstwhile member of the Socialist Party, visited Cleveland, shot his wad of dope anent the Russian situation as per contract with August Belmont, the American high priest of world imperialism, and departed ofr other fields of conquest. He and his Belmont pay-roll partner, Charles Edward Russel, experienced a cool reception in Cleveland. The well informed respecting the Soviet form of government in Russia merely smile at the efforts of these mental prostitutes to put across their diatribes against the Bolsheviki, and the rest of the American public doesn't care a damn. I would advise these gentlemen to confine themselves to bourgeois audiences where they are sure to meet with an enthusiastic reception.

YOU ARE CORDIALLY INVITED.

Mulbery, Kansas 1-31-1920
Editor Toiler Dear Comrade

There are thousands of good conscious workers that still believe that we can yet save our selves through the trade union and the ballot and it is hard to convince them other wise and about all we can do is to keep the facts continualy before them. The part the toiler is playing is helping things along, there is not A single man or woman who can take the events of the last 4 years and show where the trade union has made one bit of progress, where ever there has been a clash between the trade union and capitalism the union has come out defeated.

We unionists have built up an autocracy among our selves I have reference to the official class among the trade unions. We have separated the officials from the workers and they have become a separate class by them selves to such an extent that if a corporation wants to start a strike-proof shop all they have to do is to organize under the trade union system and they have it. If it so happens that there is a strike the official class faction of the union will defeat the strike or so cripple the proposition that the settlement that is made is worse than defeat: just look the field over and see if I am not right in my deductions. Look at the move the railroad men made and see what the settlement did to them, then take the great coal strike and see what the official autocracy did. I call them autocrats because they acted without authority from the rank and file they settled our strike on their own self apointed authority.

Then there is the great steel strike from coast to coast and after months of suffering and harship they were sent back in defeat just as the miners were and I think the answer is plain — they were organized under the trade union system.

How, I want to go on record right here as saying that all of you that want to get any place besides the poor house and serfdom worse than you have. Better get off that old system and get your union reorganized and revolutionized and get organized under industrial unionism. Then and then only can you expect to win. For instance, had we been organized industrialy when we miners came out of our prisons and demanded justice at the hands of our despoilers we would have won in a walk.

We could have tied up every industry in the U. S.

Supose we had one big union instead of the old rotten, moth eaten prehistoric American Federation of Labor when the steel men came out, what do you think would have happened? I can tell you, we would have pulled the string and tied the entire country up and it would not have taken 4 or 5 months either, we miners had the situation at our mercy and would have won in a walk if we had had men with nerve at our head but we did not, so we lost merely because we were not on the right track I tell you brothers we must get down to brass tacks and organize industrially and depend on our economic power to win and don't let any bone head convince you that you can better your condition by merely voting for it. It is simply idiotic to think so. Just look the situation over and be convinced. Wisconsin elected a congressman, did they get him seated? I think not. New York elected 5 assembly men, did they get their seats? Look it up and see if they did, and so it goes, forget the ballot game and play a game you can win at.

You can win through your economic power and industrial organization and the Communist Labor party is ready to coach you how to start any time you are ready to act, that is our mission in this world so awake and let us organize for victory, otherwise you go to slavery, take your choice.

ment regarding the world war, which he said, was caused by capital and in which, he said the masses were led to believe that they were fighting for principles and ideals.

Judge Weeks interrupted the speaker again.

''I don't like to interrupt you,'' said the Court, ''but you are now speaking of something not contained in the manifesto.''

Gitlow insisted that the Left Wing principles are directly connected with the European war which, he added, ''showed plainly the failure of capitalism.''

After several hours of deliberation, Gitlow was found guilty by the jury. An appeal was immediately taken by attorney Darrow.

The Power Of The Press

— By Eugene V. Debs. —

The power of the press is sadly underestimated in the socialist movement. The ruling class make no such mistake. They are keenly alive to the power of the press in moulding public sentiment and in shaping affairs in accordance with their interests. The capitalist papers do not suffer for the want of support and never die of starvation. They are fed fat and ungrudgingly by the class in power and in return serve that class with all their power.

Not so with the press of the working class. With scarcely an exception the papers and periodicals published in the interest of labor eke out a precarious existence. Ninety-five per cent of them line the highway of the past with their skeletons. They lingered for a brief while and then gave up the ghost, falling victims to the chronic labor-paper malady, starvation.

Of course not all papers claiming to be labor papers are fit to exist. Many of them are fakes and run by political grafters. These often thrive in their blackmail and graft while an honest paper is allowed to die for the want of support.

Working men and women ought to have intelligence enough by this time to discriminate between an honest labor paper and a grafting sheet and they ought to be loyal enough to the working class to give their support to the paper that uses its influence to mould sentiment in favor of their cause and fights their industrial and political battles.

It is when the strike comes that the working class suffer most keenly the lack of a powerful press that reaches the people. They are always at a fearful disadvantage on this account. The capitalists get in a thousand licks to their one, not only because they can get their case before the people in its most favorable light and keep it there, but because they can put the case of the workers in the most unfavorable light and keep it there.

If the working people had a press the slugging methods of corporations in a strike and the activities of their murderous gunmen would not only be impossible but unthinkable.

The working class can expect nothing from the press of the capitalist class but misrepresentation and injustice in the struggle for its rights. The working class must build up a powerful press of its own and this vital fact it cannot realize too soon.

Thousands of workers subscribe to capitalist papers without contributing a penny to their own and this is one of the reasons why the working class is still in slavery and will remain so until it rises in its might and asserts and develops its power to achieve its emancipation.

Soviet System will Free Woman

By The Federated Press.

PARIS — Socialization of housekeeping is the only thing that will really emancipate woman, declares Nicolai Lenine, head of the Russian soviet government, in a pamphlet on The Great Initiative written for the study of the Russian workers.

"In one year Russia did more for the freedom of women than had been even attempted in 10 years in other countries," he said. "All the humiliating laws prejudicial to the rights of women have been abolished; for example, those placing obstacles in the way of divorce, or the repugnant formalities in the search for the paternity of "illegitimate" children. These laws are in force in all civilized states, to the shame of the bourgeoisie and of capitalism.

"We have a right to be proud of our accomplishments in this country. But in proportion as we realize the bases of capitalist laws and institutions we will arrive at a clear vision of the edifice we are to construct.

"We haven't begun building yet.

"Woman is still, in spite of every thing, a domestic slave. The emancipating laws have done nothing, for there still remain all the little household tasks which chain her to the kitchen, to the nursery, and make of her unproductive thankless activity a chain of miniature torments both oppressive and stupefying.

"A real emancipation of women, a real Communism, will exist only when the proletariat takes the reins and organizes a war against domestic slavery. In other words, when society shall be entirely reconstructed, with a view to a general socialization of housekeeping.

"The practical realization of this program has already begun. The result is hardly felt as yet. But one must not underestimate these first attempts. Community restaurants, kindergartens, are in a measure, new forces still far from mature, but holding the potentiality of woman's emancipation, since they tend to equalize woman with man in the field of social production and life.

"These methods are not new. Like all forerunners of Socialism, they have been, for the most part, organized by capitalism But under the capitalist reigme they have constituted only the exception. They still offer the most dreary examples of speculation, cupidity and fraud. Or else they are transformed into hateful philanthropy.

"We have taken over most of these institutions and they are beginning to lose their old characteristics.

"We're not shouting in the street, like the capitalist press over exploits: our papers aren't wasting their time praising our community kitchens.

"But it is nevertheless true that they are founded on these principles Economy of labor; good management of provisions; improvement of sanitation and the freeing of woman from domestic slavery."

Foreman Fumes - Would Make America American.

The following typical tirade frothed from the lips of a leader of the American Legion lately, according to the Chicago Daily News:

Col. Milton J. Foreman, state commander of the American Legion, who led the 122nd field artillery (old 1st Illinois cavalry) in the Argonne, was in a fighting frame of mind today. He had just finished reading in a morning newspaper that a delegate of the Painters' Union, Local No. 275, at a meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor, annunced that steps have been taken to weed out from the union all members of the American Legion.

"Such legion members are tools of the capitalist system," the unionist is reported to have said. "I urge all you union delegates to weed them out." There was applause, but no action was taken.

"The American Legion," said Col. Foreman, "has just two purposes for existence. We men who saw service are joined together for brotherhood Second, we are organized to serve America. The American Legion is pro-American, nothing else, sir. It is not an agent of propaganda for the "capitalists," or for the unions. The business of the American Legion is to hammer home the philosophy and practice of Americanism, to Americanize this country from coast to coast, and to make every dweller within this land a 100 per cent American. That's the job of the American Legion."

"Miserable creatures who are yipping and snapping at the heels of Uncle Sam have either got to become Americans — 100 per cent, too! — or they've got to pack up and get out. We don't want them in this country. They're not satisfied, apparently, with America; we are not satisfied to have them stop here The best thing is for them to get out — quick."

Any one who is real "satisfied" with conditions in America today is self-evidently a grafter or an ignoramus. Col. Foreman appears to be as unfamiliar with the conditions from which the American people suffer now ashewas with the cannon which "his men" of the 122nd used in France.

"Sonny, the American Legion is going to make this republic American, all wool and a yard wide or we'll die fighting. We learned, we legionaries, how to fight fairly well over there. You can't make that too strong. We men who went overseas found out what a blessed place America is. We love this land more than ever, now that we are back; it's worth fighting for. If we must, we'll fight."

If the dear old Col. would take time to meditate a little upon the spirit manifested on many occasions by Americans he might wisely conclude that they are not the kind of people that can be bluffed by kaisers, colonels, ambitious cub officers, or their little tinsel capitalist gods. And if Col. Foreman did not see enough fighting in France, and insists upon war at home in the manner of supreme insolence, arrogance and ignorance revealed in the unhappy outbreak here quoted from, we are very much afraid — and we say it with deep sorrow — that he and his kind are likely to see fighting enough to satisfy them all! He must not forget that the "World War Veterans" and their allied organizations are more numerous than the reactionary Legion and that they have millions of sympathizers. They stand for real democracy.

By the way, does the Col. intend to delay his threatened "fight" until those he opposes organize an army and then go out to meet them on the field of battle, does he mean merely to "fight" with hot air, or is he encouraging his Legion to use the outlaw methods of mob murder? His talk is dangerously inflammatory.

A sane, honest-minded man would naturally suppose that the manner in which the masses of people in America supported the government during our foreign war by toil, tears and blood proved that America is pretty well "Americanized" already! This rant about making the American people American is either idiocy or hypocrisy. They are "American." They believe the gospel of freedom which was preached before and during the war. The main difference between them and some over-boasting "patriots" is that they believe it yet. Their profession of loyalty to liberty was put on as a camouflage to cover a plan of plutocratic plunder and military tyranny at home. And these real people of America will decide what true "Americanism" is without asking the advice or consent of bigoted, bitter, self-appointed guardians of public opinion.

The mob method might be imitated by a larger mob of outraged common people. No sane "American" will encourage mob action. He who does is an anarchist of the first grade.

SHALL "TERROR" RULE AMERICA?

"I have no fight, mark you, with the American Federation of Labor. I am confident that 99 per cent of the federation's personnel is just as heartily pro-American as any other group of patriots. There were many thousands, you know, who left their union jobs to serve the country in the army and navy. But the American Legion will not tolerate the few malcontents — they are just natural born trouble makers — who refuse to march to the tune of Yankee Woodle. The Legion's going to make those few malcontents become Americans — or they'll be kicked out of the country."

What a brave(?) chivalrous(?) generous(?) American(?) spirit is here manifested in the name of "patriotism"! Our factory magnates and money lords enticed millions of people from foreign lands on the promise of large wages, happy conditions, and a haven of rest from political and military tyranny — every one of these alluring features being greatly exaggerated in the lying circulars distributed by big business in every country Now, after they are here, and have become dissatisfied because they have been deceided, are we to curse them and forcibly deport them? If they do not like the mad rule of profiteers and grafters, if they criticise the govrnment and demand the America make good her far-flung professions of justice and liberty, they must not be argued with, educated and convinced (of they might get the better of the argument!) but they must be "kicked out of the country"! This is the cheapest and most cowardly mock heroism and false patriotism that could possibly be staged And the pity of it is that such folly is more dangerous to the peace of the country than all the "reds" that might be found. Such talk is not indulge in by time-serving politicians and their supporters because they fear any harm to America from the "reds"; it is for the purpose of intimidating the reformers and misleading the masses; but the present day reformers can no more be intimidated than could Washington, Jefferson, or Lincoln, and the people are looking for new leaders with social vision, not Stand Up And Be Counted!

So many comrades are stepping forward to the front ranks of literature distributors and Toiler subscription hustlers that we are daily astonished at the growing number and the vim with which they attack the work of educating the workers. Truly it is a sight to make every social revolutionist rejoice, for don't you know, the "reds" are supposed to be buried deep, deep, deep beneath the heel of reactionary capitalism — but they are not — not by a, well by whole lot!

If you would read the many, many letters, we receive form every part of this big country telling us that whatever others were doing, THEY were on the job and would stay on till the worker's rule is established, and then to see the proof in checks and money orders for literature and Toiler subscription cards — well, you'd sure believe that a lot of "reds" hadn't turned pink yet. You sure would.

And we have decided that if there are so many live wires distributed so widely over the country, there must be many more who have not yet taken a hand in the greatest work that any one can do, the work of educating the worker in his own economic interests. So we extend an invitation to every one of you to join Now this big campaign for subscriptions for The Toiler and a distribution of the literature we advertise. You cannot do more nor better work in the Movement than these two things. Therefore, we urge you to give them your best efforts. If you are so situated, that these are impossible for you, then there is still a way for you to help. The dimes and dollars which you can give will aid greatly in carrying on the work. If you can't work in the Movement, then let your dollars work for you.

We ask every reader to resolve to do a real comrade's share in this work. Take a stand now. Stand up on your feet and be counted!

America and what America Needs

SOME OF AMERICA'S NEEDS AREDISCUSSED BY PROMINENT MEN IN ADDRESSES IN TWO CITIES.

MORE EDUCATION LESS DEPORTATION IS AMERICA'S PRIMAL NEED, SAYS FORMER JUVENILE COURT JUDGE.

Charging that America is neglecting the most vital and fundamental problem of reconstruction, Fred G. Bale, former juvenile court judge of Columbus Feb. 11th, at Cleveland, related personal experiences with boy and girl victims "of a wrong conception of the privileges and obligations of society."

Orphanages he characterized as "monuments to the selfishness of America," and "fashionable and faddish social service work," he said was in keeping with a "governmental conception of American needs that appropriates $7,500,000 in one year for cattle, hogs and crops and $29,000 for the welfare of our boys and girls, the manhood and womanhood of the next generation."

"But then," said Mr. Bale, "hogs, cattle and crops can be sold for dollars. Last year this country spent five times as much on automobiles as for all and every kind of education. Are we placing the best things first?

"Do we realize that we are damning the hearts, souls and ideals of the next generation by measuring the success of today by the dollars a man can accumulate? The only test of a man's success is the service he has rendered his fellow men.

"How many of our churches do you think would shut their doors in the face of Christ if he returned today and associated with the same types of people he consorted with in his day? Until we remove the fences of preference for creed, race or color we do not know the A B C of Christianity or that democracy we mouth so much about.

"The 800,000 boys and girls in America who never go to school are potential dynamite, for from them we shall draw the future anarchists and criminals.

"It is time we laid more stress on education and less on deportation. Eighty per cent of the people brought before the criminal courts are under 18. The number of defectives last year outnumbered the defectives of ten years ago by 25 per cent."

Mr. Bale warned against "camouflaged interests," which he said were lobbying for compulsory universal military training.

"Having done our part in smashing militarism abroad, this is a mighty poor time to plant the seeds of militarism in the American mind," he said. "We do not need compulsory universal military training nearly as much as we need compulsory universal physical training."

POLITICAL AND ECONOMIC DICTATORSHIP OF THE WORKERS WILL SOLVE AMERICA'S PROBLEMS, SAYS RABBI MAGNES.

A large crowd attended a meeting called at the Coliseum at Chicago Feb. 9-th as a protest against the restrictions on free speech in America.

On the speaker's platform were the leaders of every radical organization in the city. Prominent among the speakers was Rabbi Judah Magnes of New York, a son in law of a prominent banker.

"Old America Gone."

"The old and glorious America made its first utterance to the world in the Declaration of Independence," declared Rabbi Magnes. "It maintained the right of the people to alter or abolish existing governments and to institute new ones.

"But it has become treasonable to give utterance to such thoughts in the America of today. We are told that America has had its revolution, and that further fundamental changes are not necessary and not to be permitted.

"We answer that fundamental changes are needed in the world today fully as much as when the Declaration of Independence was written. For example, political dictatorship must be taken out of the hands of the minority, of the privileged few, and the political power must be placed in the hands of the great masses of the people.

"End Economic Oligarchy."

"Further, economic dictatorship must be taken out of the hands of the small oligarchy of big business men and their satellites, lawyers, teachers and clergymen and the power put in the hands of those to whom rightfully it belongs — the masses who work with hand and brain.

"But it is being made a crime to mention these things. We wish to discuss this question, but they say we may not. We wish the American workers to understand, as the British and Italian and German and Russian workers now understand, that economic power can and must be used to achieve political ends. But they make this sedition and treason.

"There are, doubtless, individuals who believe in force and violence, and a few have committes bomb outrages. Why does not the department of justice employ its time to better advantage and hunt these down?

"Let 'Em Talk It Out."

"But where is the evidence implicating organized groups in open advocacy of or secret plotting for the use of force and violence? Were there such evidence, it would have become public long since.

"Let us grant that this or that group openly advocates in speech or writing the overthrow of the government by force or violence. Let them advocate it—as long as no overt acts are committed."

PEN PICTURES OF BIG TRIAL AT MONTESANO

Montesano, Feb. 6. — Out of the grind of ceaseless questionings regarding the fitness of some man or woman to sit as a juror in the trial of the 11 men accused of murder at Centralia on Armistice day. November 11, there also comes the other questions as to whether these men are to have a fair and impartial trial.

Labor throughout the world has an eagle eye focused on the little courtroom here and wants to know the manner of men who are to hold in their hands the fate of these other men who are recognized as members of an impopular organization.

Also, labor is asking what manner of man is sitting as judge in this rtial and what of the prosecution and the defense attorneys.

All these things can be answered only by being on the ground, studying the conditions surrounding the trial, then weighing all the accumlated ideas, sifting out the unlikely ones and arriving at a decision which may or may not be the one that any other man would have reached under the same circumstances.

Sentiment in Grays Harbor county, as indicated by a large percentage of these examined for jury service, is radically opposed to the Industrial Workers of the World as an organization This has been sworn to repeatedly by these jurors under oath. It has been made the ground for the excusing of many of them from jury service during this trial.

Nor is this prejudice extended merely to the organization. Time after time jurors have stated under oath that this prejudice would preclude any possibility of their giving the defendants a fair trial, no matter what the evidence might be.

There are yet on the jury men who have said they did not approve of the Industrial Workers of the World, and while it is fully acknowledged this is their right, there remains the fact that the membership of the accused was concerned in many of the questions asked of every talesman.

So complicated have been the questions along this line that the court has had to ask for rereading of questions so that the record might be kept clear. Also court records will show what to a layman appears as a decided difference in ruling unseating jurors for entertaining prejudice as to the merits of the case and there are yet other jurors who have been permitted to remain on the jury when they gave almost identical answers to almost identical questions.

Feeling with reference to the case on trial is not hard to ascertain. Universally when speaking to a juror on any subject they fight shy of approaching the matter of the trial. This of course, is according to the instructions of the court and should be as it is. But men who were here before the jury was summoned say many of these men had no such hesitancy before that time and that generally they had decided opinions.

Feelings Unsmothered.

With those who are not summoned to sit as jurors there is no effort to smother feelings regarding just what took place at Centralia on Armistice Day, just how it was planned in advance and just how it was executed. They do not give he possibility of a doubt to the stories that came out immediately following the shooting.

However, these men, almost without an exception, say they want to see a fair and impartial trial. Press the question of guilt or innocence further and you get them back without any effort to the positive statement of guilt. Their idea of fairness appears to be a conviction without trial.

In the court room there always is a large number of men in uniform. In the hall there is a similar scene and on the streets of the village there was no such a display of khaki before the trial date. Almost over night the town changed from the peaceful looking village to a community such as often was found just at the close of hostilities and the return of the service men from war.

As to the effect or purpose in having a large number of men in uniform parade about a town where others are being tried for having shot ex-service men, that may be well left to the citizen of average intelligence to answer satisfactorily.

The explanation that "wobblies" are so likely to be present and show their desire to see their fellow workers liberated will not stand the acid tect and that, too, is generally well known here.

As to the prosecuting attorneys, well prosecutors seem to be one of the strong features of the trial. There are five of them within the railing practically all the time and another is working at an office down town.

It is recognized that the country elects its prosecutor, and in important cases this man usually has an assistant, but it is seldom that one finds so many assistants appointed to help out and still more seldom that the elected prosecutor sits back as an advisory member of the group.

There has been perhaps more comment centered upon Judge Wilson than almost any other judge in the state. He was practically unknown to the state at large before this trial. Now everyone is asking, "What do you think of Judge Wilson?"

Well, thinking of Judge Wilson recalls the statement of one of the newspaper correspondents, who said: "When I think of Judge Wilson I recall my days as a cub reporter. At that time I used to wonder what I would do were I suddenly dropped into the chief editor's chair and told to run the paper."

As to Vanderveer, attorney for the defense, it is a fair comparison to refer to the answers given by English statesmen when asked about Premier Asquith. Their reply invariably was "Trust Asquith."

The cause of labor is safe in the hands of Vanderveer.

Here it is, one of the first Soviet postage stamps to reach America. Among the many new stamp designs of the new European governments none show more beauty and strength of design than this.

The distinctive feature of this design which sets it aside from the ones we are used to seeing is the revolutionary significance of the hand and sword severing the chain.

Chapter XVIII.

The Shepherd of the Flock.

From the Editor's office she made her way directly to the Rev. Goodman's residence. She found him busily engaged sweeping the snow from his walks. He greeted her with that peculiar professional courtesy which persons generally display toward the fair sex. When she told him that she would like to consult with him on a rather important matter he invited her into his study.

His study was a small room lined on ligneas nature, with some works on two sides with books mostly of a religious nature with some works on Mythology and History. Books dealing with subjects of science and synthetic philosophy were conspicious only by their absence. An enormous Bible, a small bust of Christ upon the mantel piece which was above a small fire place. A small library table containing the Big Book and a little writing desk constituted the arsenal with which the Rev. Goodman assailed the Devil.

Personally, he was well passed middle age, with a "Give us this day our daily bread" look in his face. He was slightly bald, had long slim fingers and was rather tall. He was good—in fact his goodness was akin to cowardice. He feared God and loved his contributors hence he never mingled in political affairs unless he first had ascetrained upon what side of the fence his substantial parishoners were to be found. When he was sure of that then the parson had no trouble in getting God's consent in championing their cause among the lesser members of his flock. He might have been described by paraphrasing a certain text of scripture. Streth your conscience a little for your stomach's sake. He prayed to God for guidance and kept a weather eye for financial storms.

Olive had never seen these qualities in the man until now. Jack from his cell, her father, teacher, judge and editor had unconsciously worked together to bring them out in bold relief. Even before the interview she felt certain that Mr. Goodman would talk as the others had talked, and that he would justify the people of Anamoose ultimately for the same reason by which the people justified themselves—money.

When they were seated in the study Olive wasted no time on preliminaries. She felt that there was no time to waste when human beings were suffering so she plunged into the subject at once by saying Mr. Goodman I'm in trouble—real spiritual trouble and I want you to help me. I need help as never before."

"You shall have it. If I can be of any assistance to you in a spiritual way, I shall count it a pleasure," said the preacher unctiously.

"Is there really such a thing as morality," Olive asked bluntly.

"Yes, most certainly."

"Is it a law?"

"It is more, it is the foundation of all social relation; it's the manifestation of God in man. The moral law is the highest of all laws."

"Is the observance of the moral law obligatory upon christians?"

"Why of course," affirmed the parson. 'Faith without works is dead,' say the scriptures. But Miss Anderson, why these questions? They show a dangerous state of mind."

She ignored his professional interrogation and asked that he give her a concrete definition of morality. To which the parson replied that it was consistent practice of the golden rule.

"Then they who do not practice the golden rule are immoral and therefore cannot be good christians in the highest sense of the word!" Olive persisted.

"No, not in the highest sense—that is if they are willfully immoral, but remember christianity teaches that our sins will be forgiven if we confess them and repent," the parson explained.

"If we sin wilfully?"

"Tho our sins be as scarlet they shall be made whiter than snow."

"You do not mean that this promise is to be as a lisence for violating the golden rule, do you?"

"No it is placed in the Bible as a beacon of hope on the shores of eternity, guiding us poor mortals thru the seas of temptation."

"You would not incourage the wilful violation of the golden rule then?"

"Why of course not."

"And if you knew that we were violating it willfully, would you rebuke us?"

"Most certainly, such is my duty to my God."

"But if you also knew that we would get angry at the rebuke, and stop coming to church, and stop giving contribution, would you still rebuke us?"

"I most certainly would. Of course, I would have to be very sure that you had actually violated God's law in the spiritual sense before I would feel called upon to act. Remember we pray 'forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors.' Jesus tells us to forgive [illegible] times. So you see I would have to be gentle lest the rebuke would do more harm than good."

"If Mr. Jones your Deacon hired a man to help harvest his crop and agreed to pay that man two dollars a day, when that man received that money is it his?"

"Certainly."

"And to take it from him except for value received is stealing?"

"Yes."

"And stealing is considered immoral?"

"Centrally."

"Now if you knew that a majority of your Church Members hire men and pay them wages, then vote for other men who run illegal saloons thru which these men become intoxicated, in fact where they encouraged to become intoxicated, for no other reason than to furnish an excuse for arresting and fining them for all they have earned so that the money may be applied on our legitimate tax bills, would you call that a sin worthy of rebuke?"

"Your case is an impossible one. No christian community does such things. The law would not permit it."

"But it happens right here," she said emphatically. "And Mr. Kranston and papa defend it. Mr. Hunton even does not attack it. They openly say that we may as well take the money for taxes and city improvements as to let the saloon keepers in other states take it."

"But Miss Anderson," the Parson continued a little excitedly, "you see if what you say were true, and I'm afraid you're exagerating a little, it would be, not a spiritual but a civil matter and you know the church should not take part in wordly affairs. You must also not forget that these floating men are—well—'er—not christians. Personally I do not think that Mr. Duffy would fine them, unless they deserved it. But grant that he does fine them contrary to the civil law, it is outside of the province of the church. As a servant of God, I must keep myself unspotted of the world. But tell me Miss Anderson, what brought these things to your attention? To say the least it is a trifle bold for a young girl like yourself to meddle with such things."

"I visited the jail Sunday with the Endeavor committee," Olive explained.

"Ahem! well, well so you met that strange young man they have there. Miss Englebeak was telling me something about his ranting and blasphemy; she told me, that he refused to let the services go on. Such a character! I think Judge Duffy was entirely too lenient with him. Think of it Miss Anedrson. A youth—a mere boy, without respect for the word of God or the laws of man."

This little speech angered the girl beyond words. For a full minute she sat and looked at the preacher with eyes more powerfully eloquent than ever her tongue could be. She literally burned her scorn into the preacher's soul. At last she said with a dignity far beyond her years, "Mr. Goodman, it seems to me that your conclusions are quite unfair. This young man did not refuse to let the services go on. He spoke to us, he asked us questions in a civil manner. We could not answer his questions, and neither could you have answered them. He plead with us to be true to the best that was in us, yet told us at the same time that we would not live honestly so long as it were more profitable to live dishonestly. I thought that what he said were words engendered by bitterness. I was mistaken. What sounded harsh was but the brilliance of the light that his words caused us to see. He showed us the chain that binds us all to the rock of evil; that causes us to tolerate blind pigs, that fixes you so that you dare not raise your voice against it: that fixes my father so that he too supports the crime because men come to this town in search of the drink, we dare not banish. The heavy fines which amount to robbery fill the town treasury and make taxes lighter. That is why we maintain the officers who wink at the law of the land. It is an offense and your tongue is tied by your salary and your family."

By this time the preacher with both hands upraised was gesticulating wildly. He was completely off his course. "Mis Andersen, Miss Anderson," he shouted, "that young man must be a Devil; he has put into your head terrible ideas. They are most vicious, most sinful! He has changed you child—your sweet innocent view of life is gone—he is full of worldly wisdom which is necessary to men of the world, but not to you. I must advise you to pray, Miss Anderson—to pray most earnestly that these thoughts be taken from your mind, that you may be restored to your former innocence. Don't speak any more of it. Try and forget it. You are a woman. You should be a tender flower, growing in [illegible] in the seclusion of your home and not mingle with common characters. I shall advise that you be taken

SCOTCH COMMUNIST LABOR PARTY JOINS LENINE GROUP.

PAISLEY, Scotland — By a vote of 158 to 28 the Independent Labor Party of Scotland at its annual convention here severed its connection with the Second International and affiliated with the Moscow Internationa, declaring that "Lenine is now the leader of the movement which will destroy world capitalism."

The party also decided to retain its connection with the Labor Party, on the ground that it was the only mass proletarian organization which held the potentiality of the new social order.

Other resolutions were passed coudemnig the "peace of violence," and demanding freedom for Ireland and and restoration of real peace with all nations.

These decisions have been forwarded to the Independent Labor Party of England, and will be taken up at the national convention at Easter.

IRISH SOCIALISTS PROTEST ARRESTS HERE.

DUBLIN — A vigorous protest against the arrest of Jim Larkin, Ben Gitlow and Jack Carney, Irish radicals in America, was voted unanimously at the congress of the Sosialist party of Ireland.

Denouncing the arrest of the first two men "by the heresy-hunting Lusk committee" the resolution urges Irishmen in the United States to take steps for the release of Larkin, "the man whose personality, courage and devotion to the working class ideals raised the Irish workers from the abyss into which alien and domestic capitalism had plunged them."

After similar praise of the high ideals of Jack Carney, the resolution concludes:

"We, living under the heel of a foreign military dictatorship, send our fraternal greetings to the I. W. W., the Communist Labor party and all our working class comrades in America who are being oppressed by the industrial oligarchy of America."

PEOPLE ARE BEHIND SOVIETS

CHICAGO — That the majority of the Russian people are supporting the Bolsheviki, is the statment here of Graham H. Taylor, Chicago, former American consular aid in Russia.

MASS CLING TO SOVIETS.

"Land is another word for religion with the Russians. That is the reason the great mass of them cling to the Bolsheviki," said Taylor. "The Bolsheviki knew the desires of the majority and when they stepped in in the crucial moments of the revolution, they obtained the sanction of the masses because they used diplomacy.

"Every industry is under the control of the Bloshevikí. Only two banks remain in the entire country. The state bank exists, as does also the Moskowsky-Novorsky, which is under the same managment as before the war, except that a Bolshevik official watches to see that they act in accordance with the government policy. This bank is under the control of the cooperative charities.

"The Russian church is undergoing a change similar to the goverment. Former radical pastors are turning conservative. The esathlishment of a democratic system of electing church officers is easing the ministry a great deal of trouble."

BEATING DOWN INDIAN LABOR

LONDON — Capt. Doveton, administrator of martial law at Kasur, India, compelled natives to rub their foreheads in the dust as "punishment", and collected large audiences to witness the public flogging of natives. One of them, a poet, he required to write a poem in his praise. Admission of these accusations was made before the Hunter commission investigating the Punjab disturbances.

Lieut. Col. Macrae, Doveton's predecessor, admitted to the commission he had flogged six schoolboys chosen "because they were the biggest in the crowd" in punishment for a demonstration.

On one occasion, he stated, the male population of the town, numbering 10,000, were turned out for identification parade, and some were arrested on the spot. The parade lasted for six hours, he said.

A cage was erected outside the railway station for the accommodation of arrested men. The largest number of persons confined in the cage at any time might have been 150. He was "quite satisfied about the accommodation," he declared.

MEXICO CITY — The latest extension of the power of Postmaster General Burleson is seen in a refusal to allow international postoffice orders to be forwarded to Gale's Magazine, radical publication in English. All postoffice orders are now halted at the border.

ATTITUDE OF MEXICAN WORKERS

MEXICO CITY — The Communist party of Mexico has made a detailed report to the Third Internatonal at Moscow of its activities. Describing the attitude of the Mexican worker, the report says:

"Like the American negro, the Mexican Indian detests capitalism and all its works, having acquired that detestation in the hard shool of exploitation and suffering, but like the negro also, his efforts to secure emancipation have so far been spasmodic, unreasoning and futille in their childish impetuosity."

WELLINGTON, New Zealand — The women of New Zealand have formed One Big union in order to deal actively with such questions as the cost of living, the housing shortage, state medical service, education and universal military training.

BRITISH SOLDIERS USED AGAINST INDIAN STRIKERS

BOMBAY, Idia — British troops in India called into service to break the strike of 200,000 Indian cotton workers in Bombay, have fired upon peaceful gatherings of workers, causing many casualties.

The strike started the first of January and has continued unabated. All the mills in the city are closed. The strikers demand an increase in wages. The average wage of skilled workers in the cotton mills of Bombay range from $4.40 a month. Unskilled workers receive still less.

In cotton mills the workers are often employed as many as 17 and 19 hours a day. In Bombay the workers work for 14 hours or more.

The factories in which the millhands work are without any sanitary or health provisions. There is no ventilation.

The present Bombay strike is a re-

Putting One Over

> "Bolshevism cannot be crushed by force of arms. We failed to restore Russia to sanity by force. I believe we can save her by trade".

Thus spoke Lloyd George in the House of Commons on Feb. 10th. In explanation, it may be said the Premier has received considerable opposition from the pro-militarists on his bid to open trade relations with Soviet Russia. To justify his stand he makes the claim that where military force failed the soothing hand of trade will win. He is acting on the theory that since Bolshevism has arisen from oppression and starvation, that it will pass away with the filling of stomaches, and a period of plenty. Also, it seems that it is not Russia alone which the Premier has in mind. Here is his statement regarding conditions in England.

> "The dangers are not all in Russia; they are here at home. I speak with knowledge, with apprehension and responsibility, and I warn the house that in the face of things which may happen we must use every legitimate weapon. We must fight anarchy with abundance."

We can't quite fathom the little Welshman. It looks to us like he was putting one over on the anti- Bolshevists. He has been noted for lighting change of attitudes and this seems to be another to his record. We doubt if he really believes that Bolshevism will die a natural death when given a chance for its life. He may be merely appeasing the wrath of the opposition in order to put accross his trade plans.

It is true that Russia has been cemented together as never before by the military actions of foes from without, and by the common needs of the people. But to assume that the principles for which they have suffered every variety of torutre will be cast aside in a period of better conditions is to read human nature wrongly. If Lloyd George is serious in this matter, then he fails to sense the principle underlying all the suffering which Russia has undergone.

The Soviets have been offerong peace to the allies for two years. They have yearned for an opportunity to develop their plan of social economics unhampered. But in order to gain these ends they had to organize an army of 3,000.000 men under extremely trying conditions. Now they have won. Is it likely that the principles for which they have suffered and died will now be cast aside when the opportunity for putting them in practice presents itself?

Conserving American Ideals.

As an instance of the perversion of the childhood of the nation for the purposes of its own future enslavement, nothing more calculated to accomplish it has come to our attention than a copy of a song which is being sung by the pupils of Bryant High school of Long Island City.

The song is purported to have been written by a returned hero by the name of Geoffryo' Harn, who recently recited it before the school and later with the assistance of the music director, set it to music, it is now numbered among the school's song numbers.

The first verse and chorous of this piece of drivel are as follows.

"GET UP AND GET OUT."

Don't you think some people in our land have talked enough?
Don't you think the time has come to call their little bluff?
Ask them what's the matter, make them can the chatter.
Then proceed to make the party rough.
Tell them they're a menace to our land.
Tell them in a way they'll understand.

CHORUS.

Get up and get out
If you have any doubt
About this U. S. A.
If you don't like it here
Why the ocean is clear:
There's a boat sailing home every day
There is only one flag.
Not a dirty red rag.
The flag that will never fall.
Lay your life down for that,
If you won't, here's your hat:
Just get up and get out, that's all.

We desire to call attention to the large degree of tolerence expressed in the first line. In a country whose fundamental law is supposed to be the free utterance of opinion, it is going pretty far to express the antithesis of this principle in a school song. It naturally follows that the intolerence expressed in the first line should be followed by the appeal to direct action and violence which the rest of the verse makes.

But if the words and the sentiment they express are offensive to the principles which the human race have for thousands of years been struggling to establish, and which have been the beacon lights of all progress, no less offensive is the attempt to render them into a song. The greatest musical genius who ever lived could not make a song fit to pass the lips of choldren out of such trash. And as for the elegant English embodied in it — possibly it corresponds favorably with that which is taught nowadays. If teachings such as this pervert the principles of human liberty, they will also degrade music and grammar.

One would be very foolish to seek in our public schools any remnant of the teachings which make for the continuation of those principles in the Constitution which guarantee to the people an expression of their opinions. The tenacles of capitalism reach into ever school-room in the nation and those things which do not make for the continuation of capitalism are prohibited there, whether they be a teaching of the principles of free and popular government or any thing else. Capitalism is seeking to create in the public school system an unfailing army of future slaves. Such songs as the above help to prepare the children's minds to tolerate the chains which are being forged for them.

SPARKS.

Among many literature orders this past week, we note a very substantial one from the Alaska Labor Union No. 11. Boys up there seem to be spending the winter very profitably to themselves judging by the literature orders they have sent us the past few months.

Emmett B. Sprinkle of McAllister N. M. orders $5.00 worth of sub cards and wirtes, "send me the book about "that Lenine person". We might add that the book about that same person is leaving the State Office at the rate of 25 or more copies each week. Rest assured someone is going to learn something about him.

Some contributors to the Baker defense this week are: M. L. Keller, $1.00 Wm. Valents, Grand Rapids, $5.00; Henry Miller Ironton, O., $1.25; Chas. Lange, Mantua, O.

Comrade Geo. Williford of Hamilton O. shows how to make a sub list grov. With his renewal he sends 4 half yearlies. With that he requests some sub blanks so he can go after them right. Some action!

Arno Bufe of Moline sends us a fistful of yearlies. The magic number 5 is still working we observe .

Two new sub hustlers at Toledo are J. F. Chapman and L. A. Bospert. Both have started with an investment of $5.00 worth of cards. Most of them are now in and we suppose this has whetted their appetites for more. We have ovserved the fatal effects of successful sub hustling upon many comrades. It usually makes them see "red".

Just the same ,we believe that work in this Movement puts more color in a worker's life than worrying about the profits the boss makes off his labor. Action is what counts.

Comrade H. F. Fox of Atwater brings two accross the line this week.

If this week's cartoon arouses your ire just let your feelings be translated into cash and forward to the Cartoon Department. There are more where this one came from.

The Bullitt Report continues to be the top seller on the literature shelves, but this past week has seen an invasion of the classics which we advertise. A lot of workers are digging up the fundamentals of the Socialist philosophy these days .And that's a mighty good sign.

We are in receipt of leaflets and sample of letter which Local Fremont has mailed to workers in that city. Such circularization as this aids the growth of confidence and knowledge of the Movement. Other Locals could very profitably follow this example.

Comrade Pete Bartony of Shadyside, renews and remits a dollar for another worker.

He got revenge ,did comrade Wm. True of Springfield O. He states in a letter to us that he got very angry because in a previous issue we gave his address as Dayton instead of Springfield and searching for a means of revenge ,decided nothing would give as much satisfaction as to send us some more subs. And he did — two of them. And the apology we make is — get some more revenge.

Local Sandusky has placed the names of 50 new readers upon the Toiler list. These workers will receive The Toiler gratis for a while and will then be invited to subscribe on their own account. Other Locals take notice — follow this example.

Coming — [illegible] new [illegible] pamphlets will be advertised in these pages very soon. They are: "The Structure of Soviet Russia, Political and Economic", by Wilfred Humphries; "The Open Shop", by Clarence Darrow; "The Right to Strike", by Mary Marcy and "Ten Minute Talks", by Elmer T. Allison. Each will be worthy a wide distribution and the price is right.

Comrade John Foister of Davenport, mails $5.00 worth of subscriptions this week.

Comrade Fosse Evans, the champion subscription hustler, remits another $5.00 for subs. this week and $5.00 for literature. He writes, "some more subs. next pay day". And we know they will come too.

Fifty Mr. Blocks go forward to Elmer Greathouse of Akron.

A generous remittance of $5.00 arrived this week from comrade M. Gillin of Davenport. This sum is for general Party work.

Comrade W. H. Reynolds of Muskegon, remits $10.00 for subscriptions and for the Cartoon Department. All of which compels us to remark ,that if the Toiler cartoons look good to the readers of Muskegon, they ought to be worth your backing .How about it brother?

Thirty Trial of Debs are ordered by comrade J. Congleton of Dover, O. We assume that some folks who ought to know are going to learn something about the Debs case.

We note that Robert Butts of Toledo is in the field after Toiler subs again. He's putting the town of Sylvania on the map.

Another hurry order for literature arrives from Comanche Tex. It's our old comrado, T. E. Pendergrass' who is doing this tall hustling.

Debs photos, the're worth twice as much, not only because they are a wonderful likeness of Debs, but also on account of excellent materials used. Order one or more — 25c each. They're 12x18 in size.

Tom Lewis' date in Akron was postponed until the 29-th. He spoke at Cincinnati Sunday the 15th.

Local Guernsey Co. has a series of meetings scheduled for the immediate future.

A nice order for literature was filled a few days ago for both Locals Toledo and Cincinnati.

Clarence E. Hoover of Toledo sends in 4 new subs. No hooverizing here.

From Wyatt, W. Va., comes a healthy list of five yearlies. M. A. Teti is the guilty party.

[illegible] and King George III. [illegible] an unjust tax upon it. The destruction of the tea was not legal. In fact it was in direct violation of the laws protecting property. Yet it is generally agreed today that the revolutionists were justified in thus guarding their right of self-taxation, even tho they did trample a bit on the technical process of law and order. Revolutionists who ignored the law in order to defend their rights and preserve American liberties are now landed in history as immortal heroes, and acclaimed by a grateful posterity as matchless patriots. Poets and story tellers vie with each other in singing the praises of these determined men who, in a great cause, took the law into their own hands, destroyed the tea, and saved the Revolution.

The trouble started in this way. Ging George the Third was, like the master class everywhere, possessed of an overwelning "Will to Rule". He wished to rule with an iron hand. But the American Colonists had always enjoyed local autonomy. They had their own legislatures and raised their own taxes. They denied the right of England to tax them. "No taxation without representation" was the cry that appealed to every American.

The first tax that caused much resistance was the Stamp Tax in 1765 on deeds, wills and other legal documents. When some of the stamps arrived in New York the revolutionary leaders seized them and made a public bonfire of them. King George got no revenue from those stamps.

When the British ministry, which at this time had become conciliatory, learned the strength of the feeling in America against foreign taxation, they had the Stamp Tax repealed. But King George soon insisted that another tax be levied. He would show his subjects in America who was master. So a "Revenue Act" was passed placing a tax on paints, paper, tea and other articles. The Colonists refused to touch any of the taxed merchandise. They went without tea, paper and paint, and King George got no tax.

This succesfull resistance to this authority put the King in a hot temper. He now resorted to a cure to trick the Americans into paying him a tax. The revenue Act was repealed, the tax on tea only being retained. A bargain was made with the East India Company allowing it rebates so that it could send tea to America which could be sold for less than if it paid no tax. But this trick, which became known to the Americans, seemed to them an insult, and they became more determined than ever that the tax should not be paid. In Boston, however, several loyalists, to whom the tea had been consigned, were ready to take the tea and pay the tax when it was landed. If that occurred the principle of "no taxation without representation" would be defeated. King George would get his tax. A committee of Boston citizens first tried every legal means, to prevent the landing of the tea. But the Governor, appointed by the King in those days refused a pass to allow the tea ships to return to England without unloading. For 20 days Boston and the whole country around was on edge for fear the tax would be paid. On the next day the tea would surely be landed. A few of the revolutionary leaders held a consultation and it was decided that nothing but direct action could now save the people of Massachusetts from this invasion of their rights. A score or two of determined patriots disguised themselves in Indian atire and secured tomahawks. They proceeded to the wharf, backed by a mass of citizens, boarded the ships, broke open the 350 chests and poured the tea into the waters of Boston Harbor. Some of the tea was landed by the wind andwaves on the beach at Dorchester; but King George never got his tax on that tea.

Not only had the principle "no taxation without representation" been saved .But of far more consequence was the enthusiasm which the Tea Party aroused thruout all the Colonies from New Hampshire to Georgia. Up till then many had said "Ah, what's the use bucking against the government." But this act of the revolutionary leaders in thwarting the tyranical acts of their government was an inspiration to every liberty loving American. They thrilled with pride for these heroes who had put their lives in the balance to save American ideals of freedom. A new determination to resist government

ORGANIZATION WINS!

Alwas does organization win. You know it, we know it, the capitalist class knows that by organization, the working-class can take charge of the world and all its affairs. That's why we preach and practice organization — because it is the shortest way, in fact, the only way to win.

But without funds no orgnization is possible. To do our work effectively, and in the shortest time possible, we must have funds with which to carry on organization work. And we are going to give you a chance to help do this work. There are many ways in which you cannot help but here is one way in which even the hardest hit worker can do a little.

On Behalf of the Friendly Bourgeoisie [illegible]

— by Louise Bryant —

By an astonishing mental perversion, conservative American papers have for the last two years designated those upper class Russians who joined with the British or the Japanese or the pro-German Mannerheim forces against their own countrymen as "loyal" Russians. As for that large percentage of the old aristocracy and the middle class, either not interested in politics and therefore accepting any regime without a struggle, and who certainly could never be induced to take up arms against Russia, under any circumstances, they are not taken into consideration at all or they are simply called "adventurers". And yet the middle class played a most important part in the victories of Soviet Russia. From their ranks are drawn most of the technical experts and many of the officers of the Red Army, as well as the teachers, doctors, and other professional people.

Unfortunately, most of us learn only by experience, and many Russians, after the Revolution, who were opposed to the New Order, had to live for a time outside of Russia before they come to realize how much they loved Russia. I remember several such cases even in the early months following the overturn of the Tsar. At the Astoria Hotel, where I was living in Petrograd, there were several officers and their wives, with whom I became acquainted. They were ridiculously scornful of every attempt of the revolutionists to build up a new nation. Two months after the Bolsheviki came in to power, they fled to Stockholm. I met them there half a year later, in the lobby of a fashionable hotel. They were frantic to go back. Their explanation is more easily understood by Slavs than by Anglo-Saxons. Begging eagerly for every scrap of news, they claimed that it was impossible for them to go on living in Sweden. "We do not fit here, the people are too cold. We weep and weep. Never mind, we can get used to the Soviets, probaps they will not be so bad, and at least they are Russians. But to be exiled... that is a living death!"

The clerk in the same hotel gave me his version. "They are all crazy," he said. "I wonder why they came here in the first place, for no sooner do they get settled in their apartments than they ruin the peace of the whole estblishment. Why, last week there was a countess here and she had hysterics every night and beat on the walls of her room. One day she disappeared, leaving a note that said she gone home to her 'dear, suffering country.' Her trunks and her jewels were forgotten, and we have no addrers. Russians here claim that she meant to walk on foot from the border, disguised as a peasant. And she was nearly sixty!" If this dear old "adventuress" ever reached Moscow, she probably became head of a hospital or took an important post in a People's University.

A few weeks ago, Mr. Isaac McBride, returning directly from Petrograd, brought the story of a rather touching incident which occurred during the last drive on Petrograd. At that time, 167 of the old regime officers who were in the starving and besieged city wrote a petition and send it to the Russian officers fighting with the interventionists. They begged them not to continue any longer the war against the Soviets, they claimed that this form of government is the will of the Russian people and "we' must bow to that will." Mr. McBride claimed that 75 per cent of the Tsar's officers are now with Red Army.

The most interesting and dramatic case of a Russian who had willfully exiled himself and his subsequent suffering was the case of a young captain of aviation I met recently in Seattle.

Early the second mornig after my arrival, the telephone rang and a musical but agitated voice inquired: "Are you Madame who speaks on the Russian Revolution?" And almost before I could answer he hurried on, "Please don't say you cannot see me, it is deeply important... very pressing and important."

Still half-awake, I inqured, "Important to whom?" And witout hesitation he replied, "Important to me!"

I told the captain to meet me at dinner and I will never forget him as he stood in the doorway of the rather garish, too-new splendor of the Hotel Washington dining-room, in a ragged Russian uniform, and cast inquiring eyes over the diners. I rose and motioned him and he came forward, blushed a little. "It does not take much" he said, bowed and kissed my hand with all the elaborate politeness of the old order.

We had scarcely seated ourselves when he burst out excitedly, "I have killed two men!"

I confess I was absolutely astonished and could only stare at my companion. There was a moment of silence, then he said, 'Shall I continue?'

I noded. Another silence, then: "They were Bolsheviks. Do you still want me to go on?"

With a good deal of relief I realized that I was not listening to an account of a tragedy which had occured that afternoon, and I resented the captain's questions, so I replied icily, "Please remember I'm an American reporter and I can take no part in your civil war."

His eyes searched my face. "But you defend the revolution?"

"Why should I make myself ridiculous by defending a revolution against one of the worst tyrannies that ever existed? No," I said, "my purpose in lecturing is to beg of my countrymen to lift this inhuman Allied food blockade. I ask it as much for the good of America as for Russia. We cannot destroy women and children without destroing ourselves."

He beamed with understanding. "Yes, yes, you have the right idea, now I will confess everything!"

In true Russian fashion he began an introspective narrative, going back almost to his infancy. His father had been a judge under the Tsar, and faithful to his institutions. As a boy he was aware that thousands were sent to Siberia for their opinions and he had seen peasants flogged in the public squares. When he was fourteen years old he read "Uncle Tom's Cabin" (Harriet Beecher Stowe's story is very popular in Russia) and it gave him an idea. If slavery was wrong, it was also wrong to be cruel to the peasants. One day he said to his father, "Why don't we change our government so that all the poor will be happy and we will not have to beat the peasatns any more?" He was too young to comprehend his father's resulting untrollable fit of anger. For the first and only time in his life, his father struck him. After that a strict watch was kept on his reading and on his associates. So carefully did they guard him that up to the time of the March revolution he had never come into personal contact with any of the revolutionists.

He attended an aristocratic shool, and when the war broke out he became an aviator. The news of the overthrow of the Tsar seemed as unreal as a dream. But in his heart he was happy; instinctively he felt that there would be less misery. At that time he was on the Riga front and for nearly half a year his life went on unchanged. He worked for the Soldiers' Committees with the same earnestness and honesty that he had worked for the Tsar. But all the officers did not take so kindly to the new authority. Some of his best and oldest friends began planning a counter-revolution. He was not in their confidence, but he heard whispers of their plots. A terrible night came when they were arested and he himself was included. As they were marched away, the soldiers murmured among themselves. The evidence was so obvious that the soldiers were in favor of shooting the officers at once. But the Committee decided to send them to Kiev for trial.

Kiev was the home and the birthplace of the captain. Sad and awful was his homecoming. Strange thoughts ran though his mind as he walked those familiar streets, under guard. As the procession came to one of the tunnel-like entrances from certain streets which lead to the warf, the idea of escape first entered his head. To use his own wards:

"I felt I had no chance in the Tribunal because my companions were certainly guilty. At the thought of such a disgraceful death, a panic seized me. You know how it is with Russinns. We get our lives. I remembered that my revolver was still on my hip. I drew it and suddenly shot my two guards. At the moment the rest of the procession had just disappeared in the tunnel and before they realized what had happened I had fled."

"For days [illegible] all sorts of [illegible] thousand thoughts I [illegible] will be branded on my heart forever. Oh, my poor Russia, that such a monster should live to torment her! [illegible] offered me a place in his army, higher salary and rank. I pleaded illness and I was indeed ill. I was sent to America to recuperate.

"For several months after my arrival I suffered a severe nervous collapse. I remained in my room, never seeing anyone, never going anywhere. I read and read. Everything about the revolution I read, the lives of the martyrs, the whole long struggle... At last I new where I stood. I was with the people. I was against my father, against the Tsar. I was most bitter against the traitors who had bargained for foreign bayonets.

"As soon as I was strong again I went to the Russian Consul. I told him my story. I said I must go back now and atone for my crime. He nearly threw me not out of his office. He said he would have me arrested. That was over a year ago. You can imagine my agony, my suspense. If I could only return I could be of some service to Russia. I am an educated man. I could be a teacher. I am a good aviator, they need eyes for the Red Army. I am always reading and studying. That is how I managed not to go mad. I say to myself: "All this knowledge I will lay at the feet of New Russia, will say take it and take my life."

"Often I find it hard to discipline myself. You see I cannot bear your screaming, cruel press. Every time the White forces gain a small victory I am beside myself. I walk up and down and cannot find rest or peace. I who have killed my brothers, I who murdered men fighting for liberty!"

"How do you live?" I asked him.

He looked down at his shabby clothes and said "I had a ring of considerable value which had belonged to my dead mother. I felt sure she would want me to do that if she could have known. No, it does not take much. I live in the shadow. I study and wait."

When I left Seattle, the captain came to see me off. On the way he seemed quite cheerful, and even joked me, because I told him how much I loved Moscow for its color and beauty. Not in the same way that I love New York, I exlained, because New York is my home, it is part of me.

"America is your mother," he said laughing, "and Russia is your sweetheart. It is a pleasant way to feel about a foreign country. For me there is only my mother."

Just as the conductor called, "All aboard!" the captain burst into sudden hysterical weeping. He clung to me like a little boy. "You see how it is with me," he sobbed, "you see how it is — my body is here and my soul is in Russia!"

[illegible] I asked a [illegible] family if they had brought any with them.

"Yes," came the answer. "I have a few thousand Kerensky and Bolshevist rubles, but I am not parting with them. We want money for our maid who came away when we did, but now wishes to return."

"Is her family there?" I asked.

"No," came the reply, "she is all alone in the world, but on second thought she does not like leaving Russia."

Here, then, at any rate, was one person for whom Bolshevist rule possesed attraction.

Then I heard Yudenitch's officers mention as an obligation resting on patriotic Russians that they would have to shoot all the Bolshevist commissars, and that every Communist should be executed. Talking with Nicholas Klishko, the Bolshevist Secretary at the Peace Congress at Dorpat. I asked how many commissars held authority in Russia today. He answered that there were approximately 100,000 and as to the number of Communists he believed the strength of the party was not far short of 1,000,000.

This representative of Bolshevist Russia confirmed the reported food treatment of children, but as to the overfeeding of children he shook his head.

"No child goes without food. No child's food has to be paid for. But children do not get as much to eat as they ought to, and other persons go definitely short."

With his hands he indicated the dimensions of the daily bread ration.

"Just one jolly big slice," I suggested.

"Yes," relied Klishko, who has a knowledge of idiomatic English, "and not so jolly big either."

He said assurance had been given many times that provided she be left in peace to develop her internal affairs, Soviet Russia would honor the financial obligations incurred by the former Russian Government.

PLAN TRADE WITH RUSSIA

New York. — There is a great demand, on the part of American busines men to do business with Russia and not to be crowded out of the field by Europeans, is evidenced, according to Emerson P. Jennings, Chairman of the Executive Committee of temporary organization, of The American Commercial Association which has been organized to promote trade with Russia, by nearly a hundred letters which he has received within the last few days urging that everything possible be done to bring about a resumption of trade.

umption of trade. The Executive Committee will reort this mornig on the attitude which Secretary of State Lansing has taken toward the movement.

Commenting upon these letters, Mr. Jennings said last night that many of these firms already have in hand orders from the Soviet Government, and that he had had confidential information yesterday from London that English firms are now receiving gold from Russia, that it is being deposited in London banks, and that shipments are being made against it. Moreover, he said, the Soviet Government is now advertising in London papers for bids on contratcts for the development of slate mines along the Volga from which oil and tar are to be extracted. These developments, he insisted, made it incumbent upon the American business man to protect his own interests and see that others do not preempt the field.

The letters are all from thoroughly American firms which are not interested, according to Mr. Jennings in the politics of Russia, but simply feel that where there is trade to be obtained, Americans should be among the first.

[illegible] of a Rebel

The [illegible] of the farmers [illegible] their peculiar [illegible] of help [illegible] the face of those given to subjecting present day conditions to analysis. They all sing the same song of inability to cultivate their acres by their own labor, and all join in a chorus of criticism against the agricultural worker who prefers to sell his labor power to the industrial bosses because of higher wages and greater opportunity for social enjoyment. It does not occur to the agricultural employer that the long hours which still prevail on the farm may possibly be one of the reasons for the loss of the much desired help. Time was when the "hired man" contentedly accepted the fourteen hour day without question. He now prefers to work eight or nine hours in the factory. His former employer has no just cause for complaint. His erstwhile wage slave, in transferring himself from the farm to the shop, is merely following a very natural inclination to improve his economic and social condition. Age-old "economic determinism" runs rampant throughout capitalist society. The employer hires labor with the view to exploit it. The wage slave cannot be blamed for availing himself of every opportunity to minimize his exploitation. Wonder if any farmer ever thought of solving the problem of help by limiting the area of his farm to the number of acres he could cultivate by his lonesome! Nope. That would eliminate all prospect of profit, which is unthinkable to the bourgeoisie.

I am not a prophet endowed with the gift of foretelling future events, but I am willing to gamble on the certainty that afther the election next November there won't be enough of the Democratic Party left to merit recognition. It does not require extraordinary powers of discernment to correctly diagnose the present state of the public mind. Even the most conservative—those who have hitherto accepted without question, the lying stories in the daily papers and even sanctioned the unlawful acts of terrorism for which the Democratic administration is responsible—are becoming alarmed about their own safety if the present saturnalia of persecution is permitted to continue. It is just dawning on their minds that unless a halt on lawlessness is called they may come down to breakfast some morning and discover that their prized political rights have been abolished by governmental decree. These are they who are going to see to it that the Democratic administration gets it where the chicken got the ax. More power to their elbows.

By the way, indications are not wanting to presage the greatest political melee this year that ever happened in this or any other country. There will be so many candidates for president that the mentaly of the voting sovereigns of our democracy will be taxed to the limit to make a choice. There are at present about an even dozen political parties in the field and others are being organized at the rate of one a month. Some scrimmage, eh! Most of the candidates will represent capitalism with divergent views on [illegible] its administrative policies. But one will hold aloft the torch of economic enlightenment and voice a demand for a new order of society. Millions of workers will respond to that demand even though it be expressed through the personality of a prison inmate. Gene Debs within prison walls will speak and the multitude will hearken to the voice cryingin the wilderness of capitalist oppression. The signs of the times augur ill for the bourgeoisie and their political henchmen.

When the American Legion in Detroit, at the behest of the "best citizens" of that city, broke up the meeting of Bill Haywood, there was no expectation of remonstrance from the Detroit Federation of Labor. Was not Haywood at the head of a rival industrial organization, and what was more reasonable than to expect the Federation to applaud this wallop administered to a common enemy? Much to the surprise of the Chamber of Commerce, however, that aggregation of promoters of lawlessness were notified that a recerrence of suppression of free speech and public assemblage would be met, if necessary, by armed force by the Federation—that if the city administration cannot prevent hoodlums from terrorizing the people the Federation would assume the job. It will be interestenig to note the result of the next "shiveree" pulled off by the Legion. Will the Federation make good its threat or content itself with passing another "we deplore!" There is a possibility that the Federation perceives in the Legion a menace to its own interests, in which event drastic action may be expected. The fact that a notice was sent to the Chamber of Commerce is a recognition of its culpability. Even this degree of enlightment evokes congratulation and inspires hope of eventual labor solidarity.

Even the capitalist daily papers are commenting on the stupendous profligacy of the government. Congress is lavishly appropriating millions for this, that or the other purpose, but doubtless with a view to distributing the "pork" which will be returned in campaign contributions. The pettit bourgeoisie are loudly denouncing this extravagance, and predict bankruptcy for the nation. You are needlessly alarmed, gentlemen. Isn't the Department of Internal Revenue working overtime collecting taxes? And if they fall short, can't Congress pass a supplemental bill to increase the governmental income? Besides, are not the resources of our great country illimitable? And are there not millions of patient, plodding, industrious working mules to wrest from nature unlimited products? Some people would kick if they were being escorted to the electric chair.

BACK FROM SIBERIA

The truth about Siberia is slowly coming out.

It is very interesting to us, because the most of it is favorable to democracy, and it confirms also the news that has been printed in the Union Record for the past year — news, the opposite of that carried in the private press.

Here is William H. Planert, who reached his home 5431 Adams street, Chicago, January 24, 1920, — after serving fourteen months in Siberia. He was a sergeant in the 27th Infantry and spent most of his time 2,000 miles west of Vladivostok. He considers the Siberian expedition a failure from every point of view and particularly so in that it played a part in helping a gang of "bloodthirsty cutthroats — Kolchak, Semenoff and Kolmokoff." He says:

The best of them, Kolchak, was just the czar over again; the worst of them were simply cruel murderers. Kolmokoff shot eleven people in our town because somebody said they were Bolsheviki We tried to prevent the murders, but they took the poor people away and killed them.

It was American money, British ammunition, American ammunition and guns, Japanese soldiers and French and Italian forces that kept up the bloody war for nearly two years by helping Kolchak, Semenoff and Kolmokoff. Semenoff was the pet of Japan.

When Sergeant Planert was asked about the Bolsheviki, he said:

So far as I could learn they are very good people. Those fighting the bolsheviki are just the old czar over again. The bolsheviki come in and take over all property and administer it for the benefit of all the people. From what I heard the people in Siberia are convinced that everybody except the old nobility would be benefitted by a bolshevik administration.

Sergeant Planert's report confirms the reports brought to America by Louse Bryant and Raymond Robins and others, whose reports have found space in our columns; — and these believed in government circles.

How long are the people going to believe the private press of privilege?

FARMERS WAKING UP ACCORDING TO THIS —

I once was the tool of Oppression
  And as green as a sucker could be;
While monopolis banded together
  To beat a poor hayseed like me.

The corporations and old party Bosses,
  Together did sweetly agree,
They thought there'd be little trouble
  In working a hayseed like me.

At every election they fed me
  With taffy as sweet as could be,
But when they elected their ticket
  They forgot a poor hayseed like me.

They sold themselves out to the bankers
  And thought it would be a fine
    "Spree"
To steal all the green backs and silver
  And rob the hayseeds like me.

They went into league with the Devil
  For the sake of a high license fee
But never a cent of the profits
  Has come to the hayseeds like me

But now I have roused up a little
  And their greed and corruption I see,
And my neighbors are waking around me
  And I find that we hayseeds agree.

And so we have formed an Alliance
  From Oppression we're bound to be free
And the ticket we vote next election
  Will be made up of hayseeds like me.

to the blind and doddering dotards of a system that mankind the world over has condemned and whose destruction is certain within a few decades.

Here is a toast we propose for Col. Foreman and the Legion to drink at their next meeting — dare they do it?

"Down with all tyrants, profiteers, grafters and political self-seekers! America for the American People, not for the malefactors of wealth!"

Isn't that a patriotic toast, Col. Foreman?

Oh, yes; but that toast would not please the blood-fattened plutocrats who finance the American Legion.

The Boston Tea Party.

oppression welled in the hearts of the people. Every school boy yearned for a chance to imitate these defenders of liberty and strike a blow against the usurpations of King George.

Of course some British historians have condemned the Boston Tea Party as an act of lawlessness; and occasionally we find some American, of English parentage or sympathies, taking the English view. Even Woodrow Wilson in his History of the American People (Vol. II, pages 168 and 185) speaks of the Tea Party as a "mob led by a South End tough." The redoubtable John Adams, however, another President of the United States, whose son also became President, and whose family record of public service is unsurpassed in American history, exclaimed when he heard of the direct action taken by the Tea Party; "This is the most magnificent movement of all. There is a dignity, a majesty, a sublimity in this last effort of the patriots, that I greatly admire. This destruction of the tea must have so inportant consequences and so lasting, that I cannot but consider in an epoch in history."

Professor John Fiske of Harvard College, the most brilliant, the most profound, and the most accurate of American historians, ends his essay on the Boston Tea Party with the following words: "If there is anything in human life that is dignified and grand, it is the self-restraint of masses of men under extreme persecution; and from this point of view the Boston Tea Party will always remain a typical instance of what is majestic and sublime."

One cannot but recall the words of William Pitt in the British House of Commons when he replied to George Grenville on the Stamp Act: "The gentleman tells us America is obstinate. America is almoct in open rebellion. Sir, I rejoice that America has resisted! Three millions of people so dead to all the feelings of liberty as volutarily to submit to be slaves would have been fit instruments to make slaves of all the rest."

No list of the members of the Botson Tea Party has come down to us. But there is evidence to show that among those "lawless" Indians were John Hancock, signer of the Declaration of Independence, Joseph Warren, killed in command of his troops at Bunker Hill, and the immortal Paul Revere. Such were the men who in 1773 met the aggressions of their government with direct action and set an example of determined resistance to tyrany which for 150 years has been an inspiration to rebels and revolutionist the world over.

Our Washington News Letter

By Paul W. Hanna.

WASHINGTON — This city will echo very promptly the decision respecting Russia which allied ambassadors are expected to reach in London. The senate sub-committee which is taking testimony on Russian propaganda in America is now marking time until the announcement for or against friendly relations with Russia has been made.

The situation here, is very simple. Our official policy toward Russia is in the hands of the Democratic state department. But the investigation of Russian propaganda is controlled by the Republican senate. Between those two branches of the government there is no love lost.

It is confessed that the state department, by following the wobbly course marked out in London and Paris, has got nowhere at all with respect to Russia. It has sent a number of American boys to be buried under the Arctic Circle at Archangel and in the snows of Siberia, and congress, which has declared no war against the Russian people, is full of men who condemn the adventure. Nobody defends it any more.

The Republicans think there may be a lot of political capital to be made out of the Russian muddle, but they are not sure of their ground. They suspect, with good reason, that the allies led by Italy and England, are about to make formal peace with the soviet government. If that happens our Democratic state deparment will be left high and dry with its anti-Bolshevik program.

And that would give the Republicans their chance. The senate sub-committee would proceed to take testimony that will expose the administration's incompetence, especially with respect to its lending of more than $100,000,000 of American money to the discredited and irresponsible "Ambassador" Bahkmetieff, envoy of the fugitive Kolchak.

If the London cat Jumps toward friendship with Russia, the senate will probably call ex-Secretary Lansing as a witness to explain many awkward things. And Secretary Baker, who has confessed on the witness stand that he turned over many millions of dollars' worth of war materials to Kolchak, without any security except the personal note of a man in the Bahkmetieff "embassy" here. George Creel, Col. Raymond Robins, Edgar Sission and others have also been listed for subpoena.

On the other hand, if the ambassadors at London should issue a statement hostile to the Russian government, and indicating the possibility of further war against it, the senate committee will direct its animosity against Ludwig C. A. K. Martens, the soviet representative who is now its star witness. The notorious Lusk committee, New York, can supply enough sensational innuendo to "justify" the deportation of Martens. It will be seen that the Republican senate is in a position to win a lot of political publicity no matter whether the Russian penny turns up heads or tails.

Good judges are of the opinion that further war against Russia is impossible for the allied powers. As every newspaper proclaims, the big crisis facing western civilization is that of diminished production and impending financial collapse. A war against Russia or any other nation would certainly postpone a cure of the major evil, and might hasten the feared disaster.

And Japan is obviously not going to play alone with the Russian fire. Recent news is that an uprising of patriots has wrested the northern half of Korea from Jap control. China is bitterly hostile to the Mikado and will take advantage of the first opening to adjust the Asiatic balance in her favor.

Soviet Russia has returned all the territory stolen by the czars from Persia, Afghanistan and Mongolia, whose peoples for the first time in two centuries, are free to concentrate their energies against encroachment from the west, south and east — against the imperialists of Europe and Japan.

SIX "RIGHTEOUS" REASONS WHY AMERICAN AND MEXICAN WORKERS SHOULD SPILL EACH OTHER'S BLOOD

—By Arthur Thomson—

There is an organization of property interests and labor exploiters, with headquarters in New York City, known as the National Association for the Protection of American Rights in Mexico. This association with the long name is composed of agricultural, mining, oil, security and banking, and "general interest" groups of American capitalists having property interests in Mexico. The House of Morgan, Standard Oil Co., Anaconda Copper Co., Doheny oil interests, and other big concerns are represented on the association's board of directors.

The association maintains a high-salaried press bureau, the director, according to his own testimony before the United States sub-committee investigating Mexican affairs, receiving a salary of $20,000. This press bureau floods the country at opportune times with misrepresenting reports about Mexico, and conducts an insidious intervention propaganda. Knowing that war is an upopular subject with the people since the European war and "intervention means war" these intervention propagandists camouflage it so as it will not be thought that they are advocating intervention, or war.

None of the association directors advocate intervention, to hear them tell it, but though not advocating intervention their organization is engaged in propaganda for the purpose of pulling the wool over the people's eyes, and making them believe it is necessary to intervene in Mexico in the interests of "law and order" and protection of lives. Of course, they are not interventionists! They say they are not! E. L. Doheny, the oil millionaire of Los Angeles and a leader of the association with the long name, who has large oil interests in the Tampico district of Mexico, says he is not an interventionist. But at the same time he paints such a picture—a false picture—of Mexican affairs that the person who reasons superficially and reading Doheny's testimony comes to the conclusion that intervention is necessary. That is the purpose of all this insidious intervention propaganda—the lying stories of atrocities, the anarchy and bandit stories, the murder maps, etc.

Denounces Committee.

A San Francisco paper has evidently become so disgusted with the "investigation" conducted by the senate sub-committee "investigating" Mexican affairs that it says editorially of the evidence offered at the hearings:

"Newspapers are being flooded with reports or partisan opinions by unknown and irresponsible persons rescued from obscurity solely for the purpose of stirring up strife between the two countries. No man so insignificant he is not being taken to San Antonio to testify before senate sub-committee if it is thought that he has some grievance against Mexico.

"The very nature of most of the evidence is such as would be thrown out of court in a trial for stealing a dog. When documentary, it is usually trivial and sometimes farcical, but more often it consists of no more than hearsay.

"If America is to go to war on some of the evidence tendered at San Antonio it will be a crime aggravated by the appearance of a damnable conspiracy."

There is one thing very conspicious about these interventionists and insidious propagandists against Mexico and that is they are invariably either, holders of Mexican properties or are actuated by property considerations. Senator Fall, for instance, chairman of the senate committee investigating Mexican affairs, is "engaged in mining in Mexico." Some bold, bad people in Texas had the daring audacity to adversely criticize Fall and his committee recently, and the senator from New Mexico felt it his duty to get on the witness stand and answer his critics. He said in answer to charges that he was financially interested in Mexico, that the extent of his property interests was stock in a mining company valued at $75,000.

Of course if the United States was to intervene in Mexico and set up a government acceptable to Wall Street, Senator Fall's mining stock would probably in a short time increase in value many times over. But then don't think for a moment that Mr. Fall wants intervention! He says he is not an interventionist. Of course you must not go looking up the record of these belligerent senators, as it may spoil things. In 1916 Senator Fall called for 500,000 soldiers to police Mexico!

Then there is William Randolph Hearst. This jingo journalist with his string of metropolitan newspapers openly advocates intervention in Mexico. No story is too wild or fantastic for the Hearst journals. Anything of propaganda value, play it up, seems to be the rule.

Heart's Big Holdings

The Mexican Herald, August 24, 1908, published the following information, which throws an interesting light on the Hearst eagle screeching for intervention.

"With over a million acres of the finest agricultural and grazing land, with large herds of blooded cattle, horses and sheep, roaming over this vast domain, the big Hearst cattle ranch and farm in Chihuahua is the peer of any such estate in the world whether it lies in the green corn belt of Illinois or Kansas, or stretches for miles across the wind-swept prairies of Texas and Oklahoma. Two hundred and fifty miles of barbed wire fence enclose a portion of this vast

"Watchful Waiting"

What It Costs to Live Decently

— By Scott Nearing —

Health and deceny cost money in these United States — just how much is indicated in a recent report of the United States department of labor. This report "presents the results of a study made to determine the cost of maintaining a family of a government employe in Washington at a level of health and deceacy." "Health and deceney" are thus defined:

1. A sufficiency of nourishing food for the maintainance of health, particularly the children's health.

2. Housing in low rent neighborhoods and within the smallest possible number of rooms consistent with decency, but with sufficient light, heat and toilet facilities for the maintenance of health and decency.

3. The upkeep of household equipment, such as kitchen utensils, bedding, and linen necessary for health, but with no provision for the purchase of additional furniture.

4. Clothing sufficient for warmth, of a sufficiently good quality to be economical, but with no further regard for apperance and style than is necessary to permit the family members to appears in public and within their rather narrow social circle without slovenliness or loss of self-respect.

5. A surplus over the above expenditures which would permit of only a minimum outlay for such necessary demands as (a) street car fares to and from work and necessary rides to stores and markets; (b) the keeping up of a modest amount of insurance; (c) medical and dental care; (d) contributions to churches and labor or benefit organizations; (e) simple amusements, such as the moving pictures once in a while, occasional street car riders for pleasure, some Christmas gifts for the children, etc.; (f) daily newspaper.

This modest "health and deceney" standard, for a family consisting of a man, wife and three children — a boy of 11, a girl of 5 and a boy of 2 years of age — cost, in the city of Washington, during October, 1919, $2,288.25.

Two thousand, two hundred eighty-eight dollars and twentyfive cents! Any man, with a young family of three, whose income was less than that amount during October, 1919, could not live in Washington on a standard of health and decency. Two thousand, two hundred eightyeight dollars a year is between $7 and $8 per working day. If these working days are of eight hours, that means about $1 per hour.

APPEAL OF FIVE SOCIALISTS WILL BE HEARD

CHICAGO—Argument of the appeal before the United States circuit court of appeals for the reversal of the verdict of "guilty" in the cases of Victor L. Berger, T. Louis Engdall, Irwin St. John Tucker, Adolph Germer and William F. Kruse has been set for March 11.

Attorney for the five Socialists, Seymour Stedman, filed the appeal, to which the government has just answered in a brief of 308 pages in length. The bulk of the brief is occupied with the published writings of the five. "Free speech is a matter of time and place," says the document.

The fact that most of the alleged offenses were committed before the passage of the espionage law is dismissed by the statement that the papers and leaflets complained of were distributed after the passage of that law.

The story that appeared in the Hearst papers to the effect that the government asked in the brief for the immediate cancelling of the bail bonds and the jailing of the five men is pure fiction, with absolutely no basis of fact, according to an official statement at Socialist party headquarters.

GOOD NEWS FOR OUR READERS

The Toiler has succeeded in contracting for the serial rights of a new book, never before published, on "Proletarian Science, An Economic Interpretation of History". This work is especially arranged for study class use. Likewise adapted for home study.

You will find this just the thing you have been wishing for. It is not a dry, brainracking work, but an intensely interesting, lively written book that appeals to every reader. We can think of nothing which we could publish that would give our readers more pleasure and instruction than this treatise on social facts and their interpretation.

Organize a Study Class Now

We want our readers to get the full benefit of this series of chapters which have not and will not appear in ony other periodical. And the best way to do that is to organize a study class. Whether the class be large or small, a greater benefit can be secured by this method. Talk this over with your friends, arrange a place and time to meet each week and take up these chapters as they appear, you will be immensely benefitted by them.

As soon as you have formed a class please write and tell us, for we want to know how many comrades are taking up this study course. Don't delay. The introductory chapter will appear in the next issue. There are fourteen chapters in the book.

JURY IS HEARING WINNIPEG STRIKE EVIDENCE

WINNIPEG—Seven leaders of the Winnipeg general strike of 1919 are now on trial in the law courts here charged with 'seditious conspiracy.' The men are William Ivens, Richard J. Johns, George Armstrong, Roger E. Bray, Ald. A. A. Heaps, Ald. John Queen, of Winnipeg, and William A. Pritchard, of Vancouver, B. C.

Before the selection of the jury the defense committee attempted to defer the trial until the next assises because of popular prejudice. This was refused as was the request to prevent Justice Metcalfe from judging the case on the ground that he was prejudiced. The committee claimed that the crown counsel of four, members were the spokesmen of the Citizen's committee of 1,000 during the strike; and that the jury panel had been returned in an irregular fashion. These objections were ruled out. A change of venue was denied. The jury chosn is composed of 12 farmers, most of them over 50, and therefore not apt to be in touch with the economic ideas of the city wage worker.

The evidence has for the most part consisted in the reading of sentences abstracted from labor resolutions and platforms.

The trials of F. J. Dixon, member of the Manitoba provincial legislature, and J. S. Woodsworth for alleged seditious libel growing out of the strike, are proceeding simultaneously with the other trials.

Soviet Peace Policies Summed Up

DORPAT—The policy of the soviet republic upon the conclusion of peace with Esthonia was thus summed up by Secretary Kilshko of the soviet delegation to a representative of The London Daily Herald:

"First, we do not disguise our desire for a similar peace with all the border states," he said. "Our creed—the creed which we are fighting for—is self-determination. But it must be applied to ourselves also.

"The border states and their backers—France, England, and America—should have learned by this time that great wars cannot be won by money and munitions alone. They require men. Ours are fighting for the vision of the new world which already has begun to exist in Russia. Therefore, every army fighting us is overgeneralled and undermanned.

"We have known that for a long time; our enemies are beginning to understand it. So we expect before long peace offers, beginning with the Baltic states. On that point it would be well for the allied people to study the agreement with Esthonia which we have issued for world-wide publication. We want the peoples to understand it.

"As for any desire on our part to spread Bolshevism by the sword throughout Europe, I believe this horrid fear is the real reason of the existing governments keeping alive this hopeless and suicidal war. Our obvious efforts to release regiments on the Esthonian front during the recent negotiations, so that the men shall return to work, is one little proof of our real intention.

"It is absurd for sane people to suppose that a workers' and peasants' government has any place in it for militarism. Imagine what a chance such a policy would have for existence in a country as war-weary as Russia, even if the soviet leaders willed it. When we deal with the entente we shall be willing for—more, insist on—provisions making possible the demobilization of the 2,500,000 men in the Red army."

It was Bobbie Burns who wished some power the gift to gie us, to see ourselves as others see us. The Journal of Paris commenting on the "Autocratic Action" of Wilson in "firing" Lansing calls the event, "a striking example of the autocratic regime the facade of which is democratic."

"President Wilson," the paper continues, "returns after his mysterious illness and comes to the conclusion that Secretary Lansing during his absence has been ruling as Lansing wishes and dismisses him. National representation and popular sentiment are not even consulted in reaching a decision in which Louis XIV would have used more formality.

In its editorial on the incident the Libre Parole remarks:

"Mr. Wilson, who has governed his country seven years without the least regard for national representation, who threw America into the war after winning the election on a peace program, and who domineered over the paece negotiations, returns from a mysterious illness to accuse his foreign minister of governing autocratically during his absence. Cook County Jail Prisoners Will See Another Execution.

Chicago, Feb. 17.—Prisoners in the Cook county jail will be permitted to witness executions despite protest by women's organizations, public officials and others, Sheriff Peters announced Tuesday.

"The mere hanging of a particular subject is not meant to punish that subject alone," said the sheriff, "but the real object is to punish the criminal class. If capital punishment means anything at all, it is a deterrent to further crime and an example to others. The very class it is intended to reach is that confined in the jail."

Wouldn't this antideluvian sheriff have taken an unholy joy in the operation of the ducking stool and the burning of witches?

Notice that last statement of his. Here he is judge and jury as well as executioner!

What a splendid example of the brutal, stupid, ignorant officialdom of America today!

An atavistic hangover from the dark ages in full power in the twentieth century.

Let Us Congratulate Ourselves

We wish to congratulate our readers and ourselves too, upon the coming series of lessons in Proletarian Science which begin in the next issue of The Toiler. This work, by W. E. Reynolds will prove to be the greatest series of educational lessons which ever appeared in any Socialist publication. Comrade Reynolds is well known in Ohio, having lectured for many of our Locals in the past and he is recognized not only as one of the best platform lecturers, but his writings in the socialist press have for years gained him a most enviable reputation. Whether comrade Reynolds speaks or writes his work is characterized by originality, true scientific conception and deep eruditition. That "Reynolds knows" socialist economic from A to Z and can present his subject in the most entertaining manner is known to thousands of socialists in all states of the Union.

The Toiler has publsihed many good things, in fact, we take pride in giving our readers the best obtainable. In publishing the series of study lessons, we feel that we are adding to the value of The Toiler as an educational organ. That this series will prove to be of intense interest and value to our readers goes without saying. Every reader should interest himself in organizing a study class and thus reap the full benefit of this course. Local Secretaries should at once line up the members for study class work. Nothing will add interest to your Local work more than this. Organize a study class now.

THE I. W. W. CASE [illegible]

The trial of the 11 members of the I. W. W. growing out of the Armistic Day parade tragedy at Centralia, Wash., is on in full swing at Montesano, a nearby city. After two weeks spent in selecting a jury, the prosecution began its presentation of witnesses and evidence on Feb. 9th. Guns, shells, bulletts and other materials used by the defendants were identified by the Sheriff, John Berry. Other witnesses were E. C. Dohm, state engineer, Sidney Gallagher, city engineer and C. M. Bevans, photographer. A small plat of that section of the city in which the shooting occured is a part of the exhibit of the prosecution. All of the buildings in which the defendants are alleged to have stationed themselves in order to fire on the parade, as well as Seminary Ridge, where the prosecution will attempt to prove I. W. Ws. were stationed and from which point shots are claimed to have been fired into the parade, was also shown.

George F. Vanderveer, the fighting attorney who is defending the I. W. W's. at Montesano. Attorney Vanderveer has handled many notable cases for the I. W. W. The defense of the organization at the Everett, Wash., trials a few years was in his hands. The I. W. W. were acquitted. He was also counsel in the big Chicago cases in which Wm. D. Haywood and many other well known leaders were implicated. Vanderveer was at one time prosecuting attorney of King County (Seattle) Wash.

Judge John M. Wilson, who is presiding in the trial at Montesano. Judge Wilson presents a subject for study by all interested in the big labor trial. Practically unknown, this trial has lifted him into the limelight where he is being subjected to a merciless scrutiny.

Rumors that a large delegation of I. W. W. members were to flood the town has failed to materialize. Scores of American Legion members and special deputies swarm the streets and keep watchful tab on all strangers.

The strong point of the prosecution up to this time has been the submission of the "confessions' of Loren Roberts, a member of the I. W. W., who it is claimed by the prosecution made a complete confession to the police a few days after the shooting occured. It was only after a hard day's fighting that the prosecution succeeded in getting Robert's alleged confession into the court records. Attorney Geo. F. Vanderveer osught to get permission to prove that Roberts was insane at the time the confession were made, but this he was denied.

Then when the prosecution succeeded in getting the alleged confession of Loren Roberts into the court record, that confession arose to damage their case by emphasizing certain points invaluable to the defense. No denial has been made by the defendants that some of them fired on the Centralia parade; nor that some of them doubtless killed Warren O. Grimm.

Admission that these things are true, interlocks with Attorney Vanderveer's contention of selfdefense. Roberts' alleged confession, which the jury is instructed to weigh on whatever merits it may appear to have, contains these declarations:

That the Industrial Workers had been warned at least two days in advance of Armistice Day that their hall was to be attacked, and because of this prepared to defend it.

That one of their members and the woman who owned the building in which they were quartered had notified the city authorities' of their fears of a raid, had asked for police protection, and had failed to get it.

That Roberts and two companions who the alleged confession says went with him to a hilltop with guns shortly before the parade, were instructed to fire on anybody who might attack the I. W. W. hall as threatened, but were not to fire until the hall was attacked.

That one of those three men declared that day that he "hoped to Jesus there wouldn't be any trouble."

Turn in Case Favors Defense.

The case took a sudden turn in favor of the defense late last week. It was a dramatic development, the breaking down of theatimony by one of the state's chief witnesses.

The story of Tom Morgan, former I. W. W., who had turned state's evidence to save himself at the expense of the 11 other defendants, had been told.

Finally Elsie Hornbeck was put on the stand. She is a slim, dark girl of Semitic features, bookkeeper in the North End garage, across the street from the Avalon hotel, from which the state contends some of the firing on the parade was done.

Before the parade came along, she declared, she saw a man leaning out of the south window of the Avalon. He had dark hair and a thin face, but wore no hat, she said.

"Could you identify him if you saw him now?" asked Special Prosecutor Abel.

"I might," the girl answered.

"Look at these defendants, and then tell me."

She scanned the defendants briefly, and said: "It was the first one."

That was Eugene Barnett, who the prosecution has contended stood in that window and fired.

At that moment Vanderveer began a counterfire against the state that was crushing in its significance.

"That was three months ago," said Vanderveer. "Have you ever seen Barnett since?"

"No," said the girl.

"How did you know he was in this line of men?" demanded Vanderveer. "How were you able to pick him out so quickly? You never looked at the other end of the line at all. How did you know he was in here at all?"

Vanderveer hurled all this at her at once. The girl was nervous, hesitant in her replies, as indeed she was throughout the whole cross-examination by the counsel for the defense, and she had to think long and hard before she answered various questions.

Now she answered: "I was told he was in here."

"Who told you?"

"A man outside in the hall."

"Who was he?"

"I don't know. He was waiting there."

"Waiting for what?"

"I don't know."

"How did you happen to talk with him?"

"I don't know. We were just talking."

"What did he say?"

"I don't know exactly. He was talking about the defendants in general."

At this point Vanderveer scored a master stroke. It was like a big moment in a tense drama. He demanded that the girl go out into the hall and point out the man. She looked quizzically at Special Prosecutor Abel. The attorneys for the state growled at "the futility of this stage play."

But meanwhile the girl had left the stand under Vanderveer's insistent glare, went out into the hall with him, and came back a moment later—to say her informant was not out there.

The prosecution had neglected to voice an objection.

"I would have granted it if you had made one," said Judge Wilson.

"Will you say under oath that Barnett is the man you saw in the window of the Avalon?" demanded Vanderveer.

Elsie Hornbeck looked helplessly at Special Prosecutor Abel.

"He looks more like the man I saw in that window than any of the rest," she said, in answer to Vanderveen's question.

"Knowing that it is a matter of a man's life or his death," said Vanderveer, "will you say under oath that Eugene Barnett is the man you saw in the Avalon window?"

Elsie Hornbeck lowered her eyes. She was breathing heavily, and was a pitiful figure. Her eyes lifted and turned toward Abel.

"Look at me!" thunderred Vanderveer. "Answer my question. Will you [illegible] visited several times by persons in behalf of the defense—once it was an American Legion man.

"Were you ever shown a photograph of Barnett?" Vanderveer demanded.

"Yes." Presently she admitted she had seen two photographs.

"And when I asked you if you had ever seen Barnett since three months ago, you answered no," said Vanderveer. "Look at Barnett," he commanded. She obeyed. "Is he thin faced?"

"Well, his face isn't fat," she said.

Actually Barnett's face is full. No one with good eyesight would ever describe him as thin-faced. Elsie Hornbeck said that the first photograph of Barnett was brought to her by the American Legion man; the second, apparently a duplicate of the first, was shown to her by Frank Christensen, one of the special prosecutors.

The girl left the stand shaken.

Over in England, when they get tired of a cabinet and show it the door, they speak of it as the fall of the government, and no one gets excited about it. Over here, if you even criticize the admiistration, they say you want to overthrow the government, and, pretend to mean it. Which shows that the king's English — which was really Mr. Shakespeare's — even now does not always mean what it says.

He Said It.

Rabi Judah Magnes in a speech delivered at the Chicago Coliseum 2|8—20 is reported by the Chicago Tribune of 2|9—20 to have said

"We wish the American workers to understand, as the British and Italian and German and Russian workers NOW understand that economic power CAN and MUST be used to achieve political ends."

"Economic dictatorship must be taken out of the hands of the small oligarchy of big business men and their satellites, lawyers, teachers and lergymen and the power put in the hands of those to whom rightfully it belongs—the masses who work with hand and brain."

The Black Sheep.

CHAPTER XIX.

The girl listened to the exortation of the preaches in a quiet and dignified manner. She was fully aware of the inconsistancies of his argument. She had always considered herself to be a christian; she had read the Bible, that is, those passages of it which are generally referred to by preachers and pious laity. She had conceived christianity to be the expression of the golden rule in every day affairs; a power that sweetened the life and ennobled the ideals of mankind; a force that purified and exalted their educational, social and political institutions. It was her real, tho unexpressed ideal, to to live, that the good people should love her and the bad respect her for her sincerity. In that she was an annomly among her kind. Religious tenets are used for social purposes; they flourish on Sunday; they are hung upon the clothes rack on the Sabbath evening and taken down again when the church bells ring the next Sunday.

Olive wanted her christianity to be applicable to the problems of life; to be for the good of the living, and not to deal with the problems of the dead alone. As was it existed for the benefit of the dying. The church had long forgotten the communal table; the holding of all things in common. Modern christianity in contradistinction to the primitive locks instead of opens prison doors. She could not understand why God should want to put us in this world to fight sin and unrighteousness and then command his preachers who are to make his will known to the world to keep themselves unspotted from its contamination. In short she did not know where she was at and she told her parson so. She told him that she was blind and that it was quite evident that his reverence could not see. She told him, that it was dangerous for blind people to follow men who could not see. That in the wilderness of injustice and cruelty with which man was sorrounded we were in need of men who could rise to duty inspite of loin.

While she spoke the preacher sat limp in his chair. To him it was a voice that came from out of the abyss of reality. It was a soul's cry for the real and only salvation. The preacher realized it but as his stomach was greater than his heart he dared not respond. She opened the door slowly all the while pouring her indignation into the parson's ear. They were not calmly spoken but with a devine earnestness, with an abandon that makes martyrdom possible.

The preacher answered her no more. He only looked at her in horror and amazement and remained in that attitude until she had left his home. Then he walked over toward the little looking glass on the wall and stood before it. "She tells the truth", said he to himself, "but what am I to do. I have preached for thirty years. I have never done any harm. But where and when have I ever done any good? I have caused men to say 'I believe'. I have attacked men as individuals for their immorality, but how am I to fight institutions? It is institutions which make or break a man. It's an awful crime that is going on in this place, when even a child can see it, but what am I to do? Preach the forgiveness of sins, which is simply a liscence for more sinning. Then justifying himself, he turend away, saying, "I leave it to the Lord. I can't risk my salary."

In her room that night Olive went over the entire jail scene. She wrote down in a little note book all that Jack had said and beside it what the parson had said. She read it over time and again, but could come to but one conclusion, and that was, the boy had spoken the truth. He would be justified if he hated her, and all the people like her. It did not occur to her that Jack was but recently emerged into the working class; that he was hardly weaned away from the bourgeoisie. So profoundly, had he impressed himself upon her imagination that she had not been aware of Collin's contemptous attitude or of Rudolph's antagonistic spirit. To her, right and wrong were definite things. They were absolute standards. Her people were doing wrong. It was wrong now, had been wrong in the past and would be wrong in the future. It was a double sin, a sin of commission on the part of the officials and of omission on the part of the people. It had always been her idea that if wrong were pointed out people were willing to do right. Now she found that such men as her father, Duffy, Cranston and Goodman justified crime upon the ground of expedience. She had even caught herself excusing the robbery of the Indians upon the self same ground. While the idea of giving the land back to the Indians, now that it had been improved and bought by innocent white men, also seemed impossible. She came to the conclusion that a wrong once committed could not be righted except thru another and possibly greater wrong.

Her interview with the two men, the convict and the preacher had rent the veil of her temple, and revealed to her what she called the soul of the world. The more she thought of what Jack had said, the clearer she could see the cross of exploitation lying upon the shoulders of Labor; the clearer did she behold the sad and tortured face of Christ in the toiling masses of mankind. It caused her to wrestle with two great concepts of duty, one of which was to her parents and the people to whose class she belonged, in which case she had to make herself content with the world and its ways, or she had to defy the laws and rules of that world and dedicate her life to a struggle such as Jack was waging to make the world what she thought it to be. Of course this desire was utopian. She did not realize that the very mob for which she would sacrifice herself, in the hour of her bitterest need, might turn upon her and rend her limb from limb, as they did to Hypatia. That they might burn her at the stake as they did Joan of Arc. These things did not occur to her. She knew that she had to make a choice between the worshippers of the cross, and the followers of the Christ. And she desired to choose the latter believing sincerely that her god man, Jesus, was the incarnation of the good and the useful in human kind. And she was right. Early christianity was a labor movement or rather was planted in the labor movement already in existence. She did not know these things. She only felt them.

Olive Anderson was laboring under a delusion. She thot that she was choosing the side of labor, in reality she was choosing Jack. She looked at the world thru him. She measured labor and its problems by the big blonde boy, she had seen in an iron cage. All she knew of the vast mechanism of production were steel grey eyes and roughish smile. His logic appealed to her brain; but he appealed to her sex. Olive, the thinker, really wanted justice done for justice sake, but Olive the woman, saw the boy first and as a back ground to him the masses of mankind.

Thus she wrestled all night. In the morning she came down stairs with heavy eyes, her father greeted her with the information that he had heard of her activity in the boys behalf. He told her that she had acted very indescreetly, that she dindn't know the boy, that there was a good chance that he was nothing but a common criminal. He further told her that he would call up the preacher and tell him that he would "knock his block off" if he ever sent his daughter again, "to peddle church junk to bums in the can." At this his wife took violent issue. It was Olive's duty to visit those in prison and preach the word to them and if her husband wanted to live the life of a heathon that was his affair, but her daugther was going to be a christian and preach the word.

But when Olive asked her to go with her to the Judge and to Smallhead and get this boy out, then the mother immediately changed her tune. "Evil doers have to be punished" but while they are punished we must preach to them. To which the girl replied, that mother seemed to be glad that there was some one in jail to preach to. She told her that christian actions were better than christian words. That it was her idea that the best way in which she could show her christianity was to tell the people of the wrongs they were committing and to restore the boy to liberty.

Of all this the mother would have nothing. She would go and pray with an innocent man condemned to death by a corrupt judge, but would not do a thing to stay the hangman's hand. Her creed was not to concern oneself with the affairs of this world except to get what was necessary to eat and wear by legally approved methods. That is the reason she had taken an infidel for a husband. She had never agreed with this views on theology but was thoroly agreed with his methods of 'bringing home the bacon.' The truth was she only ate the bacon and did not concern herself about its origin. The origin of things were a mystery to her. She was only concerned with their destiny, and the destiny of the things Gus Anderson brot home, was his wife's back, her stomach or her church. She concerned herself much about the heathen in China. She could tell long tales of their poverty, their ignorance and their superstition, caused by a bad government and a worse religion. But she knew nothing of the poverty on alkali flat, caused by the machinations of her husband in the real estate business. When it came to misery her philosoprv was, that distance lends enchantment to the view.

During the altercation between the girl and her mother the father took a hand "Well, Olive can be a christian," he roared "without going hob nobbing with jail birds. Her sympathies get the best of her, and the first thing you

OSTRICHES!

Attorney Sharts, editor of the Miami Valley Socialist, states this in the issue of February 13th, in answer to Tom Clifford in The Toiler. "When men declare the ballot a snare and pin their faith to a vague phrase called "mass action", they leave an opening thru which the capitalists, alarmed, furious, ready for an unprincipled and ferocious method of suppression, can hale the unwary revolutionists before their courts and with sufficient plausibility accuse them of whatever a diseased capitalist imagination chooses to regard as "mass action".

"Unwary revolutionists" is good. When we desire to become "wary" and to overthrow the capitalist system without arousing the suspicion of the capitalist State, we shall go to school to attorney Sharts and the Socialist Party. Both are past masters in the art of wariness; they are so wary that capitalism has become wary of their wariness and at Albany has called their little ballot game to task.

"It is not for advocating force but for playing into the clutching paws of the enemy we criticise the Communists and the Communist Laborites", says comrade Sharts.

When will socialists be done with such self-delusion? When will they pull their heads out of the sand and look capitalism in the face? Can capitalism be overthrown without the revolutionists laying themselves open to vicious onslaughts of capitalism? By what method can it be over thrown without arousing the watch dogs of capitalism? By what milk and water applications of social reconstruction can we accomplish the dispossession of capitalism without arousing bitter class-conflict? Are not Albany and Berger enough of a lesson to our comrades of the Right Wing?

Russia and America

The capitalist class domination of all our concepts of life is mirrored in the following news item.

Frayed Cuffs Mean Jail

ST. PAUL, Feb. 18.—Because his cuffs were frayed and his coat faded Tony Vondre couldn't cash a $358 check here. Instead they locked him up while the police investigate him and the check.

To be poor or to have the appearance of poverty is to be dishonored. No virtues of the mind or heart, no service to humanity, however great and noble, can overbalance the odium of lack of wealth under our debauched, caste system of society. Wealth, or the show of wealth is what we are judged by. The dollar is King and God and the source from which all that is held of value is derived.

But a new concept is spreading accross the earth the basis of which is service to society. Not wealth, not appearance, not a life of uselessness are of value, but a rendering of service, a paying of one's way thru life by productive labor of hand or brain are made the conditions of honor under this new social concept.

This is the concept of value and honor under the rule of the Soviets of Russia. Needless to state, the rule of the profit taker and social parasite ended there forever. The workers rule and they have made their rule spell work for all and for all a just return upon their labor. There is no room in Russia for the loafer whether rich or poor. No parasite thrives upon the unpaid labor of others. No parasite class can establish a system of ethics upon the enslaved, riveting upon their minds chains of mental bondage. The new concept extends a challenge to the old, the battle is on and we are wittnessing the crumbling of the latter into the dust of what has been.

Moving the Mass Forward

It is interesting to note the manner in which masses of humans step in this or that direction—against all former convictions, as the economic urge induces them to do so. In the be-puzzled state of mind in which the average man finds himself in these days he is ready clay in the hands of that great Potter, Economic Determinism.

That the mass is being moved out of old accostomed tracks is apparent in the losening and rending of the political strings with which they have hitherto been more or less tightly anchored to one or other of the old parties. This breaking away from the old beliefs is not an arbitrary severance, but betokens a social ferment whose causes lie in the shifting economic foundations of society. In response to economic pressure new ideals are permeating the mass mind and this breaking of faith with the old political ties are its first manifestation.

The mass is ripe for new social concepts. It is subjecting present social questions to a rigid examination,, it no longer accepts unquestioningly the convictions which are freely ladled out to it. While it has reached no settled convictions upon any of the questions of the day and doubtless will take its own time in formulating its new ideals, it is assuming an independence of action that augurs well for its future.

Of course there is a great conservative mass whose reluctant steps indicate the force of the law of statics as applied to mass movements and this slow moving contingent of the advancing army clogs the steps of the freer spirits and even draws them to an apparent full stop at times. But human inertia must at last give way to the law of self interest and when the pressure from behind begins to become again unbearable upon the rear ranks, the mass again sets in motion and new stretches are covered.

This element of the working class, however conservative it may be, and however desirous it may be to stop the agitated march of the ranks of labor, is thus thrust forward, without choice, without desire even, yet ever pushed along the road of progress by the force of economic pressure. It does not take a stand for progress but progress is forced upon it. It is forced along this way by the pull of the militant element in front and the force of events in the rear. It marches without enthusiasm—but march it must.

SPARKS.

Organize that study class now. Then write us and say you have done it. Prepare to get all the good out of this course in Proletarian Science.

Ten copies of the Bullitt Report were ordered by comrade England, of Moline.

Another sub card order from comrade Bramson of Joliet this week.

Comrade Perry Finkle is on the job of sub getting at Yorkville, O. A $5.00 order for cards indicates the start he has made.

A little pamphlet for the non-socitlist—"Two Minute Talks," that's it.

Comrade Wood O. Maxwell, of Canton, likes our cartoons. The dollar he remits proves his liking. Now, we just wonder if you have a dollar that will say any thing along that line?

If you don't like this week's cartoon—don't send us a cent!

Among the comrades who got a copy of Lenin, The Man and his Work, as a premium, we note that of comrade M. A. Teti of Wyatt, W. Va.

Forty dollars was remitted this past week by comrade Cunningham, of Akron for Bullitt Reports.

And we have to repeat once more—that the number of three month subscriptions which the comrdaes send in with their renewals is becoming larger each week. It is just a little opportunity which they seem to delight in taking to educate their fellow slaves. Keep it up is the motto.

A "vote of confidence" is what we would call the 2 year renewal of comrade Jack Harrison of Pawnee, Ill. Yes, and the extra sub and the book order and the two sub cards which he will sell.

Local Niles seems to be carrying out its plan to get all members paid up for the year. A recent dues stamp order shows which way the wind is blowing Comrade M. Slavik, of Warren, O., writes that our cartoons are good, that being so, he remits 50c to guarantee more of them.

Two dollars for the defense of comrade Chas. Baker is to hand from Frank Stidd, of Bellaire. "We can't afford to let capitalism put our fighters in jail", he writes.

A five spot will still do a bit of good in several ways. Comrade Jno Le Pamre of Zanesville, proves that it will. He sends a dollar for his renewal to The Toiler, subscribes for a year for a friend and the other three go to the defense fund.

Among the faraway boosters of The Toiler, we note comrade Helen Ashby of Morton, Wash., is on the job with a bunch of three.

Seven yearlies and three half yearlies constitute the gleanings of John Rehm, of Springfield, O., in the subscription field.

Six yearlies, comrade J. Meek, of Yarrow, Mo., sends us. This puts Yarrow on our map. Good work, thanks comrade Meek.

Every day we receive orders for the Debs picture. The reason is easily found. They are good pictures of our greatest and best loved comrade. Send for one—25c each.

Just $11.00, that's all—all this time. They come from comrade Perry Shipman, of Rock Island and each one stands for a years subscription. Some boost, we admit.

When I can't get any more subs, writes comrade Fosse Evans, of Girard, Kans., "I will sell literature". But it doesn't look to us as tho he intended to stop. This week he sends us $8.50 worth and that totals about $60.00 in the past month which he has sent us in subscriptions. Some record.

You will want as many workers as possible to benefit by the study class course which starts in next issue. Therefore.—get subs.

If you enjoly the best, you will like "Man or the State". It costs one dollar.

Two dollars, one for subscription and one "for the good cartoons you are publishing, comes from comrade Leon Vetta.

"Keep up our good fight," writes comrade C. A. Reider, of Apple Creek, O., and he helps us to do it with two yearly subscriptions.

Comrade Frank Renko of Lovington, Ill., is with us again. Of course he sends in $5.00 for subs. He's gotten the habit.

Three yearlies arrived this week from comrade Thos. Carmedy, of Akron.

An order for eight copies of Socialism for Students from comrade H. A. Wise of Davenport, indicates that there is going to be some investigations of socialism made there.

Some recent good literatures orders have been filled for C. H. Winton, Akron; L. E. Eblen, Robards, Ky.; J. W. Walker, Battle Creek; Ed. Pohl, Cloverdale, Ind.

Organization and defense contributions to the value of $4.00 is to hand from Frank Renko of Livinkton, Ill.

"Russia in 1919", is the premium chosen by comrade Bramson of Joliet, for his $5.00 worth of sub cards. He'll soon have a library, we are thinking.

Local Toledo remits nearly $30.00 for literature and sub cards.

Comrade Wm. Rowles, of Cleveland, remits $3.50 for organization work and defense which he has collected from comrades.

"I'd be lost without it", writes comrade Mrs. Karbosky, of Battle Creek, and she renews her subscription and promises some more soon.

Another new booster is comrade Hrs. E. Markizon, of Wilmington, Del. She orders $5.00 worth of sub cards and requests a copy of Russia in 1919 as a premium.

Comrade Betty Blumenberg remits $1.00 for organization and defense.

Local Tiffin is selling dues stamps, so writes comrade Steckel. An order for more stamps indicates the demand for them.

Have YOU paid February dues yet? Don't delay. Delay means sabotage practiced toward the movement. If you want to sabotage something you know what to pick out for practice.

Comrade L. A. Rospert has taken another fling at old man capitalism. This time he hits him hard—twice as hard as before, for his letter contains $10.00 worth of new subs. When it comes to hitting, comrade Rospert is there.

APPRECIATION

"Just a word about the Toiler cartoons: I don't think Walker, Miner, Becker or Robinson have anything on the Toiler cartoonist. The work of this unknown cartoonist is proof that there lies dormant in our movement much excellent talent of various natures that might be utilized in the interest of the Revolution with little or no expense to the Party." The Question of Unity of the Communis Labor Party and the Communist Party

About December 16, 1919 a communication was received by the executive secretary of the Communist Labor Party, signed by Fritz Friedmann, who at that time was the orgaizer for the German branches who had joined the C. P. This communication asked for an unofficial and non-binding conference upon the question of unity, between the national executive committee of the C. L. P. and "influential members" of the C. P.

To thes communication was received by the executive secretary of the C. L. P, gave answer, i. e., that such a conference would be greatly expedited if the names of the influential members ofthe C. P., who desired this conference, were made known to the N. E. C. of the C. L. P. No answer to this inquiry was ever received from Friedmann.

The communication from Friedmann came before the N. E. C. of the C. L. P. in an official manner on January 3, 1920. It was decided at this meeting to elect a committee of two, consisting of Edward Lindgren and A. Wagenknecht, to interview the executive secretary of the C. P.; to carry this invitation for an informal conference issued by Friedmann, an official of the C. P., officially to the C. P., the desire being to have an official conference, if the C. P. now desired unity.

The following week the C. L. P. sub-committee interviewed I. E. Ferguson, of the N. E. C. of the C. P. Ferguson was told of the Friedman letter and also informed that if the C. P. desired unity, the steps toward that end should be considered officially by the N. E. C. of both parties. Ferguson and the sub-committee of the C. L. P. subsequently arranged for a meeting between this sub-committee and C. E. Ruthenberg and himself.

This meeting took place January 17th. Ferguson could not be present. The secretary of the C. P. Lettish Federation and C. E. Ruthenberg were present for the C. P., and L. E. Katterfeld, Edward Lindgren and A. Wagenknecht were present for the C. L. P. Ruthenberg suggested that unity might be arrived at if the C. L. P. would agree to adopt the C. P. manifesto, program and constitution, and a merging of the two national executive committees. The C. L. P. sub-committee suggested as a counter proposal that the C. L. P. platform be the platform of both parties, as well as the C. P. manifesto and program; that new government rules were necessary to meet the new situation; that a resolution be adopted which admitted that unity was being effected between two parties, the same in principle. It was understood, mutually, that this meeting not unofficial. Upon adjournment of this conference, the C. L. P. sub-committee was given to understand that word would be sent it as soon as the N. E. C. of the C. P. considered the question of unity officially at its meeting.

Word was received from the N. E. C. of the C. P. about January 22, that a committee had been elected to confer with the C. L. P. sub-committee and that the C. P. sub-committee had a definate proposition to make regarding unity. A meeting between the two committees was arranged for January 24th.

At this meeting there were present three committeemen representing the C. P. Ferguson and Ruthenberg were present in an unofficial capacity. The C. L. P. was represented by Bilan, Katterfeld and Lindgren. Wagenknecht was present unofficially.

The C. P. sub-committee placed the following proposition before the C. L. P. representatives:

"That in response to the request from the N. E. C. of the C. L. P. we inform this committee that if it is ready to accept our manifesto, program and constitution and form of organization as the basis for a call for joint convention, we agree to hold a joint convention, and for this purpose, upon receipt of its agreement, we are prepared to elect a joint convention committee (our manifesto, program and constitution to be effective for the C. L. P. only as a basis for a joint call, the form of organization, in-so-far as it means new methods to meet the new circumstances, and the basis for admitting members to go into effect at once)."

Debate proceeded upon this proposition. It was shown by the C. L. P. representatives that even consideration of a convention at this time was useless; that it was criminal to postpone unity in face of the present reaction; that the C. L. P. was in favor of immediate unity and that it fully believed that the membership in both parties favored immediate unity.

The C. L. P. sub-committee then proposed the following counter proposition:

"1. We recognize that there is no fundamental difference of principle between the Communist Labor Party and the Communist Party and we agree to send out a call for a joint convention on the basis of the Communist Party manifesto and program and to elect a convention committee for this purpose.

2. We realize that the constitutions of both parties are impossible of application under present conditions and agree to new organization forms adapted to the circumstances.

WE FAVOR IMMEDIATE WORKING UNITY as far as this can be effected pending the convention. For this purpose the two national executive committees and the two national offices shall be merged, and propaganda and organization work, as well as defense activities shall be conducted in common, but the language federations of both parties shall be allowed to continue upon their old basis until the convention.

The C. P. sub-committee agreed to report this counter proposition to the N. E. C. of the C. P., which was to take place soon, it was claimed.

Upon February 14th the N. E. C. of the C. L. P. held a meeting. In view of the fact that no answer had been received from the N. E. C. of the C. P. a motion was passed to request an answer by March 1st. The N. E. C. of the C. P. was written to this effect.

Subsequently a copy of the C. P. official paper reached us. Thru this we were informed that the N. E. C. of the C. P. had considered the counter-proposal of the C. L. P. The action taken by the N. E. C. of the C. P. follows: "A motion to accept the counter-proposal of the C. L. P. as to point 3 was lost and the following motion adopted: That we reaffirm our previous position with instructions to our committee to make such modifications in regard to the constitution as were indicated in the discussion."

What the modifications referred to are, we do not know. We do know, and we restate firmly, that the C. L. P. stands for immediate unity. We believe that the membership of both parties are for immediate unity. We know that a large minority of the N. E. C. of the C. P. are for immediate unity. But it so happens that those who opposed unity at the convention and since that time, have a majority upon the N. E. C. of the C. P. This majority, consisting of five or six officials, members of the N. E. C. of the C. P., is the only barrier to IMMEDIATE UNITY.

Man or the State

A book of essays by Kropotkin, Buckle, Thoreau, Spencer, Tolstoy and Oscar Wilde.

"Should the State be the master or the servant of mankind"?

This book provides the best-possible approach to the problem of the State. The essays, written by some of the greatest thinkers of our time, describe the historical evolution of the State, point out its failures, defects and dangers, and outline a nobler State—order built upon the corner stones of human brotherhood, industrial association, and individual freedom. [illegible] Killing Trade

SYDNEY, N. S. W.—America cannot save herself from the world financial ruin caused by the great war. Even the relatively high value of the dollar has proved the death knell of her trade in Australia. The commercial priority built up by 30 years of American effort is crumbling because in bankrupt Europe the pound sterling can purchase more than in America.

The documentary evidence of hundreds of cancelled orders, involving many millions of dollars, shows that the bulk of Australia's trade is now flocking back into Europe, where the pound note contains more shillings than it does in the United States.

Smith & Major of Sydney, representing a number of big firms in the states, say they are about ready to give up American connections unless something is done at once to relieve the money situation.

As an illustration it can be stated that heretofore all the glass business belonged to Europe, especially to Belgium. During the past few years the Americans were annexing the bulk of it. A. J. Stutterd, with the Smith & Major Co., is authority for th information that he was obliged to cancel one order for $100,000 worth of glass and that he had stopped orders during the past three months reaching over $1,500,000. All these orders were given to Belgium and Italian firms.

The Kelknap Glass Co. of Seattle had an order for $100,000 worth of glass and it had to be cancelled. E. Townsend & Co. of New York, who have 20 textile mills, had one order for 20,000 dozen ladies' hose cancelled along with other orders. This is merely a drop in the bucket.

The auto trade has been given a jolt. One agent in Melbourne had orders for 700 cars while another in Sydney had orders for 2,000, which were stopped on account of the money exchange. To aid a 25 per cent premium to the already high cost makes trade impossible.

Besides this land Hearst is believed to be interested in oil and other Mexican property which would probably be enhanced in value by intervention.

American rights in Mexico—that means capitalist or property rights. All this noise about "restore law and order" and "protect American lives" in Mexico is merely a scheme to hide the real issue—that of property.

She is not goin' to that can agin' or I'll mop main street from the railroad to the hill with your precious Bible pounding sky pilot. She is my daughter by God, and I'll protect her from sky pilots, and all other s——— who try to get her into trouble." Then turning to Olive he said, "Now papa's little girl is going to stay away from that awful place, ain't you?"

And Olive put her arms about his neck and whispered softly in the old man's ear—"and papa is going to help me get that boy out of jail, won't you papa?" And at that Anderson shook his head and protested that it was not in his province to interfere with the course of justice, and that wrong had to be punished. And Olive reminded him that he himself had said that these men were arrested in order to get their money.

"Well", said Anderson, "being that it's you I will go and see Judge Duffy about it, but you must promise me never to interest yourself in such a case again." Then in a thunderous voice, "Keep out of that jail."

Olive did not promise to fulfill the last request but cuddled up on her father's lap and hugged him tightly, saying, "You'll go right away won't you Daddy? Now don't go to the office and forget. I won't ask you for a thing for the longest time if you'll only do this."

"Yes, I'll do it, I suppose you want me to bring him home, too. How about it Ma?" To which the mother replied, that one infidel in the house was enough.

[illegible]

In our town we are getting on splendidly with the peace. Consider, for instance, the way in which we have stamped out profiteering. Week in, week out, our watch-dogs have been on guard, superb, unbroken. Yesterday I attended the town hall to see them at their work. The Tribunal has been formed according to the time-honored principle of British justice that a man should only be tried by his peers. It consists entirely of shopkeepers.

The first case dealt with apricot jam. A woman complained that she had been charged 2s. for a pound of that conserve. The grocer produced his books, and the chairman looked grave.

"You must bear in mind", he said to the plaintiff, "the terrible cost of raw materials. Considering the rise in turnips and carrots, I consider the jam was cheap at the price."

Equally just was his comment on a girl's plea that three and a half guineas was excessive for a pair of boots. Said boots she observed, bitterly, had come in pieces when she laced them up.

"You have undoubtedly", said the chairman, after consulting his colleagues, "been rough with the boots. The higher the quality of the goods the more delicate handling they demand. And, considering the price of paper, I hold the price was reasonable. However, to show our deep sympathy with the public and to make an example," — here his voice trembled, and one could almost see his fingers fumbling with the black cap — "we order a refund of threepence to the plaintiff."

Case followed case, all treated with the same insight into our commercial system. Sausages at 2sa. pound were justified on accunt of the price of bread, and an umbrella at two guineas was found not guilty by reason of the vast overhead charges in that industry. Last came a housewife with a grievance about milk. The Tribunal examined in just detail the establishment charges of the dairyman. "You have no idea" said the chairman at last, "what burdens the farmer has to bear. Why, the defendant has actually been compelled to pay one full-time worker to empty away surplus milk down the drains and another to keep the drains from clogging. Four pounds a week to each. And you expect cheap milk!"

The woman, who had no spark of logic, demanded that the man should be dismissed. But the chairman, very properly, dismissed the case. — I. B.

NO MORE SOVIET ARKS FOR DEPORTING REDS

Undesirable Aliens Will Be Sent Away in Small Groups

WASHINGTON, — Explaining that the Bureau of Immigration had under consideration plans for sending undesirables out of the country in the future in small detachments, Commissioner General Caminetti said today it was probable that no more "Soviet arks" simillar to the Buford would leave the United States.

Aliens ordered deported, the Commissioner explained, must be sent to the countries from which they came to the United States. If it is found less expensive to send the many radicals recently arrested out of the country in small groups aboard regular passenger ships, Mr. Caminetti said, such a course would be followed.

Deportation by the small group method is going on constantly, the Commissioner asserted, and since last June a total of 1.400 aliens have been sent from the United States.

[illegible] won by the steel strike is only the beginning, declared John Fitzpatrick, chairman of the committee for organizing the steel industry. The eight-hour day will be the next gain, and the men will not have to wait long for it, he said.

Fitzpatrick said that previous to the conference of the steel workers' committee in Chicago, August 2, 1919, the United States Steel corporation had made an announcement of a ten per cent wage increase to satisfy the demands of their employes who were considering the strike, which took place later. That the recent press announcement of voluntary wage increases is intended as a counter attack against the steel committee's new organization drive, is the belief of Fitzpatrick.

SUDNEY, N. S. W.—Like the Mooney case, all efforts up to date to secure the release of the 12 imprisoned men in Australia who are serving sentences of from 5 to 15 years has failed.

Recently two of the detectives connected with the arrest and trial of bribery. This has strengthened the hand of the defenders of the I. W. W.

The Labor party is morally committed to investigate their case in case it comes into power in New South Wales next year, and the general opinion is that once, the case is free of all political bias, they will be adjuged innocent.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla.—Officers of the state federation of labor warn workers not to be lured to this state by claims of anti-union employers, who would establish non-union conditions.

In Tusla a few multi-milioaire oil men have organized "Chapter No. 1, Patriotic Friends of Labor," which declares for the so-called "open shop" and seeks to transfer the power of trade unions to a movement dominated by them.

The anti-unionists are appealing to the patriotic instinct of the people to aid them in their union-smashing campaign.

WINNIPEG — A housing commission has been appointed by the municipal government which is authorized to lend prospective builders 85 per cent of the total cost of their homes. Citizens may choose any site and style of house they please. A monthly payment of $7.13 on every $1.000 borrowed is charged, which includes the interests on the mortgage. The whole amount is paid off in 20 years at this rate, or it may be met sooner.

PARANA, Argentina — In spite of repeated efforts during more than a year, laborers on the public works here have not been able to obtain the enforcement of the minimum wage provided by law.

Barabbas or the Christ

And these the evil spirits, dressed in human garb,
Devising schemes to rob mankind
And plunder both the cradle and the grave;
Barking like Satan's dogs within the halls of Hell
When Charon's ship arrives
With cargo loads of human Souls.
Advised by legal lights upon illegal ways
By which, like hungry wolves,
They might evade the laws of God and man,
And kill without committing murder;
And wallow in the blood of those they crucified
Without indictment for their crimes.

Advised on ways to rob and plunder all mankind
To steal the things the laborer's hands had made,
And take the lands the farmers hands had tilled;
To claim the milk in mothers breasts
And food that fed the orphan's mouths.
Advised, by Doctors of the law, how to take and keep
And still evade their crimes,
And stand within their stalls in dedicated church
And sing their solemn hymns and psalms;
And in their prayers tell God how much they loved Him,

And how they hated mammon selfishness and wrong.
And how if some benighted fool,
Unable to discern their autocratic right
To take and hold the thingsthey pleased.
Should cry aloud against these things they did;
They still had recourse, when the clamor came,
To call upon the courts, their bulwark of defense,
For did they not own these? [illegible]
Had not their shekels made the laws
From legislative halls and tribunes,
And placed the judges on the bench
To make interpretation of them.

What mockery to say
They were not masters of the world.
And laid the ways
By which the "trouble makers" of the world,
The Agitators, who did claim these things
Were made by God for all mankind,
Should meet their just reward;
And be placed within the prison cells,
Or else be crucified
As Christ in earlier days,
When He did agitate against the thing
That He did call injustice.
And so to day, as in the days of Pilot,
You still may choose between Barabbas and the Christ

Our Washington News Letter

BY PAUL HANNA.

WASHINGTON— Do wage-earners benefit from a big export trade? What becomes of the fruits of industry above what wages will buy back? These and other pertinent questions fill the minds of honest economists as they view the industrial and financial wreckage caused by war.

At present every day's news is filled with facts which contradict the old "laws of sound business." At Washington nobody can be found who any longer attempts to explain the contradictions. There is only bewilderment, and hope that the world may somehow muddle through its welter of high prices, debt, taxation, falling exchange and worthless paper money.

Before looking abroad there is a condition at home worth mentioning. For a year past business men and politicians have been telling the working man that he must produce more. Figures were used to show that the demand for shorter hours could not be granted without slowing up production and further increasing prices on account of the shorter supply of commodities. All polite people grasped at that doctrine as an easy explanation of the high prices mystery.

Within the past fortnight, however, the drop in foreign exchange has brought an implied denial of the above argument. Hopeful leaders, from cabinet members down, are saying that prices will soon come down because vast stores of food, clothing and the like, which Europe can no longer buy, will be dumped on the home market at almost any hour.

This is taken as a confession that Americans have been paying terribly high prices because the export gambler was taking food out of their mouths and clothing off the backs and holding those necessities in storage to sell abroad for more than the people at home could pay. It indicates that with all the shortening of working hours in America, our farms and factories have still turned out a vast surplus for speculators to hold for sale to Europe.

And hopefull politicians declare high prices will end as soon as the American people are allowed to have a bigger share of their own excess products!

Crossing to France, we hear Minister of Commerce Isaac saying: "The only way to re-establish our credit is to increase our export trade. We must not allow the foreign market to be taken by others. Manufacturers must reserve a large part of their output for export."

But to that good old gospel — so familiar to Americans — another conservative French faction replies: "If we export more we will be shorter of supplies at home. We cannot be saved unless we produce more for ourselves and stop exporting so much."

Arguments, like the above are going on all over Europe. And the wage earners, it is reported, are learning from it all that goods shipped abroad are goods which labor has produced but is not permitted to consume. In "normal" times this process works smoothly enough; the workers being contented with their "living wage" and not caring what becomes of the surplus. But the workers of Europe have emerged from the war with a new interest in their work and what it is for.

Last summer the American railwaymen postponed their wage demands when the president gave a solemn promise that the government would leave nothing undone to bring down the cost of living. If they have been exerted, all the powers of the government have proved useless at that task. The masses know now that political promises do not lower the cost of living. The old arguments are all shattered by the facts.

The Snake in the Grass

A Challenge He Won't Accept

LONDON — George Lansbury, editor of TheLondon Herald, now in Moscow, last week wirelessed a cabllenge to Premier Lloyd George, to come to Moscow and join in his conference with Lenine.

"You are making the mistake of your life in your estimate of the soviet leaders," Lansbury told the premier.

"I beg of you to come here to Moscow and join in conference with Lenine. I am sure your eyes would be opened as soon as you crossed the frontier. The soviet leaders are first rate, clear headed, honest, and humane. It is to the interest of England and to the world to make peace with them without delay."

The London Herald contains Lansbury's challenge to Lloyd George and also gives an account of an interview Lansbury has had with Secretary Molnichansky, of the Federation of Russian Trade Unions, with the soviet government.

"The Russian trade unions" said the secretary, "are an integral part of the soviet organization. Their form in effect is that of one big union with many sections very similar to the British conception of industrial unions.

"Their chief function has been to organize the supply and distribution of labor and to control work shop organization. Their formation of industrial armies is in no sense militaristic. They are result of the desire of the rank and file themselves who cheerfully have realized that such an organization is the only way under conditions that have obtained to restore Russia economically."

Lansbury added with emphasis that the Bolshevicki have nothing whatever to hide. They understand their mistakes and openly acknowledge their failures, he said "they know that their friends will understand the obstacles they had to overcome. The diseases, starvation, and sufferings that have been endured, have been on an unequal scale but with it all the spirit of the people remains unbroken."

QUERY OF "WHERE IS JOHN REED" ANSWERED

Shipped to Norway, Then Turned Stowaway.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 22.—John Reed friend of Lenin and Trotzky, who is under indictment in Chicago for alleged conspiracy to overthrow the United States government arrived in soviet Russia by way of Finland last December, it is learned. Since his indictment last month federal and Illinois state agents have been searching for Reed all over the United States.

On being told of Reed's presence in Russia — it is not known yet whether he has left there—the state department was interested to learn the channel through which he obtained a passport. The department is informed that he shipped as a sailor from an American port to Norway. From there he traveled on foot to Stockholm. There he stowed himself away, or was stowed away, on a vessel about to sail for Helsingfors.

Narrowly Escapes Arrest.

Reed narrowly escaped arrest in Helsingfors, but, but disguising himself as a Russian peasant, he crossed the frontier into Russia. He was received in Moscow as the official envoy of the American Communist Labor party. As such he attended the meetings of the third internationale and made a speech at the all-Russian soviet convention in the middle of December.

In Moscow Reed lived at the Kremlin as the guest of the people's commissaires.

He was in constant communication with Lenin and Trotzky it is stated, and visited the Red army at the front.

Reed was in Moscow until the middle of January. Of that the state department is quite certain. His reception in Russia was the warmer because two years ago Trotzky appointed him bolshevist consul general at New York.

Mr. Reed never assumed that office, for, as it turned out, the appoitment was made to facilitate his return to the United States.

AGAINST RUSSIAN BLOCKADE

An Appeal of the Checho-Slovak Social Democratic Women to the Women of All Nations.

Prague, December 24th.

Women! The Russian Soviet Republic is oppressed with hunger and distress. Exhausted by the world war, distracted with inner conflicts, cut off by the rigid Entente blockade, the millions in Russia are suffering misery and horror. Mothers become insane when they look at their half-dead children; men in the desperate effort of saving their children find themselves tempted to commit crimes — and the children, struck by the blighting frost, die like a young, tender crop.

The blockade, the wilful starvation of Russia, which is a terrible crime equal to that of war in its effects, is being perpetrated against millions of innocent men, women and children, a race with a high cultural mission, a people that has presented to us the most magnificent literature in the world, the greatest thinkers, the most self-sacrificing heroes of progress. Women! Call upon the conscience of your Governments, of your representatives in Parliament, of your labor leaders, demand the lifting of the blockade against Russia! Raise your voices for the protection of weeping mothers, dying children, men in despair. Protest against the blockade in the name of humanity!

You American, English, French and Danish women, should demand the opening of the boundaries and the sending of foodstuffs to Russia, which will also be done by the women of the Slavic nations, who have lived through the blockade of the world war and who know all its terrors. Citizens! Women! Show that you can unite a love and undestanding of human misery with an abhorrence for violence, and devote your powers to the struggle for peace between nations, for the humanizing of civilization and for the lifting of the blockade. Russia is the advance-guard of Socialism, the bearer of the ideas and aims which we honor, and for that reason Russia must not starve! Demand the opening of the boundaries of our European states, for free trade with Russia! We must help the hungry, and we must also secure them peace, labor, and bread!

Reds Better Americans then Prosecutors, Says Jane Addams

Jailed Agitators More True to Flag Than Men Who Raid Them.

Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, speaking yesterday afternoon in Recital Hall at the Auditorium Theater, (Chicago, Feb. 22) branded the activities of the federal government in the suppression and deportation of foreign-born radicals as a form of intolerance. She called the reds in jail and under suspicion more American in their basic ideas and thought than the agents of the government which is sending them to banishment.

These Socialists, Communists, members of the I. W. W., or whatever they may be, she said, are being persecuted for no other reason than that they represent the voice of the majority of the people and the constitutional right of free speech, free thought and free press.

Suffrage Leaders Speak.

Miss Addams, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, Miss Grace Abbott and other suffrage leaders spoke to more than 300 men and women as a part of the program of a school of political education being conducted during the convention of the National American Suffrage Associaition.

"This wholesale and so-called deportation of radical thinking and speaking peoples is very disconcerting to those working for the Americanization of alien-born citizens," said Miss Addams. "It is significant that since the so-called red raids began more than 1,500,000 aliens have applied for passports back to their native lands. They feel America no longer is a safe place to live.

Trying to Deport Party.

"Hundreds of poor laboring men and women are being thrown into jails and police stations because of their political beliefs. In fact, an attempt is being made to deport an entire political party.

„These men and women, who in some respects are more American in ideals than the agents of the government who are tracking them down, are thrust into cells so crowded they cannot lie down. I know of one batch of radicals, thirty-two in all, who faced this situation in an American jail. They were huddled together like rats and treated as criminals because of their political opinions.

"And what is it these radicals seek? It is the right of free speech and free thought; nothing more than is guaranteed to them under the Constitution of the United States, but repudiated because of the war.

Dangerous Situation.

"It is a dangerous situation we face at the present time, with the rule of the few overcoming the voice of the many. It is doubly dangerous because we are trying to suppress something upon which our very country was founded—liberty.

"The government is proceeding on the theory that because these thinking aliens demand an end of class struggle and equal rights for all they are plotting to overthrow the United States. So it was said of suffrage years ago. Anything that is radically new to the established order of things is revolution in the eyes of many.

"But, I tell you, these radicals simply are struggling for equal rights; to down the spirit of intolerance which has crept into our government.

"They are proceeding as they are simply because in no other way can they gain attention.

Speech a Safety Valve.

"The cure for the spirit of unrest in this country is concillation and education—not hysteria. Free speech is the greatest safety valve of our United States. Let us give these people a chance to explain their beliefs and desires. Let us end this suppression and spirit of intolerance which is making of America another autocracy."

Carrie Chapman Catt was almost equally vehement in denounciation of what she termed the attempt of the federal government to curb free speech and free thought.

"If all the talk—even the pro-German talk—had been out in the open before and during the war, we would have had a chance to answer in the open and so clear away misundestanding," said the suffrage leader. "As matters stand, there is danger we may lose what has been our proudest boast—our republican form of government.

Rule of the Few Now.

"Because of the political corruption in the United States—corruption which began fifty years ago, and included the buying and selling of votes—we have come to a form of government that is not of a class or classes but a rule of the few."

Bolshevik Policy in the East

Talk with Lenin's Chief Lieutenant.

I had a long conversation to-day with Radek, formerly the Russian Soviet "ambassador" here, upon the "Red menace to India." Radek, one of Lenin's chief lieutenants, is in regular communication with Moscow and entitled to speak with authority.

"Press engineered" was his comment on the Red menace agitation, yet he added that it contained a mixture of truth in its untruth. Radek's knowledge of world affairs is almost a legend in Russia, and he showed what a great measure of truth the legend possesses as he rapidly passed his finger over the map of Asia and in quick sentences described the local situations. The Eastern world is in a state of ferment, but Soviet Russia, he affirms, is not responsible for the unrest, which is due partly to historical reasons, partly to "Entente Imperialism," and partly to the effect of the world-war. Thus, throughout the Far East prices have risen proportionately higher than in Europe.

Radek, mentioning other causes of trouble, said that Semenoff's Cossacks in Mongolia were assisting the Mandarins against the famishing population. There was a popular movement in Persia directed against foreign domination. Of late a peasant land movement has arisen in Anatolia, to which the Young Turks were compulsorily adapting themselves. The Middle East, he added, was disturbed by British Admiralty designs on the oilfields within the stretch indicated by Bagdad-Khanikin-Baku.

"No Propoganda" Guarantees.

Radek admitted that emissaries from the whole East, Far, Middle, and Near, could be found in Moscow. It was natural enough, he said. The same phenomenon was observed at the time of the first Revolution, in 1905, which sent a similar wave across the Asiatic Continent. "Our attitude is simple," he declared. "We sympathize with these Eastern peoples, but we go no farther. Soviet Russia has no Imperialist aim. Imperialism means either a desire for the subjection of other nations by arms, or their exploitation in the interests of capitalism. Neither motive applies to Soviet Russia. Our aggressiveness is merely a newspaper invention. On the contrary, our one desire is for peace. Russia is ruined by lack of transport.

"But what of the invasion of India by propaganda?" I asked.

"The Russian Government conducts no such propaganda," answered Radek. "On the contrary, it is prepared to give to any country that established peaceful relations all conceivable guarantees. Of course, the march of ideas cannot be arrested, but we are ready to give guarantees that we shall use neither money nor agents, direct or indirect, for the conduct of propaganda in India or elsewhere in the British Empire. We have too great need for peace with England to haggle. We are under no illusions. British Imperialism is not merely a capitalist intrigue, but is rooted in the psychology of the masses. The British domination of India and Ireland is popular. If we desire the English masses to become Socialist we cannot do anything from outside. Salvation must come to the English proletarians and oppressed peoples of the Empire from

Now that the purchasing power of the dollar is only about 50% of normal, (in other words it takes a dollar now to buy what we used to buy for 40c) now in these days of underpaid school teachers, the term Little Red Schoolhouse, takes on other significance. The term now in many cases refers more to the heads of the inhabitants there of than the color of the pigment smeared upon the other surface.

In other words, poor pay, over-work and lack of consideration, has put a little red teacher in the little red schoolhouse, and that means a lot of little red scholars who will be better read by far than the old fashioned square-pegs-forced-in-round-holes, machine-made scholars. It was Ingersoll who discribed the capitalist-controlled school as "a place where pebbels are polished and diamonds ars dimned." The red teacher in the red school will rectify that mistake.

Let us all move to Gary (Ind.)

In a series of articles by Emerson Hough in the Sat-Eve-Post, Hough makes this statement, "I passed most of my first day or so among the oppressed WHO COULD HARDLY MAKE MORE THAN TWENTY OR THIRTY DOLLARS A DAY, and who were ground under the heel of a military and industrial despotism."

Of course Mr. Hough is a thoroly reliable writer and the Post surely wouldn't deliberately allow an article to appear in its columns which it knew distorted the truth, so with the authority of both Mr Hough and the Post that wages are twenty to thirty dollars a day in Gary, let us all go.

Of course Mr. Hugh didn't SAY that wages were $30.00 a day in Gary but there is what he did say. What inference could be drawn from it?

Mr. Hough also tells of the presence of the soldiers in Gary but he forgot to tell us whether the $30.00 a month "oppressor" envied the $30.00 a day "oppressed" or not. Possibly he will tell that in a future article.

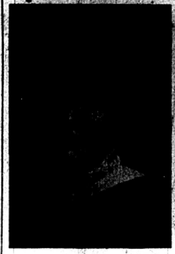
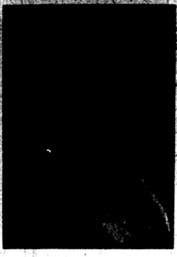
Two Comrades Who [illegible]

ONE HAS APPEALED FROM AN UNJUST AND OUTRAGEOUS COURT DECISION OF 15 MONTHS IN PRISON.

THE OTHER IS FIGHTING EXTRADITION INTO MAW OF ILLINOIS CAPITALISM.



Lotta Burke



Marguerite Prevey

On Feb. 25th at Cincinnati Ohio, Lotta Burke with 12 other socialists and Communist Labor Party members were given sentences ranging from three months and $100.00 fine to 15 months in county jail and U. S. penitentaries. After two years of litigation the sentences were imposed by Judge Peek of the Unites States district Court The charges were conspiracy to defeat the conscription act The cases were immediately appealed and all defendants are out on bail of $3,500 each.

At the hour this is written, comrade Marguerite Prevey, of Akron is confined in the Columbus Ohio jail, charged with violation of the capitalist made "criminal syndicalism" law of Illinois in that she helped organize the Communist Labor Party at Chicago, last August.

She is fighting extradition from Ohio. Altho the extradition papers were signed by Governor Cox, and her arrest was permitted in his office by an Illinois agent, Jos W. Sharts, her attorney, secured a hearing before Judge E. B. Kincaid of the Franklin County Common Pleas Court. At this hearing Judge Kincaid gave the decision that before comrade Prevey could be taken from Ohio, the state of Illinois would have to prove the Communist Labor Party was organized for the purpose of overthrowing the government by "violence and other unlawful means". The hearing will probably be had before this issue of The Toiler reaches its readers. In the mean time she is held a prisoner as Judge Kinkaid doubts his authority to allow bail in this case.

Both these comrades are members of the State Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party of Ohio. Both have been long recognized for their loyalty to the workingclass and the principles of uncomprising revolutionary socialism. Both have sacrificed much for the workers, both have given unstintingly of all that they had for the Cause. Both have stood their ground when weaker comrades have felt the desire to get out from under persecution. They deserve all the support you can give them now.

No women comrades in the Ohio Movement are more universally respected than Lotta Burke and Marguerite Prevey. None have rendered more service to the workers of Ohio than have these two uncomprising fighters for Industrial Democracy. None deserve the support of all workers more than these two comrades.

If Marguerite Prevey is allowed to pass into the clutches of the capitalist class of Illinois and be persecuted under the most drastic and infamous of all the state syndicalism laws, we must carry her case thru the courts even to the highest one. She cannot fight this battle alone, you and all of us must help bear the cost.

Lotta Burke's case and that of all the 13 Cincinnati comrades who were convicted with her, must be carried to a court where evidence is at least respected as such. Funds must be subscribed to defray the costs. They will have to come from the workers. It is to the workers that we must appeal for help in staying the hand of persecution in these cases of our comrades. Send us what you can spare for this work. Help defend them. Address all funds to The Toiler 3207 Clark Ave. Cleveland, Ohio.

PHILOSOPHY.

"I know not whether laws be right,
Or whether laws be wrong.
All that I know who lie in jail
Is that the wall is strong;
And that each day is like a year,
A year whose days are long."

This in a declamatory voice at about five-thirty in the morning, from Rudolph's cell, awakened Jack and Collins from their slumbers. It also awakened the temper of the latter. Collins was not fond of esthetics when at his ease; and when irritated he shared none of the sentiments so dear to the average radical. Unless he happened to be exactly in the right mood, he had an absolute aversion for what he termed the aberrations of an effete culture. He often said that poetry and novels were written by men who had nothing better to do to be read by people who could do nothing better.

"Say, what in hell do you mean by spouting your whoresome poetry at this time of the night! Do you begrudge a fellow what little sleep he can get in this infernal hole? O. if I could get at yuh. I'd slou you in the mush," thundered the big man from off his bunk in the opposite cell.

"Oh, well" " retorted Rudolph," you don't need to be so peevish about it. Its nearly broad daylight. Its time to get up! Then after a pause.

"If you were in this cell all along, you too might want to give vent to some sort of expression."

"Why don't you do like the rats—gnaw the bars. It will keep your jaws busy and not disturb us." This said, the big man turned over and drew the ragged quilt about his shoulder and once more attempted to sleep. This proved to be impossible. Rudolph's eloquence had banished the fingers of Morpheus from his eyes. Jack too, was wide awake, and in contradistinction to his cell mate, not peeved. In fact he was rather interested in the subject matter of the poem. The days for him had been rather short; his companions keeping his mind busy with a recital of the wonderful phenomena in the social world.

He asked Rudolph from what poem this stanza was quotted and received the information that it was a part of the ballad of "Reading Gaol" by Oscar Wilde, who was as Rudolph avered, one of the lord's of language of the last century.

"Oscar is one of Rudle's heroes," sneered Collins who was still in bad spirits. "One of your tempermental artistic gents."

"Yes, that's right. Oscar Wilde is one of my literature heroes, but for all that I do not appreciate your invendo that I would want him for a cell mate," protested Rudolph.

"Who was this Oscar Wilde!" asked Jack.

"A degenerate," snapped Collins

"An artist," explaned Rudolph.

"Well in ninty cases out of a hundred it amounts to the same thing," Collins growled.

"What you really mean is that Mr. Wilde awakens strong convictions either for or against himself. He must have been an interesting personality. Tell me more about, him," remarked the boy.

"He was a great writer of poetry and drama," Rudolph explained. "A man with a splendid sense of the beautiful, in nature, in language and in man, but his weakness got him into trouble. I might describe him best if I said that he wrote splendid books but lived a rotten life." Then after a moments reflection. "no the last part would be too strong. His life was not so bad, he smiply had an abominable weakness."

"I might say of you Rudolph, "Jack observed," what Huxley said of Gladstone, that you retreat under a could of words. From what you say I cannot make out whether Mr. Wilde's weakness was worms or wiggles."

Collins explained to Jack in the commonest of common language just in what Wilde's weakness consisted. After which the boy wanted to know more about the man and his books.

Rudolph explained to him that the man was dead. That he died as a result of a prison sentence imposed upon him for his weakness but that his books could be found in every library public and private thruout the English speaking world; that they had been translated into nearly all civilized languages; that they were read and admired by cultured and refined minds everywhere. To which Jack replied that in that case it would be well to consider the books apart from the man. To think of him only as a great author, the products of whose brain had enriched the world and forget his weakness which after all did not enter into his books.

"Let us forget his life and remember his work for their beauties sake," said the boy.

"I cannot appreciate anything a skunk does," Collins said. "I cannot read a line he penned without thinking of his infernal degeneracy."

"Oh, you christian," sneered Rudolph.

"I am no christian," the other retorted.

"No, you mean you 're no Church Member, but you are as fanatic as any Jesus lover I ever knew. You are a free will Christian, and nothing else can be made out of you."

"You're crazy," roared Collins. "I hate christianity as much as you do and you know it."

Rudolph agreed that this was technically true, but asserted that that when it come to showing the spirit of intolerance he was a regular Calvin. "Take your stand on the drink question, you are as extreme as a howing methodist, Rudolph said. Then continued "You know that the drink appetite is a physiological condition. That its victim cannot resist the temptation even tho he see the faces of his starving children in the glass. Cursing his weakness he gets drunk. He ruins his health, impoverishes his kids, while crying to his God for help. But he is a dipsomaniac; his body has an affinity for drink as other has for air He cannot help being what the forces of heredity made him. Yet, you who call yourself a radical and a liberal, curse your fellow worker whose appetite differs from your own. You call them every name on the calendar as if they were victims from choice instead of from circumstance. Imitating the christians you make everybody but yourself a heretic. No Collins dear, you may not be a christian, but if you are not, then you are a Jew or a Mohammedan, or a Brahmin or perhaps a Voodist, but you're no radical, you, are no scientist, you are no idealist, you are too damned intolerant; you are good at condemning but you never make an effort to understand for if ever you learn to understand then you would learn to forgive."

"Yes and you are Christian, also, for you talk about forgiveness. Your consistency is something wonderful," snapped Collins and he leaped out of his bed as a tiger leaps at his prey. "To forgive means to surrender, and surrender means death. You 'd burden yourself with so much human waste that you'd be smothered in the filth of your own choosing. I've told you on several occassions that I don't hate these vermin, I only seek to eliminate them from my environment. I hate vermin, high brow and low brow. That's the reason I'm against them. They hinder me in the struggle for existence, that is all. That's enuf."

Rudolph's sally had made Collins too angry to answer with his customary coherence. He trailed off into mutterings about the inability of the workers to center their minds on a common purpose because they tolerated within their ranks these elements who placed their own personal appetites and ideas above the common good. "Try to hold a meeting for the purpose of fighting the boss with one third of the membership soused and the other third filled with poetic dream stuff and capitalist lies, you have just one third who are ready and willing to fight the master, loaded down with two thirds of their own numbers in the shape of physical and mental nincompoops"

Jack, who had been listening to both of them now asked Rudolph what he had to answer the big man.

"You understand that drunkeness is a result of a peculiar body chemistry which people inherit from their ancestors, therefore the owners of such bodies are constantly in danger of having their brain befuddled thru yielding to their inborn craving. I know that a drunken man is dangerous. But the bread and butter question is not an individual proposition; it is wholly collective in its nature. Drunk and sober must solve it together. I have told Collins many a time hat if you don't take drunkards into the organization they will scab enough to build an organization who on us and help break your power. Then where are you going to get men don't drink. We must deal with people as they are and not as we want them to be.

Jack still wrapped in his blanket laughed good naturedly, "Oh, oh! you poor fish! You get on the track of truth and when you get insight of it, you shy like a broncho colt. Neither of you have the necessary guts to be real scientists; both of you are seeking the light blindfolded; for fear that if you should find it, it would reveal to you your naked impotence. For two weeks I have listened to your arguments and tried to test them in the light of reason, and when all is said it appears to me that your ideas would be screamingly funny if

Promoting Americanism

About every method imaginable is being advocated and practiced to promote the growth of drooping "Americanism" in these decadent days. From extremes of mildness and conciliatory methods to the roughest of "rough stuff" the treatment runs. It all indicates a very positive uncertainity on the part of those in authority as to the most politic methods to deal with the new forces developing in the mire of rotten capitalism. Nowhere have the methods of desperation been put in more extensive operation than in the city of Cleveland. Here the White Guard of capitalism has reached a perfection of organization that is the envy of every capitalistic controlled city in the nation. During the war this delectable crew of "100% Americans" operated under the misnomer of the American Protective League When the war was over its official existence came to a sudden ending by ukase of the Department of Justice.

But it had proved too invaluable an aid to local capitalism to be allowed to be extinguished. Its reorganization was effected under the happy christening of the Loyal American League. It is very loyal to every thing which is generally understood as un-American. Its special love for the American principles of free speech and assembly are best judged by the fact that it has been the chief instrument used in the repression of these Constitutional liberties, or shall we say privileges? It is composed of local capitalist and such dupes as can be hired or cajoled into its service, backed up by the local police who are made to serve as its puppets. But there seems to be a trimming of sails just now. Has the Loyal American League sensed a feeling of public opposition to its free handed methods in cultivating the theories of true 100% Americanism? We wonder if those of its members who are gifted with a degree of wisdom are not aware of a reaction against the methods which it has pursued in the establishment of silence of the proletaire? We believe that possibly a few of them may be able to see a straw in the passing wind. But that many of them will have such strength of vision would be too much to expect of any parasitic element. Few indeed, may be expected to realize the existence of any passing breath until it grows to a hurricane and brings down upon their witless heads the house of cards in which they dwell in seeming and smug security.

As an instance of at least an appeaence of an awakening of some of the League members to the unpopularity of their actions, we quote the following from the Cleveland Press of Feb. 26th and to be impartial we also print alongside a news item that appeared in the Plain Dealer the following morning.

Here is what they say

'NO RED DANGER'

"The average American isn't frightened by the Reds because he believes an uprising against the nation impossible." Arch Klump, president of the Loyal American League, told Cornell Club members Thursday.

"What he ought to realize is that it is a war of propaganda and not force," he said.

"The way to meet it is with more propaganda. We ought to fill our schools, and church and public forums with so much Americanism that there won't be room for anything else."

Here is what they do.

18 HELD IN RADICAL RAIDS

Police and members of the Loyal American League raided a rooming house at 622 Hamilton avnene N. E. is a search for radicals at midnight last night They found six men, two of whom said they were aliens and were held for examination.

Copies of "The Rebel Worker," "The Fellow Worker," and "One Big Union" were taken. Inspector George Wadsworth of the Loyal American League was in charge of the raid.

Later operatives of the department of justice, aided by police and Loyal American legion members, visited a score of homes in various sections of the city. Twenty-five men were brought to the Federal building and after being questioned twelve were held for further examination.

That the president of the League should voice such a statement on the eve of a raid conducted by his organization upon the homes of workers attests to the fact that either the League's president is out of tune with the purposes of the organization or that he is camouflaging—to use a mild expression. And we don't care which it is for we wouldn't believe him no matter what his statement.

The point we wish to reach, and we confess we have gone a long way around, is this: capitalism is organizing its White Guard in America. Let us all realize that fact. Chambers of Commerce are the source from which spring the organizations, political or otherwise, which have throttled every liberty and Constitutional guarantee whose corpse swings from capitalism's gibbets. It is behind the doors of the Chambers of Commerce (robbery) that every onslaught upon the workers has been planned. They are organizing, and they are organizing for ruthlessness. The past five years proves what they will attempt; the past few months ought to prove to Americans what they intend; the present ought to make us realize how tightly the class lines are being drawn.

A White Collar Revolt

We gather from a perusal of the papers that there is a degree of "unrest" developing among our intelligentsia, or what is known in western parlance as the "white collar brigade". The conference of the National Educational Association at Cleveland this past week has brought to the forefront the pitiable conditions and circumstances in which this contingent of workers exists.

It seems that the teachers of our g-r-e-a-t American public school system are paid the wage of peons, given the treatment of slaves and according a general existence so far below the standard of common laborers that we wonder in what their great education and deep erudition is lacking to render them such spineless bipeds as to stand for it.

Of course we know that the wearing of a clean collar is or was, considered compensation on its own account, while if not entirely adequate in itself for any outlay of effort and life, was very largely to be considered as part payment. In other words, the clean job was its own compensation — and honors. But lo and behold, we are confronted with the dilema of keeping in clean collars in these days of high prices. When the price of a laundered collar has risen from 1½ cents to 5 cents straight — lingerie accordingly, tho we decline to go into details in this latter. our white, imaculate slaves male and female alike, are up against a proposition.

The teachers are not alone in their difficulties. While laborers have the sense to organize into unions for their own welfare and have profitted accordingly, the intelligentsia — so called, has not been so intelligent. It has held aloof from contamination with the "proletariat" on the theory that its social position was a somewhat higher one and that "brains would be recognized and rewarded". They have been. The white collar brigade is recognized as the most enslaved and most pittilessly exploited of all classes of workers and according to its own admission is rewarded accordingly.

The rising costs of living are giving them numerous and constant jolts. They are beginning to learn that it would be the part of intelligence to organise into associations for their own economic welfare. From stenographer to college professor and preacher, the idea is taking hold. And while the present stage of querrelous agitation will avail little, we may hope that economic determinism will overcome caste and false ideas and the great army of brain workers will soon join their comrades of toil and make the world a fit place for human beings to inhabit, and bury forever the caste system in the ranks of labor.

SPARKS.

Local Portsmouth came up front last week and took a pot shot at old man capitalism in the form of a $26.00 donation to the press fund. The names of the donors are J. S. Rapp; A. A. Adams; Geo. Emmett; Robert Shelton; Wm. Rapp. We willingly concede that the members of Local Portsmouth are "on deck" and then some.

A group of workers at Youngstown have arranged for weekly open forum meetings at Bushnell Hall. These meetings are expected to prove of great educational value. With good speakers and well organized meetings, they should prove most successful. The Youngstown workers are cordially invited to attend them as are also workers from near by cities.

Brothers Payton, of Huntington W Va., have formed a "trust" that seems guaranteed to withstand the most doughty attempts to "bust" it. No, it is not formed for the purpose of raising the H. C. of L. but is guaranteed to raise the standard of knowledge of the workers of Huntington. In short, they have combined their efforts to corrall every thinking worker into the ever growing group of readers of The Toiler. Looks like they would soon have a complete monoply too. Every week we have to repeat —another bunch of five, or ten from comrades Payton

How about forming a "combination in restraint of ignorance" in your city, comrade?

Or will a brick house have to fall on you before you show signs of life?

If others can do it so can you.

Can any one help us out on this? A comrade writes for information regarding the "place, day, hour and minute" when the Soviet government was set up. From this data, he will cast a horoscope — he says. And the best answer we can give is that it was the same place, day, hour and minute, when the capitalist system of the entire world was doomed to absolute oblivion. We believe this is authentic to a nat's eye brow. If you don't believe it just ask any politician or capitalist.

Local Leetonia comes to bat this week with a substantial order for dues stamps, literature and press stamps. Eleven fifty in all. Looks like business in Leetonia, we'd say

Our Power Point list receives an aditional two subscribers and Lisbon, O., one, thru the efforts of comrade Tusek.

Six more from comrade Arley Staples of Christopher, Ill., puts the city of Coella, Ill., on the map and also boosts the Christopher list by two.

Every new one is another one.

Two Bullit Reports and two year's renewal comprise an order from comrade Geo Linz of Morton, Wash. When they come back strong like that, we think there must be a reason for it.

And the reason is that The Toiler is worth any worker's time and coin.

We must repeat that there is magic in the number 5, especially if it is $5. But it requires no magic to make a $5.00 bill work for Socialism. Comrade James of Irondale is going to prove it by selling at least that many subscription cards. We hope this gives him an appetite for more.

Comrade Dodge says that the victory of the Russian Soviet government has put new life and spirit in the comrades at Portsmouth. In line with that we would state that the workers of all the world are showing marked reaction to the victories of Sovietism.

It is now up to us to make this rise of the revolutionary spirit count BIG. And the way to do it is to get on the job with those WHO ARE WINNING.

A comrade writes to learn if the Toiler could be issued in Italian. We regret that we have to confine ourselves to the one language our parents taught us.

Eighty one years old and as young in spirit as the New Day that is dawning, is our comment on the letter we just received from comrade Buckley of Springfield, O. We more than appreciate the words of appreciation from this comrade and we will try to make The Toiler a source of inspiration to the workers in future as in the past.

Comrade Engstrom of Moline comes to bat with a bunch of five new ones.

Comrade Rospert of Toledo, has sent in $30.50 worth of subscriptions in two weeks. Looks like he was tramping on the trail of comrade Evans of Girard Kans.

While we are on this subject, we just wonder if the Toledo comrades are going to leave comrade Rospert walk away with all the honors? Well, they will have to hurry if they want to make him "divide up".

Right now — is the moment to order that Half Price Literature Combination. Fifty cents will do it.

And you can't buy more with a four-bitt piece whether it be bottles, buttons, beans or bocks. Order it.

The idea is growing fast. Pretty soon we expect we shall have to record its development in YOUR town. What, you ask? We mean the idea of combining two or more comrades into a group for the eradication of ignorance among the workers by means of subscriptions to The Toiler.

The latest combination of this sort that has come to our attention is that of comrades Norlin and Doesburg of Holland, Mich. Word just received from them states they are on the job and their first installment is to hand — 20 three month subs. Good start, boys. A few more teams like yours and we will be on our way.

He's coming again soon, is comrade fellow worker Billy Kroger of Muskegon, so he states This trip he brought two new subs. Here's hoping. And believing Another booster at Saltillo, O. is comrade J. M. Scott. Two half yearlies are on his string this week.

The organization fund gets a dollar boost this week from comrade S. Rubin of Milwaukee, who renews for another year.

Another combination that is working for Socialism seven days a week, is that of comrades R. A. Huebner and Jno Rehm of Springfield, O. Just how successful it is is proven by the subs. sent in this week amounting to $8.50

And again we say: form a combination in your town for the Eradication of Ignorance. Do it now.

"I am still selling them", writes comrade Rospert of Toledo and we egree. He is. He sent us $5.00 worth of proof.

An order for 20 copies of the Manifesto of the Third International comes from Local Dayton. Every Party member should read it. And it is in the ½ price combination too. Get the package.

We wish to record the successful efforts of comrade Karl Malmstrom of Moline in getting subs. Five dollars worth as a first attempt is not bad, in fact it is very, very good and worthy of YOUR emulation.

Sandusky Local remits $6.00 for Toiler stamps and literature. Some reds absolutely refuse to "quit it". Reason? They're real red.

Comrade McMillan of New Lexington, O., remits $2.50 for renewal, organization work and the cartoon fund.

As we have said before, if you don't like our cartoons, don't send us a sent.

"I am going to keep this $5.00 working for subscriptions all the time and will come across for the cartoon fund soon", writes comrade Ben Carpenter of Harrison, Mich. And how better could a little old five spot be kept busy?

"It is still on, the drive for new subs.", is what C. Bramson of Joliet tells us in a letter in which hes sends another $5.00 for subcards. With live wires like comrade Bramson running at largel there is certainly no chance for the work to slacken, eh bo?

To prove it's still in the fighting mood, Local Fremont remits $5.00 for dues stamps and press stamps.

And when all is said, we must admit that a revolutionist in action is worth a dozen inactive ones.

So what's the use of being one if you arn't a busy one?

We note the determination to "spit on his hands and get busy", which permeates the letter recently received from comrade Warner of Wellington, O. And we smile and say to our selves, "there is another one coming back strong" It's the life — and we should never weaken!

If there is one thing that makes us more gleeful than another, it is to see another Toiler booster join the Red Regiment of Sub Hustlers. That's the way we felt when we observed the $7.00 worth of yearlies from comrade Long of Findlay, O.

Note the advertisement in this issue of the reduced prices on The Slander of The Toilers, by Kirkpatrick. If you want to do real educational work among the workers, just order a package of this booklet and proceed to get them into the hands of the workers. We have made the price so cheap that you cannot afford to let the opportunity pass.

"The Toiler is great and I will send more subscriptions soon". These are the words of comrade Rowlands of Minoa, N. Y. He sends two subs and an order for literature.

A three dollar order for literature and subscriptions is in from comrade Fabyanchich of Bessemer, Pa.

WAR ON IGNORANCE!

We have declared WAR on IGNORANCE. Will you enlist in the ranks of the ENLIGHTENERS? We intend to establish in the State Office of the Communist Labor Party of Ohio a Book and Pamphlet Department second to none in the nation. We will handle only the best of the Revolutionary literature of the past and present. We will also publish new literature of our own. We have since Jan. 1st gotten one pamphlet off the press, another will be ready for sale in a few days. Others are contemplated.

The co-operation of all readers of The TOILER and of all Locals and literature agents is earnestly hoped for. The demand for new and good revolutionary literature is greater than can be supplied. We want YOU to help us supply this demand of the workers for ENLIGHTENMENT. Every worker can sell pamphlets every week to shopmates and other workers. Every Local must carry a full line of the best there is.

Every Class-conscious Worker must help Strike Down the Monster, Ignorance, that Enslaves the Workers.

GOVERNMENT — THE COMMUNIST VIEWPOINT

— By. [illegible] —

Anarchism has a lure and fascination that often attract almost irresistibly even the hard-headed. Its uncompromising spirit of revolt, its impatient, irrational longing for that absolute freedom which is an impossibility on an earth inhabited by human beings and circumscribed by limitations of mundane existence, its fierce chafing at the leash of laws, be they just or unjust, — all these things find almost unconscious response in many of us.

There is a strong appeal in this philosophy that would abolish all forms of restraint and leave us "free" to unite in voluntary cooperative groups or live individually, as we might wish. It is so easy to forget that this is a relative world, not an absolute one, and that „absolute freedom" is an impossibility, to attempt which would only produce an extreme reaction that would result in a tyranny worse than that from which we seek escape. The Hermetic axiom that extremes meet is literally true with regard to Anarchism. The fierce desire for liberation which would end all government, would send us back into a slavery more intolerable than ever by the unrepressed force of the extreme reaction.

"If it is wrong for an individual to rob, murder or interfere with another's liberty, is it any less wrong for a group or class to do these things?" asks K. B. E. Yes, most emphatically. Morality is not an abstract thing, a blue-print of human actions, some of which are forever and inherently right and some of which are forever and inherently wrong. That which is right under some circumstances is wrong under others. Conditions are the determining factor. As a general proposition, it may be wrong to steal, but if it were necessary to steal to save the life of a starving men, I would say. "To hell with the rights of property!" and take what has needed to prevent starvation.

Notwithstanding what Edmund Burke says, government can be used for good as well as for ill. K. B. E. directs his artillery against the uses to which government is put under capitalism. He ignores the point that government resting on exploitation and legalized robbery must necessarily be evil, whereas if government rested on the ownership of wealth by its producers, it would be just and beneficient.

It is true that one has a right to the product of his own labor. It is also true that capitalistic governments do not assure that right, but instead, deprive the worker of what he creates and give it to capitalists. But under Anarchism and without a central governing authority, the chances of a man keeping the fruits of his work would be far less than they are now. "Absolute freedom" would be nothing of the kind, at least so long as the present qualities of greed and selfishness have not been bred out of human nature. Instead of people living like brothers and sisters, and exchanging their products in equitable, fraternal fashion, the erstwhile profiteers and money-lords would get together, pounce upon the well-disposed of the community and try to make slaves out of them. The "absolute freedom" wouldn't last 10 days. Either those who formerly exploited the masses would regain their dominance by raw resort to brute force, or the masses would have to unite economically, establish a proletarian dictatorship just as Russia did. and ruthlessly expropriate the expropriators.

In either case, Anarchism would be short-lived. Autocracy would succeed it or the Dictatorship of the Proletariat. Government, much-despised tho it were, would come back to curse or bless, depending on the kind of government established.

The Anarchist comrade asks. "Since the only just title to the ownership of anything arises from its production by its owner, is it not just as much robbery for a majority to take property from an individual as for an individual or a minority to do so?" Certainly, but under Communism the majority won't take property from an individual. Communism will give to the individual what he produces and eliminate the class which has hitherto lived on the labor of others. That is the difference between Communism and capitalism. That is the purpose of Communist government. It will be an industrial government, not a political one. When there are no capitalists and all are useful workers, and when those useful workers are the government, functioning collectively in industries, government won't be a means [illegible]ssion. Government can only oppress when there is a rich, privileged class that owns the resources of the country Strip that class of land, mines, factories, industries, etc., and give them to the People don't rob themselves. K. B. E. is constantly thinking of a bourgeois government which, of course, is owned by a few people. His criticisms don't apply to a proletarian democracy at all, for the simple reason that under Soviets, the people are the government. They are not exploited because they have no reason for picking their own pockets.

Instead of Communism aiming to steal from the worker and give the products of his toil to a different set of people than those receiving these products under capitalism, it would provide the force necessary to protect the worker in the enjoyment of those products. Anarchism wants the worker to get the fruit of his labor, too, but it would provide nothing to guarantee him in its possession, nothing to stop a bigger fellow from snatching it away from him. It would leave the laborer at the mercy of the economic highwayman, just as capitalism does. But Communism, realizing that "right without might is moonshine," would back up this unquestionable right of the worker, with a new kind of government, an economic one, which could crush the robber the minute he began to ply his old trade.

If, however, when K. B. E. speaks of the majority taking property from the individual, he refers to taxation under Soviets, his reasoning is equally defective. True, the worker would not get quite all that he produces, for a small percentage of it would have to be deducted to help defray the expenses of government. You can't maintain a government on nothing. Neither could you do so with a factory, even if that factory were run by its workers in voluntary cooperation under Anarchism. They would have to set aside a little of what they produced to pay for secretarial work, upkeep, etc... wouldn't they? If this is "robbery", then there always will be robbery, and Anarchism — assuming it were successful, which is inconceivable — would be no exception to the rule. The only difference is that under Communism the taxation would be imposed by a central authority elected by the workers, while under voluntary cooperation, it would be imposed by each separate industrial group, independently of every other group. In order to gain the benefits of collective action, we must surrender a little, at least, of what we might receive if each worked alone and received the total result of his efforts. The "absolute freedom" of the Anarchist is like the "personal liberty" of the boozefighter, a farce and a fantasm. The isolated inhabitant of the desert comes as near having "absolute freedom" as anybody can in a relative world, and even he doesn't have it, entirely. And the minute he enters into relationship with other human beings. he has still less. All we can enjoy, at the most, is a maximum of liberty consistent with the liberty of others. Communism, by taking away from the bourgeois class some of the "liberty" it possesses to steal from the proletariat, would give every man a larger share of liberty athn any other system yet proposed.

"The absolute inviolability of person and pro- every man a larger share of liberty than any other we all want — Anarchists and Communists alike. But we won't get it by throwing off all government, laying aside all weapons and going on in the blind and blissful delusion that because we don't rob others, they won't rob us.

We must have power. The master class has power to day — economic power, from which comes political power, its offspring. Let the workers take that power away from the masters, appropriate it to themselves, and be the government. Then — and not till then — will the workers retain the nearest possible approach to all that they create.

workers in each unit -- subjecting each industrial group to control by a central body elected by themselves -- and it will be an impossibility for that government to be used for robbery and tyranny.

Bolshevik Policy in the East

their own exertions. It is their own affair, not that of the Soviet Government. We can only offer our sympathy; anything further would be forbidden towards a country with which we were at peace."

Relations with Other States.

"Soviet Russia would then settle down amind a non-Socialist world as one State among the others?"

"Why not?" was Radek's reply. "It is the standpoint of the Russian Government that normal and good relations are just as possible between Socialist and capitalist States as they have been between capitalist and feudal States. For example, Imperialist England lived on quite good terms with Tsarist feudal Russia in the days of serfdom. I, personally, am convinced that Communism can only be saved through good relations with the capitalist States. All the capitalist States are moving towards Sosialism along their own roads and in their varying degrees, and the pace will be quickened by the burden of war taxes and debt, high prices, and the lowered standard of living. But in each of these countries the battle will be won from within in the growing struggle between the peoples and Governments. Revolutions never originate in foreign affairs, but are made at home."

"But so far you have talked only of possibilities." I pointed out.

"Yes, I am speaking not of plans that we have. but of things we may be compelled to attempt. Russia to-day is too weak to indulge in a world-policy or in a drive against India, yet she is strong enough to hurt in self-defence. The workers are utterly tired of war, but know that peace is denied them by the Entente. If they have no work and nothing to eat they know it is due to Entente intervention, and the knowledge only strengthens their will to fight. Our campaign is one ordered by the Government, which could not by its mere command make the workers fight, but is supported by the masses in desperation. To sum up in a few words, when the Northcliffe press talks of a Red invasion of India it does so insincerely, and as sheer vilifying of Soviet Russia. Nevertheless, if the Northcliffe press succeeds in misleading English opinion into war against Russia, then what is now a fantasy may easily become a reality."

"If We are Forced to Fight."

"You are accused of political expansionism—an Imperialism of Revolution."

"The two words 'Imperialism' and 'Revolution' are mutually contradictory," replied Radek. "Revolution means the achievement of self-government by the masses. The French Revolution became Imperialist for two reasons: (1) it was only a bourgeois revolution; (2) it was the last act in the struggle between France and England for colonies. As one of your historians says, Pitt made Napoleon. Let me refer to Lenin's statement at the last party congress in March, 1919 — 'The sword is not the means by which the victory of Communism is to be won. Such a policy of aggression would weaken us and our cause. Were we by action from outside to enable a revolutionary Government to be set up in a country not strong enough to carry through a revolution itself, we should weaken ourselves by dispersing forces needed for our own defence.

"But there is another side of the question. If we are forced to fight, naturally we seek a field of war where success is most easily attained. It is not true that we can do nothing; the Eastern door is open, and there are great possibilities. Had the old Tsarist Government determined to advance on India it would have had to build railways, organise armies, accumulate supplies — in short, employ the resources of a capitalist Kultur. With us it is quite different. All we have to do is to send out our most active workers to stir up unrest among populations. That is no new thing for Russians. You may remember the part played by Social Democrats from the Caucasus in the Persian Revolution in 1906 and later. I know personally quite a number of Caucasian comrades who were revolutionary leaders in Persia.

Ten Agitators Equal to an Army.

"What we can supply is the leadership so lacking in the East. We can send officers as instructors — not officers of the old school, but men of our own training, in particular artillery instructor who were formely engineers in the Putiloff Arsenal. These, the most intelligent artisans in Russia, have the necessary mathematical knowledge to make first-rate artillery officers. We can send technical experts and can erect explosive factories and arsenals. And remember that when we proletarians send ten picked men, after our experience of the last two years, it is equal to an expeditionary force. We are already in touch with the Young Turks by way of Tashkent, the Caspian, and Caucasian Azerbaijan. Our armies are already on the Sea of Azov. Young Turkish officers whom I have recently met here in Berlin assure me that it would require fifteen divisions to dispose of the existing Turkish armies. Moreover, Asia Minor is already something of an international, interracial powder magazine.

"But there is no need to enlarge further on possibilities. Our crippled industries are paralysed. Our historic task is to reconstruct Russia, and for that peace is essential. We are fighting simply because we are forced to do so, and are given no other choice. Russia is a democracy of peasants and workers for at least half a century to come. Your statement can count with certainty on the entire absence of capitalist Imperialism in Russia. All the talk about our plans to disrupt and destroy the British Empire is the sheerest nonsense and Northcliffe bluff."

REVIEW OF I. W. W. CASE.

(By a Special Correspondent)

Montensano, Wash., Feb — There have been times in the four weeks of the Centralia tragedy trial when the lives of the 11 defendants seemed balanced on the point of a needle. For the main tragedy at Centralia happened in a space of time to be measured by seconds, and the stories of eye-witnesses frequently conflict.

Day after day the prosecution has produced evidence which on its face looked damaging to the men on trial for the alleged murder of Warren Grimm in the Armistice Day parade. And then George F. Vanderveer, counsel for the defense, would tear at that testimony with accumulative confidence and astuteness, and lay waste some of the state's best foundations.

Standing out from the month's events in the trial are: the admission as evidence of Loren Roberts' alleged confession after a battle by the defense to exclude it; the story told in court by Tom Morgan, former I. W. W. who turned state's evidence against his fellows; and the smashing down of the testimony of one of the state's star witnesses under the sledge-hammer blows of Vanderveer.

Robert's statement was opposed by the defense on the ground that he was insanse when he signed it; and Vanderveer offered to prove this, contending that the Centralia mob had put the fear of death upon Roberts to obtain the confession. But Judge John N. Wilson ruled that the statement was admissible and that the jury must decide what weight should be given to it.

If it is accepted at face value, however, it will bear out Vanderveer's contention that the defendants shot at the paraders only in self-defense, for it says the Industrial Workers had been warned of a raid and prepared to defend themselves. Morgan's story also bore this out.

When Elsie Hornbeck was put on the stand, it marked a sudden sweeping turn in favor of the defense. This slim Semetic girl is a bookkeeper in a garage opposite the Avalon Hotel, from which the prosecution declares some shots were fired.

This girl said she saw a thin-faced man in a window of the Avalon shortly before the riot; identified Eugene Barnett in the court-room as that man; insisted that she had never seen him from that hysterical day three months ago until this day in court; led the jury to believe that she was able to identify Barnett solely through the vivid impression his face had made upon her on Armistice Day.

Then Vanderveer trapped her into admitting she had seen two photographs of Barnett. Her manner throughout has been hesitant and uncertain; she had looked helplessly at Special Prosecutor Abel, causing Vanderveer more than once to command her to look at him; had admitted that a man out in the hall had told her that barnett was inside; and then, commanded by Vanderveer to go out and find him. did so and returned to report that he wasn't there.

Knowing it was a matter of life and death, she swore, with the manner of one taking a plunge into the dark, that Barnett was the man she had seen in the Avalon. She repeated her positive assertion that the man in the Avalon was thin-faced. But, as Vanderveer pointed out, Barnett is full-faced.

Both the Associated Press and the United Press picture Elsie Hornbeck as identifying Barnett unqualifiedly, — and say nothing about the photographs; and practically every newspaper in the country, except the Portland Journal and three radical papers, The New York Call, Butte Bulletin and Seattle Record has printed the same unqualified story about the "identification."

they did not lead to such painful conclusions."

"What do you mean," the other two gasped almost in one breath.

"I mean what I say. We belong to the working class. You say the working class must be organized. One of you say soberly and the other says generally. Now why don't you ask can they be organized. Collins says yes, at least that part of them who do not drink. For this Rudolph calls him a christian. How are Rudolph and Collins going to work together in the same organization, when it takes steel cage to keep them from "beating each other up," yet both of them are sober men. Collins wants to eliminate the weak and let them die, Rudolph wants to forgive the weak, which means that he must carry them. For it is logical that if a man is weak he will have to lean on you. Now if you are fighting the boss who has both of his fists ready with a drunkard in one arm and a mental defective in another, then who is going to get rich."

"That's what I say," roared Collins.

Jack ignored him, "Both of you say that acquired characteristics are not transmitted, yet you try to give to the race a mental tendancy which by nature it does not possess except for purposes of battle. There is no tendancy toward productive solidarity in the human race that I can see. They do not organize for production. They bunch together for strife. The brainiest and brightest of the race are continually crawling upward over the duller and the weaker. That is the law of life, and it appears to me that your endeavor to set up a republic of the weak will always be successfully thwarted by the strong."

— By Tom Clifford. —

"My Dear Mr. Lansing," chirruped Woodrow in his billet doux to the Secretary of State announcing, that his dignity had been ruffled by the assumption of Presidential functions by the latter gentleman in calling sessions of the Cabinet without permission from his royal highness, preparatory to administering the coup de grace that would seperate the Secretary from his job. "My Dear Mr. President," parroted Lansing in his reply, all the while knowing he was to get it where the chicken got the ax. Of course these are little bourgeois social amenities that are understood to be meaningless. I am not in the least interested in the fracas other than that if they had declared war on each other the affair should have been settled without indulgence in hypocritical cant. Insincerity is so common among the bourgeoisie that a positive vice has been transformed into a virtine. They are morally cockeyed. A bourgeois is so dishonest he can't play solitaire without cheating himself. Chicanery and deceit are so generally practiced by our "best citizen's that it is surprising their endowed colleges have not established chairs to teach camouflage. Yet it must be confessed that this moral obliquity is in complete harmony with capitalist ethics. An honest man to day has about as much chance in combatting the wiles of these past masters in the art of duplicity as the proverbial snow ball in hell.

It now transpires that the leaders of the Democratic party are becoming frantic over the political situation. All efforts to suppress Wilson's ambition for a third term have apparently only stimulated that gentleman's burning desire to be a record breaker, and they are running around in circles seeking a way out of their dilemma. The League of notions is still the pet hobby of the President, and he evidently desires to succeed himself for the prestige accruing therefrom to qualify for the position of high priest in that organization of world imperialism. Some of the best talent among the statesmen at Washington are engaged in the futile attempt to convince the President he has had honors enough and should give some one else a chance Nothing doing there, gentlemen. Youv'e a white elephant on your hands.

In the meantime the woods are full of hungry aspirants for the same job. McAdoo wants it, Bryan yearns for it, and a score or more of others are ready to swap their chances in the sweet bye and bye for four years in the White House. Not a single one of them, however, can offer any reason for this inordinate crawing to succeed the man who made the "world safe for democracy" other than—he wants the job. Well, that is a good and sufficient reason, isn't it? At least it has always been so considered. None but Socialists expect a man to desire public office as a means of serving society, and everybody knows they are impractible visionaries.

The bankers are getting scared over the financial situation nothwithstanding it is everywhere conceded that we are passing through an era of "unparalleled prosperity." They are demanding a reduction of outstanding loans. If you want to save your bacon, dig up your Liberty bonds, toto them down to the bank, and turn them in at discount. Don't grumble brother. Just take your medicine uncomplainingly, like a good little wage slave.

It is now announced that the foreign diplomats at Washington, out of respect for the national prohibition law, will waive their right to import liquors for their own use. Does anyone believe it? Not if his brain is working normally. Those gentlemen are not noted for indulgence in self sacrifice. This statement is doubtless prompted by a desire to conserve their stock of wet goods for themselves and prevent an onslaught of their friends.

MARGUERITE PREVEY IS KIDNAPPED FROM JAIL

'LAW AND ORDER' GANG VIOLATES COURT ORDER TO SECURE POSSESSION OF PRISONER

Kidnapped by the Sheriff of Franklin County, Ohio, under instructions of the Illinois authorities, and in collusion with them, Marguerite Prevey, member of the State Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party of Ohio, was taken from the county jail at Columbus during the dark hours of the night of March 3rd and hurried to prison at Chicago.

This dastardly and illegal act was perpetrated on the heels of an order of the Court of Judge E. B. Kincead of the Court of Common Pleas earlier in the day, when he ordered a stay of execution of 48 hours to allow Mrs. Prevey's attorneys to perfect their arror proceedings and appeal her case to the Court of Appeals.

The hearing on this evidence was set for March 1st, but owing to illnes of Judge Kincead, it was postponed to the following Wednesday.

Joe. W. Sharts and J. L. Bachman, Mrs. Prevey's attorneys made a splendid showing at the hearing. Testimony of officials of the Communist Labor Party of Ohio was introduced to prove the political character of the Party, its manner of functioning and the means and methods it advocated to accomplish its ends. Tom Clifford, also a member of the Party State Executive Committee was placed upon the stand and testified to the character of the organization and the convention acts at the time it was organized at Chicago. Another witness for the defense was F. T. Allison, present State Secretary of Ohio. Mrs. Prevey also testified to her part in organizing the Party at Chicago.

Marguerite Prevey

Slim Evidence of Prosecution.

The only evidence offered by the prosecution was a paragraph in the Manifesto of the Communist International issued at Moscow in 1918. This paragraph, which outlines the plan of establishing the control of the workers and demands the arming of the proletariat and the disarming of the bourgeoisie, together with a paragraph in the Platform of the Communist Labor Party, which expresses harmony of relationship between the principles of the Party with those of the Third International form the basis of the charges against Mrs. Prevey.

In a deliberate and forceful manner attorney Sharts showed from the following paragraphs of the Platform the fallacy of the charges. That a declaration that the Party was in harmony with the PRINCIPLES of the Third International, he argued, did not prove that the Party declared itself for the methods and tactics which were followed by the proletariat of Russia in overthrowing the Czar's government and establishing the Soviet form.

Attorney Sharts read from the Platform of the Party as follows to disprove the charge of unlawfulness made by the prosecution in the indictments

"The Communist Labor Party of America declares itself in complete accordance with the principles of Communism, as laid down in the Manifesto of the Third International formed at Moscow.

"In essence, these principles are as follows:

"The present is the period of the dissolution and collapse of the whole system of world capitalism. Unless capitalism is replaced by the rule of the working class, world civilization will collapse.

"The working class must organize and train itself for the capture of state power. This capture means the establishment of the new working class government machinery, in place of the state machinery of the capitalists.

"This new working class government—the Dictatorship of the Proletariat—will reorganize society on the basis of Communism, and accomplish the transition from Capitalism to the Communist Commonwealth.

"Communist society is not like the present fraudulent capitalist democracy—which, with all its pretensions to equality, is merely a disguise for the rule of the financial oligarchy—but it is a proletarian democracy, based on the control of industry and the state by the workers, who are thereby free to work out their own destiny. It does not mean capitalist institutions of government, which are controlled by the great financial and industrial interests, but organs of administration created and controlled by the masses themselves; such as, for example, the Soviets of Russia.

"The Dictatorship of the Proletariat shall transfer private property in the means of production and distribution to the working class government, to be administered by the workers themselves. It shall nationalize the great trusts and financial institutions. It shall abolish capitalist agricultural production.

"The present world situation demands that the revolutionary working class movements of all countries shall closely unite.

"The most important means of capturing state power for the workers is the action of the masses, proceeding from the place where the workers are gathered together—in the shops and factories. The use of the political machinery of the capitalist state for this purpose is only secondary.

RE-DEFINING LIBERTY

By Scott Nearing

Thomas Jefferson's brand of liberty rested upon the assumption that every man who wished to do so could own a farm. When the Declaration of Independence was drafted, 98 per cent of the American people lived outside of cities, and 90 per cent of them worked outside of factories.

The Americans of the late 18th century lived in a country where every man who chose to do so could stake out his claim, put his two feet on his own piece of land and make a living by his own labor. If he shot rabbits or deer, they belonged to him, if he raised corn or potatoes, they were his property. He owned his job and the product that was created on that job. Jeffersonian democracy expressed the sentiment of a community in which men were economically self-sufficient.

That stage of American economic life has gone forever. Never again will it be possible for each family to make a living on its own farm. People today are heaped up in Chicago, New York, New Orleans and San Francisco. They cannot milk their own cows or pick apples from their own trees. Instead of being able to live by devoting time and energy to land which belongs to him, the modern city and town dweller is forced to seek out someone who owns a job.

He goes, for example, to Mr. Elbert H. Gary with his request. Says he: "Judge Gary, you represent a corporation with a billion and a half of capital and nearly three billions of assets. I represent Mrs. Mike Donovan and five children. You own a job: I want it."

"We are paying 50 cents an hour," Mr. Gary answers.

You protest — "The United States Department of Labor has just issued a bulletin to prove that a man cannot keep a wife and three young children on a 'health and decency' standard in the city of Washington on less than $2.288.25. The wage you propose for me is only one-half of that amount. If I am to have an American standard of living, I must get a dollar an hour for an 8-hour day. On anything less, my family will suffer."

"I am very sorry," says the judge, "but we do not need you at a dollar an hour."

GUNNING SEASON FOR WORKERS ALWAYS OPEN IN KANSAS
ALLEN
ANTI-STRIKE LAW
$500 to $1.000 FINE & THE PENITENTIARY
LABOR
LAB
THE TOILER CARTOON DEPT

Irresponsible and Running Wild!

The strike, as a weapon in the hands of the working-class to establish better conditions for itself is outlawed in the state of Kansas.

The strike, herefore the mightiest weapon of organized labor, has been declared illegal by the capitalist powers thru its government. To disobey the new anti-strike law is to render one liable to a heavy fine and a term in the penitentiary.

The recent strike of the miners of Kansas struck the capitalist class of that state with terror. It became frightened at the power of the workers to throw the system of labor exploitation into a state of chaos by laying down their tools. To combat the striking workers and to render them powerless, if possible by legislative means, the capitalist class of Kansas, thru their representatives in the state legislature and the Governor's chair enacted the infamous Industrial Court Law which makes it illegal to strike.

Under the provisions of this capitalist class law, which became effective January 24, it established an Industrial Court of three judges appointed by the Governor for three years with annual salaries of $5.000. It has supervision over the manufacture and preparation of food products in any and all stages of the process, of the manufacture of clothing and all wearing apparel, of all mining and fuel production, and of the transportation of necessities. Suspension of operation in such manufacture or transportation is illegal. In case of a labor controversy in these industries threatening to endanger the continuity or efficiency of service, the court may begin an investigation. The court may amend or change any employment contract. If either or both parties to a controversy refuse to obey the court's orders the State may take over the industries in question and operate them. Labor-unions may incorporate but are not compelled to. Collective bargaining is recognized but the right to "picket" or to disturb workers is denied. Striking in violation of the law is punishable by a $500 fine or six months in jail or both. To order, call, or foment a strike is a felony, punishable by five years in the penitentiary or a fine of $1000, or both.

The tremenduous power over the workers which capitalism everywhere is seeking to establish is laid bare in this latest evidence of the dictatorship of capitalism. The capitalist press generally is overjoyed at the enactment of this measure that is calculated to throttle Labor before it can hardly gasp out it demands. In a fulsome eulogy of this law, the Kansas City Times gives away the game in the following words," It (the Industrial Court Law") pledges the good faith of the State to see that Labor's rights are protected, and at the same time that capital is not endangered". "The good faith of the capitalist State" may law, the Kansas City Times gives away by workers these days. We have had some evidence lately of the good faith in which the capitalist State deals with the workers. In reliance upon such faith the workers can rest assured that they will come out of the small end of the horn.

A "labor" law which "does not endanger capital" should be looked upon with suspicion by the workers. Hidden somewhere is certain to be a snare into which it is calculated that Labor will stumble to its ruin.

This law, which capitalist interests have enacted for the subjugation of Labor is another evidence of the growing class divisions in present day society. By its provisions, Labor's strongest weapon is snatched from its hands and it is forced to sit down to an arbitration game in which the cards are stacked against it from the first deal. It will sit down with the representatives of the Capitalist State three apointees ot the Governor, the capitalist State's executive head. In such a game, can Labor expect to ever attain a just reward for its toil? The bare assumption of such a circumstance must bring Gargantuan laughter from the throats of Kansas capitalists. THEY have made the rules. THEY know the results. THEY know that this law is a gag and a bridle and a collar with which they have harnessed the workers of Kansas to their labor

WASHINGTON NEWS LETTER

BY PAUL HANNA.

WASHINGTON.—The Russian thaw has set in. Almost over night the great news papers which have united for two years past to suppress the truth about the country have now begun to complete in getting out the facts.

For the American people there is news of first importance in a simple summary of this sudden switch by the nation's press. On Feb. 21 The New York American appeared with an 8-column headline proclaiming, "Lenine Sends Wireless Interview to The American." That paper's Berlin correspondent, Wiegand, had queried Lenine by wireless and the Russian prime minister responded with a categorical statement covering every point raised. The whole article constituted a pro-soviet argument which refuted the most important lies about the aims of that government. All the newspapers which take the Hearst morning service featured the Lenine interview and boasted about their great "beat".

On the same day The New York World printed a long, exhaustive and exclusive interview with Lenine, obtained in Moscow by Lincoln Eyre. The reporter pictured the soviet chief as an intellectual dynamo of whom the discredited statesmen of western Europe had best beware unless they are ready to deal honestly with the Russian republic. Lenine's tempered but confident forecast of Russia's future was printed without apparent efforts at distortion by the reporter.

The night of Feb. 22 brought from London and Paris two extraordinary confirmations of the diplomatic change regarding Russia. Headed by Gen. Gough, British commander of the entente forces recently evacuated from Archangel, an important group of British officers and financial experts formally petitioned Lloyd George to recognize and make peace with the soviet government. Simultaneously at Paris French army officers who saw service in Siberia united in a call to their government to recognize and accept the new democracy in Russia. They praised the red army as both efficient and democratic and declared it was supported by most of the inhabitants of Siberia.

One day later the American press somersault on Russia became more pronounced. In full-page advertisements in the other metropolitan papers, The New York World anounced with enormous type a series of "Direct Interviews With Lenine and Tretzky." The advertisement bore a picture of Lenine labelled, "Russian Thinker," and one of Trotzky bearing the words, "The organizer and executive." The anouncement gave the dates and character of future interviews which Eyre has procured with soviet representatives.

On the some date, Feb. 23, the ultra-conservative New York Times printed the first of its disptaches from Arthur E. Colpping, who has begun a tour of soviet Russia in company with Joffe and the other diplomats from Moscow who negotiated peace with Esthonia. In his first story Copping obliterated the cartoonists' conception of the communist as an unwashed fanatic. In the space of two columns he also destroyed the foundation of most of The Times' editorials about Russia.

I have reviewed these newspaper changes because they will certainly have an early effect upon events and policies at Washington. The senate Committee which is investigating Russian propaganda in America will take serious further thought before it determines upon a course leading to the expulsion of Martens, the soviet representative, from the United States. For all the better publicity now appearing shows that Russia is well able to retaliate against future American business for the persecution of her spokesman here.

Another item: Bernard Baruch, adviser to President. Wilson, is very anxious to head a new American commission to visit soviet Russia. His aim has been thwarted heretofore by the old Wilson-Lansing policy of snarl and drift respecting Russia. Europe's stampede toward a Russian settlement will strengthen Baruch's hand and prophets say the administration will shortly fall into line for a complete reconciliation with the communist republic.

Skygac's Column

Roger Babson, Frank A. Vanderlip, John D. Rockefeller Jr., Theodore Price, are names to conjure with. If any one set of men may be expected to have an accurate knowledge of the world's financial pulse these men are the ones who ought to know economic and political conditions. Yet these men sent a message to the Interchurch World session, and attended by over a thousand ministers, that ought to make the politicians sit up and take notice. Here is the message;

"That no force will serve to maintain social order xecept a rewakening of a national religious spirit."

Of course they mean when they speak of social order, THE (present) social order $ $ $ $ $ (of legalized robbery of the toilers through the wages system).

They have tried the force of government thru the despotic measures of such men as Palmer, Hoyne, Judge Landis and their ilk.

They have tried the force of the constabulary and the state militia end the standing army.

They have tried the force of political buncome via the too old parties and the too new ones too.

Now the spoksmen for the economic overlords of capitalism plainly tell us that NO FORCE except a reawakening of a national religious spirit will save the social order.

If such be the case we might as well begin now to be reconciled to our fate, for there is NO HOPE of any such an awakenink. That same conference reported one denomination having 17.000 churches with 12.000 of them vacant every Sunday. The average ministerial salary, less than $900.00 a year and country churches falling at the rate of 11% a year. Such is the broken reed upon which capitalism rests, according to these spokesmen!

Milo D. Campbell, chairman of the National board of farm organizations in a recent message to the national conference says;

"The U. S. Grain Corporation is about to turn into the National Treasury fifty million dollars. — profit made by buying wheat at a legally fixed price and selling it abroad at a great profit."

Robbing the farmer and "selling wheat abroad at a great profit": No dear reader, this isn't the record of the terrible Bolsheviki, neither is it in the program of the reds. It is the simple truth about what the politicians of this country are doing. And you are partly to blame if you allow them to do it without protest. We have heard much of the starving races of Europe and it is our idea that "selling wheat abroad at a great profit" is probably one of the direct causes of the starvation. Such proceedure may be Christian, at least the ones doing it claim to be christians, but it is mighty poor evidence of their love for humanity.

Senator Murphy in a letter to Gov. Edwards writes;

"It is also my prayer that the Democrat Party will not be so assinine as to select a leader who poses with a pay-check from the Anti Saloon League in one hand and a bottle of grape juice in the other."

He wants a president that will remain in Washington and look after the affairs of the nation rather than to frolic with the squirrels on the Champs Elysees."

That cabinet of Wilson's seems to be an unstable affair. Wilson evidently never could qualify as a cabinemaker. When Lansing was "fired" because he had unofficially called the cabinet together during Wilson's illness, where was the manhood of the rest of the cabinet? A bunch of good union men would have made Wilson fire the whole cabinet! Members of the Cabinet come and go but thru it all Burleson the Autocrat of the means of communication still sticks.

"The answer is that America needs to set her house in order from top to bottom" — that was the last line in an editorial in one of the leading stand-pat organs of the country — a paper that has always been cock-sure that everything was all right except for the pernicious activity of the radicals. Now comes the confession quoted above. Oh well, murder will out.

The morning paper tells us that business relations will be opened with Soviet Russia for four reasons, first that Bolshevism is here to stay, secondly that there is no such thing as Bolshevism, thirdly that Lenine and Trotsky no longer believe in Communism but in Capitalism and fourthly that trade with Russia will strengthen the bonds of Capitalism.

I can name their four reasons in four words, business, bonds and profits.

There can be no profit without a corresponding loss.

The American Bourgeoise class has made enormous profits the past five years? Who stood the loss that is represented by that enormous profit? The working-class of course. If there was an enormous profit there must have been an enormous loss. Is it any wonder the powers that be find it increasingly difficult to keep the working class contented?

There is now only one way to keep the workers contented and that is to keep them in ignorance of the economics of industry. One hours study of the profit and loss side of industry will make any red-blooded American worker discontented with the present capitalist order of society.

How things have changed! It used to be the way of the transgressor is hard, but since the days of the Wilson—Palmer—Burleson administration it can truthfully be said, the way of the benefactor is hard.

Prohibition has its compensating side at that. The Revolution will not have a chance to degenerate into a rumbellion.

Goodness Gracious—even the Cardinals of the Pope of Rome have asked for an increase of salary claiming that they cannot make both ends meet with their present salary. Everybody seems to be doing it now.

They never miss an opportunity to point out that the socialists, the radicals and the reds are an ungodly bunch absolutely devoid of religion. Now with the official report that the churches are failing at the rate of 11% a year does that mean that the reds are gaining at that rate?

Wonder what those striking Cardinals would do if they were compelled to live on a workingman's wages?

Dr. Edgar Fahs Smith, in leaving his position at the University of Pennsylvania, out of love for the institution in whose service he has grown old is quoted by the press as follows: "I have ont a cent in the world I have been a teacher all my life. That is a wonderful but unremunerative work."

A country can not gracefully brag of its greatness, when it allows its teachers to be unrewarded and cast upon the scrap-heap after a lifetime spent in usefulness.

52,000 Americans emigrated to Canada last year. There must be a reason.

With ordinary shoes quoted at $14—21 a pair how long will it be before the working class has "no sole for its foot but the sod"?

And there is mighty little sod in the industrial centers!

And what little there may be is protected by the sign,

Keep off the Grass.

A Call to Labor to Stand by its Own

Three Ohio Comrades have been indicted for revolutionary activities and are being tried in the capitalist courts. The defense of these comrades will cost hundreds of dollars. The transcripts of evidence and legal papers alone, will mount to high figures. The costs must be paid. The comrades deserve the help of every liberty loving person. The indictments against them are in a way, indictments of the workers and the political organization which they have formed as a means of achievng their emancipation from the chains of wage slavery. These comrades are among the most loyal workers for Socialism in this state. Your help in these cases is well deserved—and it is needed—at once.

Lotta Burke.

Thirteen Socialist Party members and members of the Communist Labor Party at Cincinnati, among them Lotta Burke, member of the State Executive Committee of the Communist Labor Party of Ohio, are out on bond while their cases are appealed to a higher court. They have been convicted of conspiracy to defeat the conscription act at the beginning of the war against Germany. Any one who knows Lotta Burke knows the falsity of such a charge. But she has been sentenced a year and a quarter in the Penitentiary. And she will have to spend these 15 months in prison unless the sentence is reversed in a higher court. Money is needed in this case and every worker should assist in defraying the costs.

Marguerite Prevey.

At this writing, Marguerite Prevey is in jail at Chicago while her attorneys are attempting to have her released and returned to Ohio. Elsewhere in this issue, the account of this case is given. But the tremendous significance of the case of comrade Prevey should be realized by every worker and member of the Communist Labor Party. If she is returned to Ohio and the higher courts deny her extradition to Illinois it will mean that no Ohio resident can be extradited from this state on charges of having aided in the organization of the Communist Labor Party. It will establish the fact that this working-class political party was NOT organized for the purpose of overthrowing the government 'by violence and unlawful means'' as charged in the Chicago indictments. Winning this case means the establishment of an absolutely legal status for the Party and will settle the question of whether it is lawful or unlawful to be a member of it.

Because of the great importance of this case, aside from the purely humanitarian and class character of it, we call upon every loyal and class conscious worker to help defray the costs.

Charles Baker

During the recent miner's strike, Charles Baker toured the mining regions of the state of Kansas. He visited many localities and held rousing miner's meetings in all of them. The striking miners of Kansas, than whom there are no workers more loyal to their class, attended his meetings by the thousands and made them the most enthusiastic ever held there.

The capitalist class took cognizance of these worker's meetings. They saw that if they continued, it meant the rousing of the workers and the further spread of revolt against their exploitation The capitalist state at once brought into play it's ready weapon, the Lever act, a war time measure calculated to keep the slave class chained to its slavery while the war profiteers grew sleek and fat off of their toil and sweat.

Because Baker backed up the miners and taught the facts of the class struggle and their exploitation, he was indicted by a grand jury at Kansas City. He is now out on bail while the case is pending. Baker is known to practically every socialist in Ohio and has made hundreds of speeches here and in odjoining states. No worker in the Movement is more universally liked than is Baker. His personality, his sincerity and loyality to the workingclass have won him thousands of admiring friends Baker has not a dollar. If he is to have adequate defense the funds must be secured from those who know and value his work for working class emancipation. To these thousands of friends of his and to other workers who appreciate years of conscientious work for our cause, we must appeal for funds to defend him.

These cases call not for donations of pennies, but of dollars and many of them. They must be had at once. Right now, hundreds of dollars are needed. Expenses are piling up daily and must be paid as the cases progress. We call upon you who read these lines to give and to collect funds at once for the comrades' defense. Don't delay, funds are needed NOW. Use the blank below to remit your first subscription.

"Now getting a living and enjoying life seems to be the object of all our striving, and what is more natural to strive along the lines of least resistance. The property owning class exploits us in order that they may live as it seems best to them; they do not hate us any more than a hunter hates a duck; we are their legitimate prey. When we rebel against direct exploitation they kill us; history is full of such examples as you yourself have told me. This class struggle of which you speak is not a matter of morals; it is a matter of position. And position depends on two things, first one must be at the place of opportunity before the crowd arrives and second he must have the brain to recognize an advantage when it presents itself and the courage to make it his own.

"I belong to the working class and as long as I do, it is to my interest that they should be organized to protect themselves from the aggressions of the boss; but believe me the first chance I have to get out of it and live fat in the halls of the mighty — I go. The fat pastures look good to Jack Thurston."

"Fat chance you have of getting out of the working class, "remarked Collins," now that capitalism is developing by leaps and bounds. In a few years there will not be an opportunity to get a hold of any property worth speaking of, if you had a head as big as a bushel basket, and a wad as big as a blanket.

"I know it, "Jack answered," but knowing what the working class is up against from within and without I can see for them only a hopeless and endless struggle; a ceaseless warfare between the House of Have and the House of Want, with the adventage always on the side of the possessing class. There is an old saying that possession is nine points of the law."

"But how are you going to get possession except by organized effort." Rudolph asked.

"Who ever said that you were going to get possession as a class? Slaves are not bred to possess. I will grant you that the present masters may be overthrown by a political or even violent revolution, that's only natural. Death comes to all things including the ruling groups of finance. They cannot last forever. But because your ruling groups must pass away that does not mean that your irresponsible, mutually antagonistic, hopelessly helpless and abjectly servile mass will possess themselves of the reins of power. No, your revolutions have always meant, and will always mean simply a change of masters. One group of dominants falling and another group of dominants rising. I might paraphrase Tennyson, "Masters come and masters go. But the slave toils on forever."

"Our class is determined by our method of getting a living. Our method of getting a living is determined by our mental inclinations. Our mental inclinations are determined by our brain type. Our brain types are determined by biological variations, due to certain flukes of nature as yet not fully understood by science. This also holds true for masters. Masters rise from dominant types but are, intermarried with inferior types from time to time. This destroys their dominance and another group of masters arises in their stead. Then there is an another factor. Masters are simply human. They are adapted to the environment with which they find themselves. But the evolution of the machinery of production, the extension of commerce and trade continually changes that environment and is a great factor in the rise and fall of master groups. If my logic is not at fault then the new masters do not rise from the working class, nor from the master class but from that biological third estate that belongs to neither; from it arises your leaders in the financial, the political, and the industrial world. Genius is what controls human affairs; economic evolution is what forces the world's great transformation. Genius rises from humanity both master and slave. It knows no class; it knows no heridity, it is a spontaneous variation that meets a certain requirement at a certain time. That and that alone is genius. As for the classes they change from kings to patricians, from patricians to priests and nobles, from nobles to bourgeois, from bourgeois to merachant princes. They change to meet the requirements of industrial development and will continue so to change as long as evolution exists. The blonde beast always on top.

"On the other hand we've had the slave, the freedman, the serf, and now the wage slave — they too have changed their form according to the industrial requirement of each historical epoch. Both classes are in the grasp of the inexorable law of development, but both classes remain true to type, the one as master and the other as slave, and between the two is the unrecognized middle ground that keeps up and vitalizes both."

"It would be a good thing if you would croak right now, "said Collins," that damned argument of yours would sow pessimism in the heart of a jumping jack. I know that you are wrong, in fact I feel it, but I can't answer you. At least not yet."

Jack smiled, "if what I say is truth then how are we going to get away from it. There is really no use in fighting gravitation."

"But Jack see here, listen, "Rudolph broke in, waving his hands in the air" our agitation, our education, economic development, all will work together to awaken labor to a consciousness of its power. We will teach them to recognize the tyranny of capital, and the benefits of co-operative efforts. We will teach them how to fill the world with peace and plenty, how to fight the fires of joy on the lips of love. It is the historic mission of the working class to take possession of industry. Karl Marx says so in the first volume of capital, haven't you read it. He proved it in the Communist Manifesto that labor must awaken to a consciousness of its collective power, or as one of the poets put it:

"We shall laugh to scorn your power, that has held a world in awe.

We shall trample on your customs, and shall spit upon your law.

We shall come up from life's desert to your burdened banquet hall,

We shall turn your wine to wormwood, and your honey into gall."

"Isn't it too bad that nature's most beautiful flowers, those which are so rich in color and fragrance do never bear seeds Now if we could only fill the world with souls such as Rudolph then all our troubles would be over," commented Jack dryly. "But the fact is that the mass of mankind does not look at things as he does. Is it well for us to range with science, glorying in the time. While city children soil a sicken. Soul and sense in city slime."

And from the other cell Rudolph continued the quotation. "Where the master shrimps his haggard seamstress of her daily bread, Where a single sordid attic holds the living and the dead. Where the, smoldering fire of fever crawls across the rotted floor, and the crowded couch holds incest, in the warrens of the poor."

"Oh, for God's sake cut it, when ever you try to talk sense your brain takes fire "Collins said." Let's get back to the subject History and evolution both teach the progress of life is always in the direction of higher and better organization. That fact alone proves to me that labor's organization must go and will go on until it is perfected, and the perfection of labor's organization will mean its ownership and control of the socially necessary means of life. When that is accomplished, not only labor but the world will be free, simply because labor will be the world."

"Divinely free to work and love, agreed Rudolph.

"It sounds plausible, but to my mind there is a rattle in it. There is something about it that is not true to nature; it sounds too much like an orthodox sermon. It is a statement of the desires of your brain and not of the facts of existence" Said the boy, Then after a pause he went on.

"I am willing to admit that I may be mistaken, I am not sufficiently familiar with human history and the evolution of industrial processes, to base an unqualified argument upon them. But if I am not mistaken, history teaches us how successive generations of men have managed to survive, successive changes in environment. Industrial evolution teaches us that the changes in production that have taken place in the past are but the logical outcome of man's increasing need. All history is but the story of man's struggle to adapt himself to the changing order of things While I am short on a knowledge of history, I do know something of nature and nature's methods. I have learned to observe things as they are and since I have been introduced to the class struggle and you have told me of its history, I have noticed three types in the human race. One type whose object in life is to own and control, another type whose object it is to produce and bring forth, and still another between these two that sends its members into both classes to renew and vitalize them when they become old and stade. Nov I am willing to admit that this thing may come to an end. As I have said all things come to an end, and the human race is no exception. Still industrial mastery will die out with the passing of the markets, then there will arise an intellectual master which in its expression may be more tyrannical than the industrial masters of today.

"You must not forget that when the industrial problem is solved thru the collective ownership of the means of production and distribution, granting that that day will come, that the conflicting types still exist and will ex-

THE NEW PROPAGANDA

Heretofore the literature of Socialism has had to do with the subject as a philosophy, a theory with no practical application to prove its fundamental soundness. There is a change imminent which will have a wide and deep effect upon the movement of the workers toward the acquisition of power. Growing out of the victory of Socialism in Russia, one of the greatest nations, comprising nearly 200,000,000 people, will come a new literature which will consist of accounts of practical applications of the principles of socialization of all productive machinery and land under direct control of the workers. From this source will come the most interesting as well as the most instructive literature of the proletarian revolution of the immediate future.

The capitalist world doubtless realizes what power and conviction such literature will have upon the proletariat of other countries. It doubtless realizes the grave danger to its own ability to successfully lie to and decieve the workers in the face of such incontrovertible evidence of the success of the workings of applied Socialism. Out of Russia we may expect in the very near future, a constant stream of propaganda that will be the means of such a mighty stirring of the proletariat of all countries as has never been dreamed of. Not that the Soviet government itself will direct this propaganda, but with the soon-to-be opening of trade relations, peace and recognition, what forces can keep out the facts? In the heads of travellers will come information that will set the workers thinking. The facts will come out.

Along this line, it is interesting to note that the publication of the Russian Code of Labor Laws which was first published in this country about two weeks ago indicates this new literature and has already been christened by a baptism in the mire of capitalist gutter sheets. This Code will be published in part in the next issue of The Toiler. We wish to point out in this connection, that with every refutation in the capitalist press of the processes of successful operation of socialized industry in Russia a great interest and inquisitiveness will be aroused among the workers and by consequent investigation and reading the truth will at last be acquired.

And preciously here is a great field of work for the socialist and communist press of this country to delve in. The truth about Russia must be placed before the workers. Every paper and every reader must become an agency thru which the truth may filter. Readers must prepare to extend the circulation of these truth telling papers—as widely as possible. The workers must be reached with the facts. The greatest opportunity of all time is almost face to face with us. We must prepare to fulfil our duty in the monumental task of distributing this propaganda to America's millions of toilers. It is a work which every thinking worker should take up with earnestness. Prepare to distribute the facts about SOCIALIST RUSSIA.

A COMMUNIST --- ALMOST

While we have had no intentions of carrying on a week-to-week argument with the Miami Valley Socialist, we cannot refrain from complimenting its editor upon his arrival at another milestone on the way to advocacy of Communist principles and tactics. And while he continues to resort to comics we will have to smile in reply. In the last issue the editor says in reply to us:

> "If we (the Socialist Party) aimed merely at putting Socialists in legislatures to introduce reforms or to "talk revolution", the Berger and Albany incidents might be an argument against political action.
> But what Socialists seek by political action is not to have a vote and voice in carrying on the capitalist State; on the contrary, it is to rally a majority for the abolition of the capitalist state".

The editor of the Miami is perfectly aware that the Communist Labor Party has not dispensed with political action, so the intimation to that effect is without force. The editor goes on to give a reason for the Socialist Party's advocacy of political action in these words:

> "Now so long as the capitalist class can pose as the forces of "law and order." the great inert American masses will cling blindly to them. And so long as the capitalist can hold out the ballot to them, they will not believe the capitalists have deprived them of "liberty." But by political action, by insisting upon the ballot as the means of accomplishing the transition from capitalism to industrial democracy, Socialists force the hand of the capitalist class"— to prove, he should have added, that political action by the working class is but of secondary value as a weapon to abolish the capitalist state. His statement amounts to this: that the use of the ballot to the workers is of more value as a propaganda weapon than as an actual political pry with which it may hope to gain power over the State. It is also in contradiction to his first statement quoted above. He does not expect to ever "rally a majority" of votes with which to overthrow capitalism but will use the ballot to "force the hand of capitalism."

The above statement comprises a near-declaration of harmony with the position of the Communist Labor Party in regard to the uses and value of working-class political action. We had hardly hoped comrade Sharts to ever make it. And therein lies our reason for smiling. Has not the logic of the "Berger and Albany incidents" gotten a bit the best of comrade Sharts faith in the power of the ballot to abolish the capitalist State? It looks very much like it. To prove just how much, we quote from the Platform of the C. L. P and ask that you compare the above statement with what follows:

"The most important means of capturing state power for the workers is the action of the masses, proceeding from the place where the workers are gathered together—in the shops and factories. The use of the political machinery of the capitalist state for this purpose is only secondary.

However, we do not ignore the value of voting, or of electing candidates to public office—so long as these are of assistance to the workers in their economic struggle. Political campaigns, and the election of public officials, provide opportunities for showing up capitalist democracy, educating the workers to a realization of their class position, and of demonstrating the necessity for the overthrow of the capitalist system. But it must be clearly emphasized that the chance of winning even advanced reforms of the present capitalist system at the polls is extremely remote; and even if it were possible, these reforms would not weaken the capitalist system.

That the Socialist Party advocates use of the ballot for the purpose of "forcing the capitalist class" to prove the ballot's precise value is a new one. We really thot it took the ballot seriously, and can hardly accept comrade Shart's definition. It is much easier to believe that comrade Sharts is somewhat out of sympathy with the present day attitude of the Socialist Party on this matter.

Will we have to believe him a Communist—almost?

SPARKS.

There's a world of good reading and propaganda in that package of 8 pamphlets which comprise the Half Price Literature Combination. Order it read the pamphlets and distribute them Let them be working for education. They are only good when they are being read. The price is 50c.

Five dollars for the defense of comrades indicted has been received from comrade Mathieu of South Band Ind. With many casses demanding defense, every comrade should lend a hand.

Comrade Markert of Mt. Healthy states that there will soon be some new subs. arrive from that point. The army of sub hustlers is constantly recruiting new troopers.

J. Foelster of Davenport, is in with $6.00 worth of subscriptions this week He states that he likes the premiums which we give as reward for getting them.

Comrade L. A. Kospert is still sending them in. About ten dollars worth of new subscriptions each week is his past month's record. "Can you beat it"?

The cartoon fund is receiving some boosts this week. Considering the quality of the product of our Cartoon Department, we must emphasize that the fund deserves to grow. A dime or dollar from YOU will help.

Comrade Walter Conradie, of New Bremen, remits for three renewals. He states that the "Black Sheep" is well worth the price.

And that reminds us that you whose subscriptions will soon expire should renew at once so as not to miss a chapter of this good story.

Thru the efforts of comrade O. C. Schmid, our Sandusky list gets a boost of sixteen new subscribers. Just a straw that shows how easy it is to get them when you go after them.

And to [illegible] and [illegible] of our literary [illegible] taking advantage of our premium offers. See the advertisement in this issue.

They are [illegible] down at Bellaire. There is always some action there. Comrade Frank Stahl proves it by a remittance of $4.00 for subs.

Every day the proof is brought home to us that it is easy to get subscriptions for The Toiler. In fact it is growing easier. Here is another booster, comrade Cather of Youngstown, who remits $7.50 for new subscriptions. What better proof would you ask?

If you don't believe it is easy, try it yourself.

Comrade Fosse Evans of Kansas is ever ready to do his share for our cause. Whether it is getting subscriptions or securing defense funds, he is on the job. His recent remittance of $27.00 for subscriptions and the Chas. Baker defense proves that he is able to get splendid co-operation from the comrades of his vicinity.

Have you ordered a bundle of Toilers form himself and another comrade small but results are great. Get a bundle each week and distribute them. Then watch results.

A donation of ten dollars from comrades Zhuck of Youngstown is testimony to his interest in the emancipation of the workers and the rebuilding of society upon a basis of freedom and equality.

Comrade Brenkar renews his subscription and also encloses two dollars form himself and another comrade for the great Cause.

Five dollars for subscription cards and party work comes from comrade J. H. Sims of Bethel.

Debs pictures are still selling at 25c each. Order one and hang it an the walls of your home.

Comrade Spring of Weston W. Va. is here again with a list of three. That Weston list is growing.

Those little boosts which the comrades send in with their renewals are the best means of introducing The Toiler to a friend. Any worker will appreciate a little gift like a 3 months trial sub. Send one in with your renewal.

Comrade Sprigg of Weston, W. Va., remits $4.00 for subscriptions.

We note the arrival of two yearlies from comrade Hedden of Kaleva, Mich. [illegible] the job is [illegible]

"Some of the best papers in the country" is the way comrade Braswell of Clinton expresses his opinion of The Toiler.

Comrade Foelster of Davenport is getting help in his sub campaign, he states. He remits for six yearlies. He's got the system it seems.

Comrade Kospert of Toledo won't get all the subs there. Here comes A. T. Haworth with a bundle of 4. And yet, we believe there is still some room for a few other comrades to catch a few there.

A nice list of nine subscriptions arrives from comrade E. L. Thompson of Charlestown W. Va.

Is Your Study Class Organized?

We had expected to publish this week the first chapter of "Proletarian Science, an Economic Interpretation of History", by comrade W. E. Raynolds. Due to some delay in the mails the manuscript did not arrive in time for this issue. We are frankly disappointed and we know that many readers are also. But it has its compensating side too—it will give some comrades a chance to complete arrangements for taking up the study of this work with their friends and Local comrades.

So we say: get as many as possible into a group for the study of Proletarian Science at least one evening a week. Take up these chapters as they are published in The Toiler and you will become intensely interested and better educated than most college professors and bourgeois philosophers.

Organize your study class and prepare to benefit all who take part in the study of these chapters. Get all the good possible out of this course of lectures.

THE INFINITELY INTERESTING COMMON PEOPLE

Skygac gets tangled up in some heart-throb stuff. Writes an unorthodox letter and gives some unorthodox advice.

Skygac sat in his study. Said study being the other half of a two-room two-by-twice flat. The janitor had had a chill and in consequence the Hooverized radiator was emitting a gentle warmth, far in excess of its usual activities. The flat was actually comfortable, not as to size but as to warmth.

Junior Tattoo purred faithfully at his stand upon the imitation quarter-sawed-oak dresser and registered four minutes to seven on the evening of a blustery February day. The latest issue of a literary trade, journal had just arrived and Skygac expected to spend the evening enjoying its contents.

In the department headed, "The Experience Exchange" Henry Flury, a teacher of English Literature, had written an analysis of the situation in regard to the magazine world. Here is what Skygac read:

"Ted Olsen may not have intended to stir up a hornet's nest in "A word to the average reader", but before he has seen the thing thru he may find such to be the case. He may consider me as a hornet and listen to my "buzz" for a while.

The magazines occupy a strategic position in the realm of moulding public opinion, that no other agency does. The newspaper once held the respect of the people, but it is rapidly losing caste among the intelligent people, partly on account of its catering to sensationalism by billboard headlines and partly because many feel that it is an advertising agency rather than a disseminator of truth.

"Why are the magazines burdened with such drivel?" asks Olsen. "There are two extremes", he says, "the morbidly psychological and the frothy and superficial. Between them there is an immense range of opportunity. Common people are infinitely interesting if you only know it."

Quite so, quite so, Ted. This "immense range of opportunity" is however (I fear) going to be virgin territory for many a day for the following reason: In the majority of cases the magazines are owned and operated for and by the 'big interests' or those that have the same psychology, and any story that deviates from economic orthodoxy is a "black beast" and sent home to its author where it very properly belongs. Certainly it should not be allowed to disgrace the respectable pages of a good advertising medium and detract from the financial value of the same.

What the magazines are suffering from is a case of literary inbreeding due to this policy of economic exclusion. Owners rather than editors should receive the onus of our journalistic spleen. Because they have experienced this power, this "bread and butter" power for so long now they have produced in literature the same result that prevails in the profesion of teaching, namely they have forced the best out of the ranks until only the worst is left.

In order to be specific let me tell you how that much advertised and verbose "Saturday Evening Post" strikes me. In the first place it advertises conspiciously its large circulation, thereby it is a good advertising medium. (and its rates fixed accordingly). The print is so fine that I seldom am able to read more than one article when I have the time to waste on it. I find that I have a regular game of tag with myself dodging the ads sandwiched in between the "stories," (or is it the "stories" in between the ads?) and trying to follow the thing where it is "continued".

The Post, in line with all the Curtis publications, CAREFULLY AVOIDS ANY SERIOUS CONSIDERATION OF ECONOMIC ISSUES in its stories and accepts only those that treat of them in a flippant manner. Supperficiality, the mediocre, characterizes it.

What the magazines need is a re-conversion to the new principles of Democracy that are sweeping the whole civilized world: then we shall have some short stories that reflect the life of "the infinitely interesting common people

The common people are intensely interested at present in their own economic salvation. That is the thing that has the "heart-throb" in it, and that is the thing that is conspiciously absent in the magazine stories of today."

That was what Henry Fluty wrote. It was not the "buzzing" of a hornet but a sound analysis of one evil of today. In the same department of the same journal Skygac discovered a vein of the "heart-throb" material heritobefore mentioned.

J. R. E. after writing of some attempts in the field of amateur litrary efforts and expressing the hope that as she is still in her twenties her ambition may yet be realized, penned the following sketch of human misery,

"And now since you cannot realize the degredation and humiliation which it costs me to admit my difficulties, I am going to "fess up" as some poor miserable creature may be enduring the same inferno and this may be the means of spurring her to rise above the mire. I am a normal graduate, the daughter of a well-to-do physician-father and a graduate in music also.

At twenty years of age, I married a wealthy but practically illiterate farmer, thirteen years my senior. Having had his fling he has sought to crush my ambition, youth and ideals.

He does not approve of magazines, books, writing, picture shows, card-playing or fancy work. May God forgive him for it, but he has beaten, kicked and insulted me and allows me absolutely no recreation of his free will.

He forces me to go to bed at seven P. M. at the only hour that I really feel inspired to write.

The only pleasures that I have are stolen.

I have a good home to which I could return, but there are three little children to whom I feel that I owe the possession of a home, and it is for their sake that I remain in bondage.

The only time I have for writing is when my tyrant is away. But God helping me, I intend to succeed in spite of all this, that I may leave a legacy of worthy accomplishment to my little girls.

Can any of you, dear readers reveal greater determination than this?"

There is "heart-throb" material in abundance!

There is tragedy in a child-wife "hooked up" with a "tyrant" thirteen years her senior. There is pathos in the pitiful child-like faith of her "God helping her" made doubly tragic by the knowledge that she had no opportunity to learn differently in the days when she was becoming a normal graduate. There is humor in her dependance upon "7 P. M. inspiration" for her fund of information by which she hopes to leave a "legacy of worthy accomplishment" in the literary world. There is comedy in this story of the lady rut-runner who believed in "free will" but who could not practice it because "her tyrant wouldn't let her!"

The spineless wife of an "illiterate" husband, glorying in her martyrdom, suffering from overindulgence in self-pity, enduring the kicks and beatings of "her tyrant" for the poor privilege of "the posscssion" of such a home!

Pathos, tragedy, pity or condemniation, here is material for a story of many angles. Skygac decided she was not so much in need of sympathy as advice and wrote her a letter as follows:

To J. R. E. A Blinded Soul in Pain.

Dear, Martyr-Criminal,—After reading your "confession" in the Journal of 2|10, I could not resist the temptation to write to you and give you some badly needed advice!

You say, "you are going to 'fess up' as some poor miserable creature may be enduring the same inferno and this may be the means of spurring her to rise above the mire."

PHYSICIAN, HEAL THYSELF.

So? You are, "remaining in bondage for your children's sake?"

First, I presume, you remained in bondage "for the sake of appearances."

Later you remained in bondage, "for the sake of the child."

Still later it was no longer child but children.

Did it ever occur to you that your actions were criminal? Not criminal perhaps in the sense of statute-made law, but criminal in the sence of the higher morality which has to do with the right of a child to be well born?

A child's mother owes it a home, not merely a "possession" or a place to stay. You have never given your children a home. You could not, with a "tyrant" instead of a mate for a husband.

A child's mother owes it a parentage it can respect. Can the fruit of your labors respect an "illiterate tyrant" who does not approve of any of the refinements of civilization? Can they even approve of you, once they find out that you are so spineless that you will continue to live with a man who has "beaten, kicked and insulted you"?

Surely, your "ambitions and ideals" can not be very lofty, or you would break the intolerable bonds and give your children an inheritance of a home free from the conditions you describe!

Eagles should mate with eagles and crows with crows. When mated otherwise the offspring (if any) are hybrids. You cannot undo the past but you CAN plan more wisely for the future.

The careful mother, the one who "reveals the greater determination" feels that she owes her children the right to be well born. Can a child be well-born that is sired by a seven o'clock wife-beater?

While you cannot undo the past, you CAN give your children a mamma who can smile,—an honest-to-goodness smile that bubbles up from the fount of a life rightely lived, not the hypocritical smile that is FORCED for the sake of appearances.

You are, if you only knew it, a most fortunate woman in one respect; you have a good home to which you are welcome to return.

Hasten Thee!

Return at once, and stand not upon the order of your going!

Give your children a chance to grow up in an atmosphere of love and confidence and mutual understanding. Give them an opportunity to share in the responsibilities and the refinements of civilization.

Nature, if you will but hearken, fairly shrieks at you, "Adapt yourself."

Get out of your impossible environment at once, for the sake of yourself, your children who are, and the possibilities of the future.

If life has nothing better to offer than birth, reproduction, misery and death, then it were better that death come early as it does to the swine.

Stop rut-running.

Quit living in the tomorrow of hope and begin cashing-in on the realities of today. Live each day as though you know it to be your last. Live so that YOU can approve of yourself and laughter will rise to your lips, the tang and joy of life will sparkle in your eyes and existence will cease to be the "inferno" you describe, and will become an anthem filled joy. Then you will find love. Not an imitation love, which is in reality lust bent upon having its fling, but a love based upon the perfect companionship of equality.

Many believe, but few have the courage to act. Be a self-starter for your self, and spur yourself to "rise above the mire".

Physician, heal thyself.

Yours for your own happiness,
Skygac.

Junior Tattoo registered the midnight hour. Skygac wondered how many people would agree with the advice he had written. He knew that J. R. E. was not herself to blame. He knew that she was the product and the victim of her environment. He knew that while she was struggling to get that Normal education the educational system itself was controlled in the interest of the dominant class and that she had been robbed in her infancy of the opportunity to know even the fundamental great truths of the evolution of life.

J. R. E. is a type, far too common in America. How many thousand or million of her there may be, we as a nation are too prudish to find out. Besides it is not to the economic advantage of the dominant class for woman to be economically freed from bondage. And because it is to the economic interests of the dominant class, we still have the unfair and intolerable condition of women held in economic bondage, unevently matched in loveless tho legal marriages, enduring all the pangs of a loveless life, of opportunity denied, of hopes shattered and ambitions crushed. Because of the ignorance and religious superstitions fostered by the dominant class women are forced to bear a fruitage of children who are the unwelcome and undesired offspring of lust; children who are damned before birth to a joyless life as devoid of initiative as the ordinary woman in the ordinary pastor's "flock". And all because the present order of things makes man a slave to the industrial conditions and woman who is economically dependant upon the man, a slave of a slave. A slave doubly born, a slave of tradition and custom and a slave of man.

Happiness within the marriage relation IS possible, but before that possibility may became a reality, there MUST be equality. Equality in education, in mentality, in age, and above all, in economic opportunity.

Thinking of these heart throbs of the infinitely interesting common people, Skygac placed the dust cap on his mill, took down the Murphy in-a-dor from its unaired two by six prison, wound Junior Tatto, opened the one window in the flat and retired for the night, leaving the Hooverized radiator as cold as the love of a woman who finds herself in economic bondage to a tyrant who is legally her husband and economically her overlord and master.

Marguerite Prevey Kidnapped

"The economic conditions in every country determine the form of organization and method of propaganda to be adopted. In order efficiently to organize our movement here, we must clearly understand the political and economic structure of the United States.

"Althrogh the United States is called political democracy there is no opportunity whatever for the working class through the regular political machinery to effectively oppose the will of the capitalist class.

"However, we do not ignore the value of voting, or of electing candidates to public office—so long as these are of assistance to the workers in their economic struggle. Political campaigns, and the election of public officials, provide opportunities for showing up capitalist democracy, educating the workers to a realization of their class position, and of demonstrating the necssity of their class position, and of demonstrating the necessity for the overthrow of the capitalist system. But it must be clearly emphasized that the chance of winning even advanced reforms of the present capitalist system at the polls is extremely remote; and even if it were possible, these reform would not weaken the capitalist system."

Attorney Sharts proved to any one one whose ears were attuned to a sense of logic that the charges were groundless.

One of a large number of Communists and Communist Laborites who were recently indicted by a Chicago Grand Jury for organizing the Communist Labor Party there in August last, Mrs. Prevey was arrested nearly three weeks ago at her home near Akron. Her extradition from Ohio was sought and Governor Cox had approved the extradition papers and allowed her arrest in his office by an agent of Illinois when her attorney Jos. W. Sharts of Dayton demanded that the formalities of the alw and legal precedure be complied with by Ohio authorities before she could be taken.

She was placed in the county jail at Columbus and bail denied. At the hearing on extradition Judge Kincead ruled that before he could properly grant the extradition of the prisoner, the state of Illinois would have to prove to his satisfaction that the Communist Labor Party was formed for the purpose of overthrowing the government of the United States "by violence and unlawful means" in violation of the criminal syndicalism law of Illinois.

Cites Cleveland case.

Testifying on the witness stand, Secretary Allison related the case of the arrest of five officials of the Party at Cleveland in October last.

The testimony showed that at an organization meeting himself with four others had been arrested and charged with the same offense under the Ohio criminal syndicalism law. At the hearing before Judge Moylan the Party Platform was submitted as evidence of the lawless character of the Communist Labor Party, but Judge Moylan refused to bind the accused over to the Grand Jury and dismissed the case. The transcript of the evidence in this case which contained a speech of Mrs. Prevey's which was delivered at the meeting, was not at hand, it having been delayed in reching Columbus, but it was shown that the cases paralled.

Attorney Sharts moved for a dismissal of the case. It was denied. Judge Kincead, in his decision, stated that the declaration of the Party's Platform declaring itself to be in harmony with the principles of the Third International constituted a proper basis for the arrest of the prisoner and being satisfied in other particulars as to the extradition processes he would grant the extradition of the prisoner to Illinois. An appeal was taken by Mrs. Prevey's attorneys and a stay of execution of 48 hours was granted in order to perfect the appeal to the Court of Appeals. The entry to that effect went on that afternoon and the following morning a further stay of execution was granted by the Court of Appeals at Dayton until the case could be heard before it and a summons was issued.

Habeas corpus may release Mrs. Prevey.

Learning of the kidnapping of their client by the violators of the law, the sacredness of which they prate so much about, Mrs. Prevey's attorneys at once wired Wm. A. Cunnea of Chicago to start habeas corpus proceedings in the Chicago Federal Court for the return of the prisoner to Ohio. A certified transcript of the proceedings of the hearing at Columbus has been forwarded to attorney Cunnea.

It is expected that before this issue reaches our readers Mrs. Prevey will have been returned to Ohio and placed at least for the present, out of reach of these wolves of capitalism, whose disregard for their own laws would disgrace even the society of savages. But capitalism knows but one law—that of brute force. And if its henchmen have gone insane with power, it behooves the workers to bring about a state of society wherin such beasts will be kept in subjection.

John Donovan now has the choice of staying on with the steel corporation at 50 cents an hour or going with the Illinois Central railroad at the same figure. In either case he and his family face starvation.

No matter which master he chooses, of each dollar that he produces, a part will go to the bond and stockholders of the corporation for which he works. He will labor, and they without playing any part in the production of the things that are needful for the maintenance of life, will be able to enjoy themselves out of the wealth which Mike Donovan produces.

Lincoln used a phrase which fits the case exactly. Because of his ownership of the means of livelihood, the capitalist is able to say to the worker, "You work and toil and earn bread and I'll eat it." Lincoln used that phrase in a debate over the issue of chattel slavery, but it rings as true today as it did in 1858.

Define slavery as the ownership of the body and slavery disappeared in 1865. Define it as a system which compels one man to support another out of the product of this labor, and slavery is more prevalent in 1920 than it was in 1860.

Slavery today is a matter of ownership by the few, and that slavery can never be abolished until those who work own the jobs on which they are employed. That is the new basis for liberty and on that basis alone can liberty be set up.

You Will Help

Sure, you'll help the Cartoon Account to brighten up a bit. If we'd quit publishing cartoons, you'd be one of the first to register disappointment wouldn't you? Well, we'd hate to disappoint any of our readers, especially by leaving out the cartoons.

But you know they are expensive, and paper is higher and printing is higher too that it has ever been. Right now, you are paying more for your capitalist dope sheets than you ever did—and of course you have to have them—we wonder if you will be as generous with your own paper, The Toiler?

Take a hint, send in a bit to make the cartoon fund look better.

-- and out of that enforced labor comes the huge profits which fall into their coffers.

The workers of Kansas are up against the age old question of Life against Government. So far in the history of the world, Life has always won out against Government. There is more reason today than ever before to believe that in the coming conflict between the Kansas workers and this infamous capitalist class moulded law, the lives and freedom of the workers will win.

What do you say, workers of Kansas?

The Black Sheep

press themselves as those who are willing and anxious to take the responsibility of freedim and those who desire the freedom from responsibility. The 'let George do it' attitude will give rise to a new despotism. For society will always need laws and eighty percent of the people would rather go to a picnic than to the legislature. Then there are other problems; for instance the problem of over population, the problem of the feeble minded, the problem of heriditary disease. All these must be regulated for the welfare of the race and they who do the regulating will be the masters. I tell you boys what the trouble is as I see it. Nature turned the lizard into a bird by natural selection, and you try to turn an individualistically minded slave mass into a social organism by talking to them."

"Oh, well "Collins said, as he straightened out the quilts upon the bed and proceeded to lace his shoes, the kid is young yet, when that brain of his becomes class conscious, by being rubbed against the struggle, then he will get over the merely theoretic part of his objections and put himself into the harness to organize those who are organizable. Just wait till his whiskers tickle his chin and he has seen his own soul reflected in a woman's eyes, for whose favor he would gladly shed his blood, then he'll quit thinking of beavers and lizards and get busy on the system."

"I thot you didn't like poetry," remarked the boy.

"Taint poetry, 'tis facts!' replied Collins.

At this point the jailor entered with their breakfast. It was about ten o'clock. He said that the kid had better get his clothes on as the judge would want to see him by and by, so saying he left them to wonder what the new developments might be.

SOVIET POSTERS

We have recently received a number of posters from Soviet Russia, which we are reprintig on this and the opposite page. In tone and execution they do not differ much—at least this is true of the four military posters—from the products turned out by artists in other countries when working on similar subjects. It is likey that these military posters are of various dates, for they indicate the varying objectives of the military effort of Soviet Russia. Thus, those on the opposite page urging men to enlist for fighting in the Urals (IV and V) may be a year old, for it was in Jaunary, 1919, that Kolchak's armies had advanced furthest into European Russia. No. 1, on this page, is an admonition to fight for the Donetz coal-fields, in other words, to help recover southeastern Russia from Denikin. Its top line reads: "The Donetz Coal must be ours!" At the side are the three sentences: "If there is no coal, the factories are idle. If there is no coal, the trains will not go. Until the Don is ours, hunger will be with us." At the bottom is the line: "Victory over Denikin's bands means victory over hunger." Just what part these posters played in raising the spirit of the Red armies to the point of victory, we do not know, but their work is done, and all the tasks they urged the workers to perform have been fulfilled. Probably No. IV. is the most recent of the posters: it deals with the defense of Petrograd, probably against the Yudenich assault of October, 1919.

But Soviet Russia is interested more in the arts of peace than those of war, as is once more suggested by the two posters at the bottom of this page. In such case, the large words read: "Organize Reading Huts," while an extensive text at the bottom, too small to be legible in the reproduction, explains the necessity of spreading education and culture in the villages. Evidently it is intended that the peasants of the New Russia shall have educational opportunities that were greater than what they enjoyed in the Russia of old.

Of the three posters on this page, the two upper ones are encouragements to enlist in the armies fighting for the recovery of the Urals. IV reads: "Comrades, all out for the Urals! Death to Kolchak and the other lackeys of the Czar and capitalism." V reads: "Forward, to the defense of the Urals!" VI, below, is a summons to defend the cradle of the Revolution, Petrograd, against the advance of Yudenich. It reads: "All Our Lives in the Defence of Petrograd!"

Cheerful Greetings from Chicago Jail

The attorneys for Marguerite Prevey, who was kidnapped from Columbus jail and taken to Chicago by Illinois authorities March 3rd, are engaged in a legal battle for her release on habeas corpus. It is expected that before this issue of The Toiler reaches its readers, the courts will have rendered a decision on the case. Everything possible is being done to have her returned to the jurisdiction of Ohio courts.

Comrade Prevey sends a cheerful message of "I'm all right, don't worry about me," to all comrades.—But we wish to add that ever comrade can show his loyalty by helping pay the costs of comrade Prevey's defense.

The Kansas Court of Idustrial Slavery

— By Bill Smith —

In a political sense Kansas is the most picturesque state in the Union. From the time Jim Lane, — bushy haired, wild eyed, with an enormous medal jangling from a ribbon around his neck, and a six shooter bulging from his hip pocket, invaded the U. S. Senate in 1861 as its first senatorial representative, it has been a sort of political museum.

It has furnished many amusing and interesting characters and has enacted many fantastic and Quixotic laws; and just as Kansas seems about to settle down to a methodical and rationable way of living —— something busts loose!

This time it is Gov. Henry J. Allen and his Court of Industrial Relations Who has not heard of Hennery Jay—he of the inexhaustable ink pot and perpetual over flow of superheated air? On every concieveable question that has troubled mankind in the last twenty years Hennery has been "Johnny on the Spot" with a solution. Do you know "Who struck Billy Patterson?" Ask Hennery—for you know Solomon is dead.

After the paid and corrupt press had the public well fed up on the iniquitous and criminal conduct of those arch villians—the striking miners, Hennery Jay assembled the sun flower solons in solemn conclave for the purpose of putting a curb of iron on these malefactors—and he got just what he wanted, in an institution that smells of the Dark Ages and reeks with the odor of the Inquisition—and it is called "The Court of Industrial Relations."

Formerly legislators were intellingent human beings who possessed both independence of thought and action. But now it seems, far too many are merely political scullions and scanengers. Some have that globular hair matted knob that shows above the collar button carefully treated with a vacuum cleaner before entering upon their legislative duties, and then they have no more idea than a kangaroo, what laws they are to make untill the Big Cheese tells them what he wants. This cringing servility of a legislative body—no matter how stupid or mediocre—is indeed pitiful. There are vastly too many political serfs in all our state legislatures to-day, who do just as they are ordered to do.

But Hennery got his court. This is composed of three members, who are called "judges"—and mark you—all appointed by Hennery Jay! They get $5,000 yearly of the people's money and they have the power to fix wages, change labor contracts and do about every thing else under the sun that God Almighty overlooked. Its principal object is to strangle and ham string labor, and legalize slavery in the State of Kansas.

It seems strange when one ponders over the early history of Kansas and recalls how bitterly she fought human slavery—to now find it the first state under the regime of capitalism to reintroduce it! At one sweep this new law nullifies the 13th amendment to the U. S. Constitution, The English Magna Charta, the Bill of Rights and even Christ's Sermon on the Mount itself!

Under this enactment a laborer is chained to the job! Let him dare to resort to the usual means to better his condition or wage—that is, to strike,—a $500 fine and imprisonment awaits him! And you may bet your last cent that he will get it! Let us ask,—is there a working man in America with brain so small and warped, who would think for a moment, that he could appear before a court presided over by the political puppets of Henry Allen—or any other governor—and expect justice? So much for the strike—but here is where this Kansas Laws gets on its hind legs and paws and snorts and bellers:—"to order, call or foment a strike," entitles one to the nice little gift of a $1,000 fine and five years in the penitentiary!

At the present rate of pay—and the limited days he is permitted to work—what miner or other worker could put up that 500 or 1,000 dollars? He could only do, as thousands of his comrades have done from the days of Christ down—suffer indefinately in prison. Why could they not have been more generous and have made that fine $29,000,000 so the boys could all feel like Rockefeller?

Boys do you get that word "foment"? When a general round up is desired that word "foment," means anything that a judge desires it to mean that will afford an excuse for fining and sending an inrocent man—whom they don't overly love—to the penitentiary. If one will canvass the "judical" decisions of the last five years, he will note many horrible outrages against common sense, due to this twisting and juggling of words that only finds its equal in the blood smeared courts of the Spanish Inquisition. Once it burned a man because he looked "askance" at the king who was passing by to witness the burning of a lot of undesirables. They whole question hinged upon what "askance" really meant—and further the poor fellow could not help it, as he was cross-eyed. But that did not cut any ice with the Court of Industrial Relations, of that time,—for they found him guilty and sent him to the stake.

This law of Kansas recognizes no geographical limitations,—it oozes all over the U. S. A. like a gob of buckwheat butter. Now when the rail way maintenance and shop workers threatened to strike on the 17th of Feb. Hennery Jay polished up his Industrial Court and was ready for them! Word flashed from Topeka that warrants would be issued for all the leaders of the Brotherhood of Maintenance and Shop men no matter when they should happen to be! Just a word here;—one year from now all the mines of Great Britain will be nationalized;—the miners have served notice that they refuse to further give their labor, lives and blood for the upbuilding of colossal fortunes for a few persons and corporations. When the miners of Kansas and elsewhere gaze across the waters and see this new condition,—what greater thing could happen to put them in a "foment"? Did the labor leaders of Great Britain know of the yawning prisons awaiting them in Kansas, they would surely stop this mad progression toward human rights. Huh! What did you say?

But you will find nothing in this Kansas law—nor any law that has been passed at the instigation of the sleek and paunchy minions of capitalism where operators are really subject to fine or imprisonment. They may close the works indefinately—they may entail untold suffering on the working classes by non employment to create artificial shortages,—they may profiteer to their hearts content,—making their hundreds and thousands per cent. blood money, and who shall say them nay? But let the working man ask for a decent living and resort to any method to secure it—the vampires of capitalism get busy and you hear the creaking of the opening prison doors!

Hennery Jay loves the laboring man;—and one may venture, that when the Kansas solons sat in spell bound rapture hypnotized by the torrid blasts of Ciceronian eloquence that Hennery yodeled forth,—their sandy patches of alfalfa kently waving to and fro in the sultry breeze of his oratory,—we will venture, that all the time his star lit eyes were piercing their very vitals he was thinking that at last he had a scheme whereby he could furnish Alex. Howett and his devoted comrades with nice new suits of clothes, free of charge,—nice, nifty, sporty suits with stripes on them.

Every Pharisee, and all the devotees of Dives, and the worshippers of the Golden Calf are patting Hennery Jay on the back;—and is it any wonder as he capers over the "country brass-banding this freak court of "his fiddlers three," that he feels as swollen and important, as a five cent balloon at a country fair?

The capital controlled and degenerate press, whose every sense of decency and truthfulness has long been dead, acclaims this Kansas freak as something of almost divine origin. We cannot quote from all, therefore shall present as a fair sample the comment of the St. Paul Press, which discussing this court and labor differences generally, says:—"And there is no way to end it this side of eternity except with a club from without, THE INDUSTRIAL COURT IS JUST SUCH A CLUB." Here you see this diabolical scheme to destroy the rights and freedom of the working class unwittingly exposed in its true character. It is a club! It was not designed to be fair to labor—nor was any of these so called industrial laws ever designed to better conditions of labor. The ulterior aim of all of them is to curb and destroy labor organization. No one is decieved concerning the purpose of these laws but the very fools who design and make them.

The fiat has gone forth from the maloderous secret chambers of capitalism—that Labor Must Be Crushed No Matter at What Cost. In pursuit of this aim it has perpetrated folly after folly—and madness upon madness, to stem the tide that is soon to overwhelm it. This recalls the ancient adage, that is "Whom the Gods would destroy, they first make mad."

These exploiters of the human race, with narrow cowardly picayune souls, tremble as they see the writing on the wall—traced by the finger of Destiny in burning and imperishable letters,—"Labor Shall Conquer!"

WASHINGTON NEWS LETTER

— By PAUL HANNA. —

Staff Correspondent,
The Federated Press.

WASHINGTON.—Housewives that have no other way of knowing may learn from the federal reserve board's review of February that the cost of living climbed higher instead of falling during that month.

That arm of the government is very scientific and thorough, it is said. It extends credit to manufacturers and merchants in every corner of the land. It knows what they are doing. It receives reports from them every day on the demand for commodities and the run of prices.

And it reports that "notwhitstanding the decrease in prices of some classes of goods" the general cost of living moved steadily upward during the month.

Regional directors for the federal reserve bank system unite in the widespread demand that wage earners produce more and consume less. So we read that "labor conditions throughout the country are fairly stable, but unfortunately there is a tendency in various districts to restrict production."

That means the working class still hankers after fewer hours of labor and more time for themselves or with their families. It all comes under the general head of "menace to our civilization."

From the Philadelphia region comes word that "there is a brisk demand for manufacturers of all kinds, but the danger of further price advances is well recognized." The demand is so brisk, in a word, that another little boost in prices won't do us any harm.

On this general theme of "recognition," the Atlanta regional directors have a word to say, thus: "The need of increased production is recognized." Just another hint to the loyal workman that he will not be popular until he consents to give more and take less.

The heading on the front page was "Reds advance on all fronts.

Bolsheviki successes said to be threatening to engulf vast areas." On the editorial page it was headed "Back to Normal" and it told how the success of Lenine and Trotsky" once again proved the theories of Communism impractical". It seems that Lenine and Trotsky, rather than be deprived of their power, "are bringing their government around to a conformity with workable ideals that will meet with the approval of democratic governments". It is funny enough to make a brass goose shed its pinfeathers.

Kemper Hall an exclusive church school for young women under the charge of the sisters of St. Mary recently ousted four girl students and two teachers. It was not for crap shooting altho it was rumored that rolling the bones was a popular pastime. "It was not for smoking cigarrettes" said a newspaper write-up, "altho it was admitted that the girls smoked, but as their mothers also smoked nothing could be said about it." "Stories circulated among the students hinted that the expulsions resulted from the discovery that they had been connected with the manufacture of alcoholic ilquor" said the newspaper, adding a line that the story was not confirmed by the officials. TROTZKY'S VIEW OF MILITARISM

"Immediate demobilization is obligatory with us as soon as hostilities cease. The workers and peasants will insist, once the revolution is no longer in peril, on returning to their factories and farms and making Russia a fit land to live in.

"Frontier guards will be maintained, of course. The framework of our organization must also be preserved in order that with the experience the men have received in the last eighteen months our proletarian fighting machine can be remodeled in two or three months if the need arise. There will be besides, some form of military training for the working class, that it may always be ready to defend itself against the bourgeoisie.

"Militarism, striking as it does at the very roots of communism, cannot possibly exist in soviet Russia, the only truly pacific country in the world,".

LONDON.—Returned soldiers would literally rather starve than dig graves for a living, it has been discovered. Scores of jobs have been offered the men at a 150 per cent increase in wages, but in spite of the great unemployment in this country, the veterans have refused them.

One London undertaker expressed his verdict of the situation as follows: "They've seen enough dead men to last them the rest of their lives. They've had enough."

BOLSHEVIKS WIN IN MOSCOW.

LONDON.—Of the 719 deputies chosen in the recent Moscow election 650 were communists, twenty four were sympathizers with communism, thirty-seven were nonpartisan and eight were mensheviki, according to a wireless dispatch from Moscow. Eighty deputies were women, seventy of whom were communists and ten nonpartisans.

I. W. W. WITNESSES NOT ALLOWED TO TESTIFY

— By John Nicholas Beffel. —

MONTESANO, WASH.—The enigmatic action of Judge John N. Wilson in shuting off all testimony showing why the I. W. W. in Centralia had reason to fear a raid, has shortened by several days the presentation of direct evidence by the defense in Centralia labor case.

Elmert Stuart Smith, recalled to the stand, was asked by George F. Vanderveer, attorney for the defense, what he thought would happen when the threatened raid on the I. W. W. hall was carried out.

"I believed that the boys would be taken from the hall, perhaps lynched, or at least tarred and feathered," he replied.

"Why did you believe that?" asked Vanderveer.

Here Special Prosecutor Cunningham and Abel objected loudly, saying, this was immaterial. The Court sustained the objection declaring that the defense must show a direct connection betewen Warren Grimm, slain parader, and the overt act in the Armistice Day tragedy, before it could have witnesses explain why the I. W. W. expected violence.

"That is not the law." replied Vanderveer. "The law says that to prove self-defense, we need only show substacial reasons for apprehension. If the defendants had reason to believe they were to be attacked by a crowd including Grimm, they had a right to prepare to defend themselves and their property.

Judge Wilson's ruling has been made in the face of a mass of testimony showing that Grimm, or a large man answering his description, was close to the I. W. W. hall — even at its very doorway—during the raid; and that this man was wounded in the abdomen, and held both hands upon his stomach. Grimm saw the only man thus wounded. This accumulative evidence has been held insufficient by the court.

When Dr. Frank Bickford was called as a witness by the defense, and reiterated the damaging statements against the Centralia mob given at the coroner's inquest, the prosecution failed to shake his testimony. Dr. Bickford, who is a dignified man about 50, swore that when the marching soldiers stopped before the I. W. W. hall, he offered to lead a raid upon the place if enough would follow; but that others pushed ahead of him. They forced the door, he declared; and then shots came from inside.

Made panicky by the onsloughts of the defense, the lumber corporation attorneys now are prosecuting this case against organized labor, have resorted to old stage tricks. They got the governor to send troops here without consulting the trial judge, though both the judge and the sheriff agreed there was no need for soldiers. This was in keeping with the prosecution's efforts to throw an atmosphere of violence around the defendants.

Then they had two defense witnesses arrested for alleged perjury. One of these, Guy Bray, 16, is a relative of Lieut. Frank Van Gilder, second in command in the parade. Bray declared that he saw Van Gilder and a large man in uniform within 5 or 10 feet from the I. W. W. hall during the raid. Van Gilder had previously told Bray that this large man was Grimm. The latter had been wounded in the abdomen, Bray said, and was holding both hands over his stomach.

Jay Cock, rancher, 50, was the other witness arrested. He and his brother testified that they saw the paraders attack the hall; and a large man answering Grimm's description was close to the hall at that time.

This trick of arresting witnesses for alleged perjury, was employed against Vanderveer in the Chicago I. W. W. case, but none of those witnesses were ever prosecuted and Vanderveer declares none will ever be persecuted hre. In each instance he recalled the witness to the stand and had him tell about his arrest, the defense counsel holding this up to the jury as a devise used to intimidate these and other witnesses.

Vanderveer has asked Judge Wilson for a warrant for a Mrs. Carpenter of Centralia, who approached a defense witness, 13 year old Helen Martini, and asked her if she "couldn't forget some of the testimony that she intended to give." Repeatedly emissaries for the Centralia commercial interests have smuggled their way into the defense witness room, and have learned what witness were to testify. Then this information would be transmitted to the prosecutors through the several attorneys who act as errand boys for them.

Bitter antagonism prevades the courtroom as the defense hammers at the foundation of the state's case. The newspaper men have become divided into two camps. Some of them try to be fair, but several are playing the story in favor of the prosecution, no matter which way the trial develop.

The defense has rested its case and it is expected that before this issue reaches its readers the case will have been placed in the hands of the jury.

REPRESENTS SOVIETS ONLY

WASHINGTON—in a further effort to prove that Ludwig Martens, soviet representative in the United States, has been a member of and controlled by the Russian Socialist federation in efforts to overthrow the American government, Atty. Wade H. Ellis, for the senate committe, cross-examined Martens severly about an alleged courier of the Russian Communist party, who was caught in Riga while en route from Moscow.

Martens denied having any knowledge of the courier incident except what he read in The New York Times several weeks ago.

In reply to the general accusation that he was subjet to the control of Russian revolutionists in America, Martens submitted a copy of a letter written Aug. 29 last to the central executive committee of the Russian Socialist federation by the commissar for foreign affairs at Moscow. The letter reads in part:

"Esteemed comrades: A letter from you has reached us, demanding establishment of your control over Comrade Martens. It presents a number of misconceptions of the most gross characters. First; you have a wrong conception of the position of Comrade Martens, who is the representative of the people's commissariat for foreign affairs, and not of the Communist party nor of the third international, and whose duties are determined accordingly.

"You have also an althogether perverted conception of the inter-relation between soviet authorities and the local organizations of the Communist party of Russia.

"Your attacks upon the official representative of the soviet government in America have a very detrimental and disintegrating effect. You are discrediting the soviet government in the person of its local representative and thereby you seriously damage its political interests."

Suit against The Washington Post for criminal libel has been filed by Ludwig Martens, representative of the Russian soviet government, who has been testifying before a senate committee of inquiry for the past two months.

Martens' suit is based on a news story and an editorial which appeared in a recent issue of The Post and which charged, among other things, that Martens had admitted before the senate committee that he was a member of the American Communist party, had directed secret organizations aiming at the overthrow of the American government, had "associated with and incited criminal anarchists to crime, had attended an unlawful and secret meeting of anarchists in Detroit and that he is a German revolutionist."

AKRON DEFENSE LEAGUE NOTES.

Attorney Jacob Margolis of Pittsburgh, Pa., gave a lecture under the auspices of the Workers Defense League at G. A. R. Hall, 50 South Howard Street Sunday afternoon February 22nd. Mr. Margolis spoke on AMERICAN LIBERTY and the masterful way in which he handled his subject was keenly appreciated by the audience that over taxed the capacity of the hall causing many people to be turned away. Mr. Margolis has a message every Liberty loving American and particularly every WORKINGMAN should hear, and his lecture has caused a popular demand for his return to Akron in the near future.

On Tuesday evening February 17th Comrade N. Yourkovitch was released on $10,000 bond by the Federal authorities through the efforts of the Workers Defense League. Comrade Yourkovitch was the last of the workers remaining in Jail here as the result of the raids on the Union of Russian Workers here November 7th last.

Dances will be given for the benefit of the League on Saturday evening's March 13th and 20th at Zeigler Hall.

George R. Kirkpatrick will speak in Akron under the auspices of the League in the near future.

Every workers' organization in this vicinity is entitled to representation by two delegates and all organizations not affiliated with the League should elect delegates immediately and notify the secretary of the League at the address below.

Chapt. XXII.

HIS WAY IN THE WORLD.

Anderson had no sooner reached his office than he called up the judge on the telephone. He never went back on his word with his daughter, altho he sometimes put his own interpretation upon it, when it came to execution. He had promised to see to it that that boy was set free, but he also saw to it or at least he thought he did, that all complications were forestalled, by fixing it so that it would be impossible for her to meet him. He knew human nature well enough to recognize that the impressions which this strange jail bird had made upon his child were deeper than a mere soul saving interest. He feared lest she should one's interests but his own. He made umstances, and the enthusiasm which she now manifested might develop into something more serious.

With these facts in mind he laid his plans and as was his custom prepared for swift and effective action. His judgment was generally good when dealing with the merely economic aspect of life. He never considered any ones interests but his own. He made up his mind and then drove ahead on rule or ruin basis, like most successful business men do.

This time however he was doomed to dissapointment. He was not dealing with chattles or real estate. He was dealing with basic human emotions and ideals; things of which Gus Anderson knew next to nothing. They were elements which for thirty years he had tried, and without success, to obliterate from his being. There was only one flower left in his garden, dwarfed and gnarled by the influence his hopelessly materialistic creed but yet struggling alive; it was his love for his daughter. If it had not been for the influence of Olive on his life he would perhaps have been entirely brutlized. It must not be understood that he victimized people the less for his daughter's sake; on the contrary he aimed to exploit them all the fiercer. A wolf is most ferocious when she has cubs. What it did for him was to soften his native roughness into a sort of boistrous gentleness. He lived for his child or as nearly for his child as his business would let him, and his child had lived for him until now.

In his love for her he had tried to raise her in such a way that she should not be aware of the claw and fang processes of modern civilization. With this in mind he had left her under the guardianship of her mother and the church. For it must be remembered that Anderson's antagonism was to the church and not against religion. It was not founded on any intellectual conviction as to the truth or falsehood of it's teaching. His was an attitude of indifference, if it had not been for the fact that he despised all sanctimonious pretense he might have been a christian. He robbed his victim within the law and openly boasted of it. He was not unlike the bucaneer who sat down in the cabin of his ship with his fellow pirates and lit a pan of sulphur saying that he was going to see which of them could make himself the most comfortable in hell. The story then relates how this old marander was inordinately pleased when he found that he could outstay all the others. He defied hell for his chosen profession's sake, and so did Gus. Anderson. He swore to defy the power which at heart he believed existed. He even encouraged his wife to give to the church in somewhat the same spirit that a Chinaman propitiates the devil. He was too honest to worship what he conceived to be the christian God and work the civilized business game.

Gus Anderson was honestly dishonest. He was irregligiously religious. He believed in God and the Devil, and dealt in farms and cattle. He thot the practice of beliefs cost him money, business made him money. So he decided that business was the easier way thru the world. He forgot the creed of his fathers and left the spiritual life of his daughter in the care of Mrs. Anderson whom he considered temperamentally well fitted for the work.

Having lived a man's life in a man's world he had developed to an exaggerated degree the archaic notion that a woman has a definite sphere in life out of which she must never rise, That her place is in the home, and in the church, and in the sewing circle. And if she should by any chance step out the male approved environment, she did it at the peril of losing all that was good and pure in the world. He abhorred the woman who mingled in politics. "It is a dirty business" he would say. "The polls are no place for a lady." That a place where a lady cannot be seen is no place for a gentleman did not occur to him. He had but a hazy notion of what a gentleman was, he had that variety of the species hopelessly confounded with sissies and preachers and other more or less efeminate types. "A woman ought to be a lady and a man, was one of the axioms of his philosophy.

It were these considerations of what he termed ideal woman-hood which compelled him in his efforts to make his child as othodoxly perfect as possible. But we cannot teach a fish to walk, neither can you make a basically aggressive and radical brain conservative. There is no perfectly safe place for high explosives, and Anderson was about to learn it. His daughter was an off type, and types cannot be trained true to form. Since she had first spoken of that boy in jail, he had entertained a fear that this was so And business man like he blamed the preacher for placing the girl in the way of an object which had detonated her radicalism. Business men frequently blame workers for the deficiency in the material they supply.

Recognizing that the spring of her power had been touched he decided to make an effort to stop the exploding process by removing what he conceived to be its cause. He did not know enough about high explosives to realize that once they have caught fire they are gone. You may rehabilitate some of the wreckage but you will never recover the charge. It is so with the radical mind types; you may keep them away from truth, and preserve them in a world of orthodoxy, but once let them get sight of it and away they go and nothing short of death will stop them. Anderson for once had decided to do the undoable.

He had decided to tell the judge to release the boy and to see to it that he got out of town as soon as possible. That seemed simple. It would have been had he been dealing with ordinary matters and mortals, but this was not the case. He was dealing with life problems, and was therefore pitting his poor business brain against a woman's sex intuition a thing of which he or any other man can know nothing, because the faculty is that of woman, for woman's purposes and is possessed by man only in rudimentary form.

No sooner had he left the house that morning, than his daughter followed him secretly to his office, instead of going to school. This was a thing she had never done before. She hardly knew why she did it now. It was not that she distructed her fathers' word. She knew that when he said that he would have that boy released that there was nothing that would stop him, and yet in spite of that assurance she felt that she had to be present, lest something might go wrong. And what was there that could go wrong? That boy's freedom was all that she wanted, she would have resented any insinuation that she even wanted to see him again. Still there was that in her mind which stirred deep laid emotional surrents which alternately thrilled and frightened her, she was in the grasp of the cosmic urge which swept her on with the resistless power of a Niagara. Olive the woman was dominant, and hopelessly routed Olive the bourgeois. Under the influence of the biologic urge heredity triumphed over environment. The ghost of Eric the Red, arose in the body of the choir girl. The woman wanted the man, the lady wanted justice, and when on the fields of life a woman meets a lady, in the same body, then it goes hard with the lady. That is perhaps the reason she went to her father's office, she told herself that it was, simply to hear how he would manage to set that boy free; but in reality it was to see to it that he should not be spirited away from her. Consciously she formed her thoughts according to her training, subconsciously she shaped her acts according to the requirements of Biology.

This phenomena of mind is seen unversaly in the working class thru out the world under the influence of radical education. They speak in the terms of radicalism but when confronted by the real problems of live they act true to their slave heredity. Olive lived in a slave environment but reacted activistically to her ancestral blood.

She sat in the outer office and over heard her father's conversation with the judge over the telephone. His part if it ran some-what like this:

"Hello—is this you Judge?"

"This is Gus—Gus Anderson. Can't you hear, or have you forgoten who I am?"

"Say I want you to turn that kid loose." at this the girl felt a thrill of joy. And then her father continued, "and see to it that he gets out of town P. D. Q." At this she felt her self rising as if to spring upon a deadly foe, but she checked herself. She hated her self for the emotion that so suddenly surged up with in her. For the moment she hated her father, for doing what she would, if asked, have approved. She was suprised, that she should side against her father in favor of a stranger.

"UNDERSIRABLE ALIENS"

The extinction of all humane privileges of the workers in the U. S. by the agencies of capitalism thru its Department of Justice and Palmer is continueing, but with a change of tactics which, while being less conscipicuously in the open, is nevertheless, as repressive and degrading to what are generally referred to as the national ideals as any measures have been.

The change in tactics constitutes a guerilla warfare and is directed largely against the alien workers—those workers who have been induced by the rose colored promises of personal and political liberty and high wages and better living conditions to come to this country and serve its economic masters.

Since the nationwide raids of January and the resultant censure of the Department of Justice by the liberal minded of the country who saw in this example of Czarism the final extinction of popular liberties if it continued, the department has changed tactics and what it did openly and brazenly in January against all workers, it is doing more secretly and less ostentasiously to the foreign born. The non-citizen foreigner does not vote and just now the political pot is boiling furiously and the highbinders are playing cannily for the "labor vote" of the American worker and citizen.

Not a week passes but numerous raids are recorded in the press. Great numbers of aliens are still being arrested in meetings, in homes or wherever they have the temerity to foregather. Many are held for deportation and all are catalogued, thumbmarked and recorded, questioned and terrorized. By such methods does Palmer attempt to qualify before capitalism for the seat in the White House for which he has been playing for many months, and because of such ambition and the fears of capitalists a reign of terror has been instituted and is continued by the Department of Justice.

As long as the foreign born were content to slave in abject servitude for the profits of American capitalism they were allowed to go and come unmolested, tho shunned, intrigued against, and pitilessly exploited. When they endeavored to organize against capitalism and for themselves and their families, they at once became the object of the most villanous attacks ever instigated by a ruthless and robber class drunk with power. The fact that the power of the State was on the side of the industrial capitalists was brought home to them in blow after blow delivered with a mailed fist upon their defenseless persons. They are now classed as "undesirable aliens".

It mattered not to capitalism and the henchmen who serve it as political officials of the nation, that the industries of the nation have been built up by the hands and brains of these foreigners. It mattered not that the shining rails from coast to coast had been laid by them; that the mines were useless unless the foreignborn went down into them with pick and shovel; that without their brawny arms the steel industry would never return a dollar on the investment. Nothing mattered except that the worker's rebellion against enslavement and exploitation by the master class must be put down. That is the reason and the only reason for continueing this guerilla warfare against the foreign born workers. But the methods of Palmer to subdue the tidal wane of revolution are proven false by how mony centuries of human history!

A "SUCCESS" STORY

We have just read in the daily press of the announced resignation of Harry Davis from the Mayorship of Cleveland. Not that Harry will resign right off—he will make sure of his candidacy for the Governorship before he takes the big leap into a chanceful political abyss.

We have read up on Harry—also from the daily press, a short sketch of his life—or some of it. We don't know how authentic this sketch is, but as History failed to record another, we will accept it as it runs.

It seems that when a boy, Harry earned his living with his hands in an honest and straightforward manner by working in a steel mill. This fact alone ought to earn him the Governorship at the hands of the steel workers of Youngstown, Lorain and Cleveland. It will be seen at a glimpse that this constitutes an affinity and oneness with Labor that must be recognized by Ohio wageslaves next November. Harry knows all their ills, he knows how hard it is for them to meet their bills. If he isn't a 'friend of Labor' from now until election we miss our guess.

From rustling steel slabs and iron junk, Harry graduated into the business of insurance. But it was not until he got in the political game in 1909 that his prowess as a statesman became recognized by those who had political plums to hand out to the deserving. We are not informed by this somewhat curtiled sketch of his life if a period spent as a page in the Ohio legislature served to whet Harry's appetite for political conquests or not. Very likely the evidence of pork barrel success at the Capitol served as in determining the course of the current of his young life.

However that may be, a term as city treasurer of Cleveland was the beginning of a series of games of hide-and-seek with about all the remunerative jobs on the city pay roll. Sometimes he won and sometimes not—but Harry was never discouraged—not as long as there was a better political job ahead than the one he had just won or lost. Tenacious is his middle name.

But still there was something lacking in Harry's life. Something was needed to "spot light" him and to cinch an uncertain political future—something that would forever and a day link him up with the House of Have. Fate and the times brought it about. Since this memorable occurrence the surety of his future has been as safe a gamble as a liberty bond.

A glorious day in May 1919, in fact it was the first day of that sweet month, served as the point upon which his "standing in" was pivoted. And the Socialists were the cause (he ought to thank his stars that there are socialists in these days.) They held a parade—there were 40.000 workers in line, led resplendently by a horseman in red and white. Red flags were carried—with the sanction of the police and the administration. But 'sanction' is not power and on the side of the police there was power—there were thugs and gunmen and rowdies and clubs and tanks and trucks—and behind them all was the majesty of the law. It was a massacre, but of course, with it, Harry had nothing to do—was he not enjoying a ball game in the park at the very moment his mounted police were riding down women and children on the sidewalks of the Publice Square? What better alibi would you ask? In fact, why ask? You are only a voter—.

So it was only natural that when the fall election drew near, the name of Harry Davis should outshine all teh rest on the political job board. Hadn't he bearded Bolshevism in its den and destroyed both Bolshevism and the den?

And then came the climax. It just escaped being an anti-climax. The Mayor's home was dynamited—just before the votes were cast. Some bombs were found in a barn—at least it was proved in court that they were found. The Mayor walked back to the city hall following the election with a smiling confidence in the future. All jinxes were out of sight if not entirely obliterated.

Prophesy often proves fatal to the prophet's reputation, but we wish to record a forecast here. Davis will be the next Governor of Ohio—Realizing the full import of this statement and its lack of flattery of the intelligence of Ohio workers, still we stand by it. And as soon as he is esconced in the Governor's chair he will father some such state law to curb Labor as the Kansas Court of Industrial Slavery. A cigar to you if it isn't so.

Beneath the sketch of Harry's life as it appears in the daily paper I find this:

Stockholm, March 10.—Gen. Yudenich, former commander of the Russian northwest army, arrived here today on board a torpedo boat. A dispatch Feb. 27 said the government of Letvia had permitted Gen. Yudenitch and some of his staff officers who had been interned to proceed to Paris by way of Libau. So, Yudenich did NOT kill Bolshevism!

Proletarian Science History

— By W. E. Reynolds.

An economic interpretation of history especially arranged for use as a text-book for study classes, or for home study.

Copyright 1920 By W. E. R.

FOREWORD.

Proletarian study classes are more and more coming to be recognized as an essential part of any class-conscious movement having for its aim and object the establishment of a better social system.

The study class movement has been handicapped in the past by various obstacles, not the least among them being the lack of a sufficient number of text books adapted to study class use.

This little volume is the result of several years of practical experience as an organizer and teacher of proletarian study classes, and is sent forth in the hope that other students will find in the subject matter of its pages, an aid to a better understading of the materialist conception of history.

The author wishes to acknowledge the valuable assistance given him in both the preparation and revision of the manuscript, by Professor John H. De Quer. Valuable assistance was also given by C. W. Garret, especially in the arrangement of some of the charts.

Aside from the class conscious element in society there are few who recognize the necessity for proltarian study classes. The rest are ignorant of the class nature of our educational system, and labor under the delusion that the public school, with its winked-at compulsory attendance laws, is all that is necessary.

"The whole history of mankind (since the dissolution of primitive tribal society holding land in common ownership) has been a history of class struggles, contests between exploiter and exploited, ruling and oppressed classes", says Frederick Engels in the preface to the Communist Manifesto of 1848.

Here is a fundamental truth which is completely ignored or concealed by the bourgeois-controlled schools and colleges of today.

If all history is the history of the struggle of one class to get and another class to keep supremacy, how can one be well educated if taught in a school which ignores the existence of classes and denies the class nature of society?

Securing an education in proletarian science will consist largely in substituting the dynamic for the static concept of life. It is evident that the dominant class in control of industry will strive to keep from the worker the fact of the calss nature of society, and to foster in him meekness, obedience and other mental attitudes that will tend to make the worker more productive and less restless.

A large portion of the things which in bourgeois society pass for scientific education, is but a mass of contradictions, half-truths and a muddle of misinformation.

In their daily labors for the dominant class the working class is taught many useful bits of information, but most of the education received by the worker, is given, not for the benefit of the working class but for the direct benefit of the employer. Instead of having an opportunity to acquire a knowledge of the science of society, of which he, the worker, is an integral part, he is purposely kept in ignorance, while his prejudces are aroused and his superstitions cultivated.

Armed with a knowledge of proletarian science; free from ignorance, prejudice and superstition, the working-class will have a tremendous advantage in their struggle for Industrial Freedom.

INTRODUCTION.

Words are used primarily to convey ideas or to conceal their absence.*) In order that the correct idea may be conveyed it is of scientific importance to use exactly the right word or words. All students of proletarian science should strive at all times to use the exact word needed to convey the idea sought to be expressed.

A definition is a concise statement of the meaning of a word. A definition to be concise must be all-inclusive and all-exclusive, including al lthat is necessary and excluding all that is non-essential.

Law governs the universe.

The law which governs the universe is not man-made law written upon the statute-books by parliamentarians, but natural law, inherent in the universe itself.

Nothing happens by chance. Everything that happens is CAUSED TO HAPPEN by some former cause or causes. These causes produce effects and these effects in turn become the causes of future effects. This is known as the law of causation.

Carefully examine the law of causation, for if it is true there is no room in the whole field of science for miracles or the so-called "freedom of the will."

There are two methods of explaining phenomena, the static and the dynamic. The static method views life and history as a collection of unrelated happenings. The dynamic method views life as a succession of processes; as links in the chain of universal causation.

The prevalence of static education accounts for the almost universal stupidity on matters pertaining to social progress.

The static-minded chase effects while the dynamic-minded seek to change effects by analysis of causes. It is the ability to analyze cause that gives the dynamic minded their pre-eminence in the struggle for supremacy.

People who are static minded can not see the forest for the trees; the city for the houses. A knowledge of science*) gives the dynamic-minded a sense of relationship which enables them to see not only the trees but the forest; not only the houses but the city.

An illustration of static-mindedness is to be found in the workings of certain governmental committees. One committee will be sent out to ascertain the number of women working in industry. The committee will eventually bring in a report that there are ten million women engaged in gainful occupations in the United States. That committee will then be dismissed. Another committee will be sent to find out the wages paid to women in industry. That committee will report that the average wage paid to women in industry, is less than a dollar a day, and that committee will be discharged.

Another committee will be appointed to find out the number of prostitutes. That committee will report and be dismissed and that will be the end of it!

The dynamic-minded would reason this way; ten million women in industry, wages less than a dollar a day, of course there must be prostitution caused by the low wages and the bad economic conditions.

According to the dynamic point of view we find the causes of human misery to be, ignorance, poverty, disease, etc., in short a lack of understanding of the natural and social forces and the activity which would logically flow from such a knowledge.

There are four grand divisions of science, Astronomy, Physics, Biology, and Sociology. The sum total of human knowledke being included in these four general sciences it is evident that the student of proletarian science can not know everything about all things.

One should know something of the science of cosmology, the knowledge of the universe and the natural laws which govern it.

One should have a working knowledge of the science of biology, the science of life.

Next in order of importance comes a branch of the science of biology, Anthropology, the science of man.

Last but not least is the science of sociology, a knowledge of the structure and function of society.

In these lessons the aim is to teach such portions of the above mentioned sciences as most directly concern the material interest of the modern proletariat.

34. The results of the probation (acceptance or rejection) shall be communicated to the Department of Labor Distribution.

35. Up to the expiration of the probation period, the wage earner shall be considered as unemployed, and shall retain his place on the eligible list of the Department of Labor Distribution.

36. A person who, after probation, has been rejected, may appeal against this decision to the union of which he is a member.

37. Should the trade union consider the appeal mentioned in the preceding section justified, it shall enter into negotiations with the establishment or person who has rejected the wage earner, with the request to accept the complaint.

38. In case of failure of negotiations mentioned in section 37, the matter shall be submitted to the local Department of Labor, whose decision shall be final and subject to no further appeal.

39. The Department of Labor may demand that the person or establishment who have without sufficient reason rejected a wage earner provide the latter with work. Furthermore, it may demand that the said person or establishment compensate the wage earner according to the tariff rates for the time lost between his rejection and his acceptance pursuant

So much for what the federal reserve board thinks about labor and the cost of living. There is a word to add about what Glenn E. Plumb, spokesman for the railroad brotherhoods, thinks about the federal reserve board.

It appears that the reserve banks had power during the war to advance cash to individuals and firms that had contracts with the government. Uncle Sam's promise to pay on the delivery of commodities oloked like pretty good collateral

So, every contractor formed the thrifty habit, it is said of running to a federal reserve bank and pawning his new government contract for as much spot cash as he could get for it. And the banks were liberal. The theory was that when the treasury paid for the anticipated goods the reserve banks would take the coin and cancel the private loan.

And that is what they did in many instances, there is no doubt.

But the war came to an end more or less suddenly. And right up to Nov. 11, 1918, when the armistice was signed, the war, navy and other departments went on letting contracts. A week later the same departments were cancelling their contracts.

And they cancelled a huge number of contracts on which firms and individuals had gone to the banks and borrowed money. They were bent on saving money for their own departments, and that is the way they did it.

The contractors had the cash, the federal reserve banks had the paper contracts, and the departments didn't want the goods deilvered That is still the way matters stand.

No less than $1,500,000,000 of public money has been issued by the federal reserve banks on government contracts that have been cancelled and will never be paid, according to those who have attempted a survey of the matter.

How the tangle can be straightched out nobody appears to know. Every day the treasury department is refusing to pay vouchers for these cancelled contracts upon which the federal banks have loaned money.

Much of the money has been spent by the persons who borrowed it on the voided contracts. The government got nothing for it. Neither did the taxpayer. Merely an incident of war.

And if the efderal reserve bank can make its books balance it will be all right.

She was not yet aware that life knows no strangers.

"See to it that he gets well passed minot, or hell, or somewhere, and tell him that this neighborhood will be damned unhealthy for him if he ever comes back."

"What?—Huh!—Then why did you jail him? All we want is the money."

"Didn't have much?—The people he worked for told me he had about a hundred—where did it go to. You aint pocketing it, are you?

"If you do, I'll get your goat, as sure as God made little apples."

"Spent it in your blind pig."

"Sent it home before you had a chance to arrest him You are a bright bunch. You are. What do you have officers for?

"Only fifteen dollars.—That is at least eighty gone to hell."

"O damn the others—It is right to "can" them, that will discourage the kind that send their money out of the country. „Patronize home industry. —That is right."

As Olive over heard these words she felt sick with anger and shame, she realized that her father had never really revealed him self to her as he really was. Only once had he given her a glimpe and that was on the Sunday evening she had returned from her visit to the jail. She percieved that he had forced her to live a lie. As his daughter she wanted to live as her father lived, and now she saw that he had given her no real part in his life and what was more, she wanted no part in it. In his ignorance of life's deeper things he had imagined that he could feed genius on deception and not reap the reward.

"Alright Judge," he concluded. "Make a good job of it and send the bill to me."

As he turned arround from the phone, Olive, who had arisen from her seat was standing in the door way. She was very pale and nervous but did not say a word.

SANDUSKY LITERARY PARROT SHIES BOOMERING AT THE TOILER.

We quote the following from a recent number of the Sandusky Star-Journal:

Ever read "THE TOILER"
The official organ,
(Organ is right—obsolete)
Of the Communist Labor Party
Of the State of Ohio?
"THE TOILER"
Is a rank imitation
Of "The Appeal To Reason"
In fact it is about the worst
Accumulation of bolsheviki rot
That we've ever glanced over.
If the powers at Washington
Would subscribe for "The Toiler"
And follow its suggestions
This country would be heaven
For "Free Love Artists"
SOAP BOX ORATORS,
ANTI FREE SPEECH supporters
And people who Believe in the old maxim
"To Hell With the Government."
I Thank You.

The fact that 'it pays to advertise' and likewise pays to be advertised, is borne home to us with increasing conviction. With the clipping above quoted a Sandusky comrade sends us eleven yearly subscriptions which clinches our faith in the maxim that has become an established rule of business.

In all probability, without this invitation shouted from the house tops of Sandusky, figuretively speaking, these eleven new readers of The Toiler would have remained in ignorance of the fact that The Toiler had something of real value to offer the workers.

Of course, we can hardly approve the "literary" quality of this crippled imitation of K. C. B. But where originality is non-existent it is perhaps permissible to resort to inharmonious parrot quackings even to the extent of revealing one's complete lack of knowledge of present day problems.

We desire to express our appreciation to the Star-Journal for its good work for The Toiler. We hope that the "prose poets" of its staff will continue to belabor us in the same way—its good for our business, it relieves the presure upon the brains of the Journal staff, allowing the gases and poison of ignorance to escape before they completely wreck the interior of their containers. Yes, hit us some more, it looks better in the Star-Journal than so much boiler plate, amuses our readers and creates more of them, so why should we object? On the contrary, we feel obliged to say: do it some more. Perhaps next time you may bring us twice eleven readers?

A LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

Recently at a dinner given in New York by the National Mfg. Ass. of which F. P. Fish is president. T. V. O'Connor and George L. Berry accepted the invitation and were present. They were discussing the recent strikes, and when it came to breaking contracts, which they claim the printers and the longshormen broke, Robert Ely, secretary of the club proposed three cheers for the labor union leaders who believe that a contract is a contract and that there is only one thing to do with it, to live up to it. The wildly enthusiastic applause of the twenty-two hundred diners was a glowing tribute to the splendid work of these two men, which culminated in a victory over the bolshevist foreigners and I. W. W. The next on the program was Berry, president of the printers union. He said, „At least seventy per cent, of the appeals coming to the Int. Union today, are from members who have been fined for breaking machinery in the recent strike. This union had 2 strikes since the war, these 2 strikes were illegal, and in both instances we joined with the employers in breaking them, we made every bolshevik go back to work, on our conditions" (applause) (cheers for Berry).

Then O'Connor, President of the longshormen union, started to tell how he broke the last strike and how he kicket out althe I. W. W. (?) and Bolsheviks (?) from his organization (there are 30 thousand longshormen members of the I. W. W. in N. Y. City alone).

BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE

With the publication in this issue of the introductory chapter of Proletarian Science, we want to again call every reader's attention to the necessity of completing the organization of study classes. To the many comrades who have started organization of classes, we say, take up this first chapter in class. And to those who have intended to start organizing a class, we say, hurry, if possible get the class together for this first chapter. And to those who have neglected to consider the organization of a class, we say, you will be sorry if you do not get at least a few comrades together each week and take up the chapters of this splendid and instructive work.

With each succeeding chapter we believe our readers will become more deeply interested in Proletarian Science. There is a world of good in it, prepare to get all the good by studying it in class. No better way can be imagined to spend a profitable evening than in group study of this work.

Read and Remember

We do not want to see another big railroad strike. But if by chance one should come, we should certainly keep our weather eye fixed upon the State of Kansas. We have hitherto called attention to the new law of that State, prohibiting strikes. Now we observe that Governor Allen says that "the Kansas laws will be enforced," and that in case of need he purposes to "find out whether there is a man, or a set of men, bigger than the laws of this State." So let someone start a strike in the Sunflower State and see what happens.

SIDE LIGHTS ON ATLANTA PENITENTIARY

A. L. Hitchcock.

This Institution maintained by the Department of Justice! (save the mark) created and run under the ancient idea, of "An eye for an eye" where such a thing as justice has no part, should be better known to the citizens of these United States.

An Institution where men are sent under the, to the public, idea that they will reform and come away honest; where truth is a stranger, where manhood is strangled, where the Judas is a priveleged person. There are so many things to be said about this cess pool of civilization, that a book will be required to record it. So I am merely going to hit a few of the high spots for this time. First the name, Department of Justice, is a misnomer; plenty of men are doing time in that prison who are only guilty of being poor, hundreds there had no chance to secure justice, being railroaded thru the courts for no other purpose than to help cut the records of a struggling and inefficient district attorney.

An Institution maintained at public expense, where three criminals are made for every one set up. Where public moneys are spent, not to protect the citizens from vicious men, but to furnish jobs for political henchmen and lame ducks, this is not so evident at the prison, as in the army of those who profit indirectly.

The brutalizing of men begins at the very entrance, and it extends thru-out the whole place. Every one knows that to de-humanize a man, makes a brute out of him, so the process of brutalizing the inmates also has the same effect on the offices.

Warden Zerbst poses as a philantrophist and uplifter, but the majority of the prisoners know him to be a bully, whose favorite way of starting an interview, is to take off his coat, lay his gun on the desk and offer to fight the defenseless man. If Cezar Lambreso could see the warden he would be more confirmed than ever in his theory of a criminal type.

Deputy Warden Girdeau is another poser, his being that of a christian gentlemen. A more brutal scoundrel would be hard to find. To taunt men who are in solitary on a bread and water diet with the fine breakfast he had this morning, is only one of his stunts. Another was to chain men up to the bars for days, until orders from Washington put a stop to it. When the good people of Atlanta raised a row about the brutal whipping of prisoners at City and County Prisons — the Warden then said, If you think there is whipping here now, you should have seen it when Charlie Girardeau was warden". With a bible in his pocket and a hymn on his lips he could consign a man to the "Hole" on bread and water without a sign of reason or a show of justice.

Holy Joe Sewell is another shining light of this so called place of reform. With his corps of stool pigeons (The lowest known form of animal life), and the aid of numerous guards, well armed with full grown clubs, he tells the men, herded in the chaple whether they wish to hear or not, about the loving kindness of Jesus.

This panderer after Judas has the supreme gall to talk about being upright and true, at the same time unable to look a man in the face.

These beauties cultivate a dual personality; a nice suave voice and manner towards the free men and news paper reporters; honey could not melt in their mouth.

But what a difference in both voice and manner when it is some poor unfortunate who has been framed up on and sent to prison looking for a square deal.

Great stress is laid on religion, every man being required to attend Divine Service as condected by such a charaster as the Chaplain is known to be by all the men.

Compulsory Church Attendance, is clearly a violation of the Constitution, especially in a Federal Institution, but the majesty of the law gets no respect from the religious fanatics like Giradeau and Sewell.

To cap the whole thing, men are required to send away the clothes they wear to the place. Then when their time is up, they are fitted out with an outfit that is the last word in poor clothes. The poor wretch who leaves prison without friends may very soon be forced to steal to raise funds, for if he fails to get a new suit, and that very soon he will find himself arrested for indesent exposure.

Ofter the innocent wives and children are made to suffer for the sins of the fathers. To the ordinary unthinking mind this is intended a deterrant from crime; but in reality is an incentive. For be it known that the instinct of self preservation is the dominant characteristic of all mankind, and the women and children are bound to live. This determination to live, quite often, leads to socalled crime.

What is the helpless woman going to do? What will the fatherless children do? The answer to these questions is unquestionably; we must live, if not by honorable means, then by what ever means comes to hand.

Too often this leads to the "easiest way" in the case of women and girls, and to petty stealing in the case of boys.

No matter what course is taken, the result is the same "CRIME". It is no easy matter for a man incarcerated in a penal institution to contemplate the results of his absence from home and it tends to embitter him; he then wants society to make amends for the terrible injustice done to his family.

For prison officials to quote the figures of the number of men who have reformed, is as misleading as all the rest of their propaganda of job keeping. Thousands are sent up who are not criminals and never would be. These are the reformed.

Now with three such beauties as these at the head of an Institution how in the name of commonsense can any decent citizen except men to reform?

In the first place the rules of the vintage of 1911 signed by Mr. McReynolds, are not enforced except when the officials wish to "ride" some one who has incurred their displeasure.

To be sure the rules could not be tolerated in any penal institution these days, as they are of an age when mental as well as physical torture was in vogue. But to be used on certain men at exceptional times is brutal in the extreme.

Then there is the politician's mess where favored ones have extra food served, at the expense of the rest of the inmates.

Some guards seem to be under the impression that it is incumbent on them to resort to reporting men to have them punished. One case of a man being reported and punished for having a murderous look in his eye. Assault and murder have been committed within the walls and no notice was taken until guard Ackerman beat a man on the head so badly that it was necessary to give him medical attention at the hospital.

All persons who know anything at all about psychology know that the creative instinct is very strong in the normal man and to attempt to stifle that instinct is the very worst thing that can be done to him. So if reform from wrong doing is the aim of penal institutions, then the encouraging of the better side of this creative instinct would be the logical thing to do.

How then would you, my reader, consider the action of deputy warden Giradeau, when he issued an order to the effect that any rings, trinkets or boxes must not be made under penalty of punishment. There are three times as many men as there is work so that time could be given every man to make anything that would exercise his creative instinct.

One of the worst features of this place is that of the warden and doctor, sitting on the parole board. Their written report of the conduct and physical condition of those applying for parole is all that is required of them. Numerous cases of men being denied parole because of the hostility of either the warden or doctor can be cited. The most glaring that came to my notice and will be more fully dealt with later was that of David Shaw.

Men are robbed of their Christmas gifts and can get no relief although the rules state that books and papers can be sent direct from the publishers, these are often denied. Books like "Mind Power" and selections from Shakespeare have been denied admittance. Later on I shall deal with these matters in greater detail. These statements may be denied by the warden and his sycophants but denying them does not blot them out and I can take oath as to their verasity.

NOT LEADING — JUST RIDING!

The latest event to bring Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, into the limelight is his pronounciamento against Union Labor forming a political party. Samuel is still handing out doses of political nauseau labeled "reward your friends, punish your enemies" with your ballot. Samuel graduated from an ancient school of social medicine. He quit learning the day he hung out his shingle as a practictioner. He hasn't even learned that science has olng ago discharged his old time theories of social therapenutics. Samuel is a hard learner. But then perhaps one does not need to learn in order to ride.

Not that we think Labor will make any headway with the present organized Labor Party. On the contrary it can only make headway backwards. A working class political party without a revolutionary programe is about the most useless (to Labor) vehicle Labor can tie too.

We here wish to view the Labor Party as an expression of discontent in the rank and file of the A. F. of L. We don't think Labor is going to allow Sammy's medicine to tickel its throat this fall nor any other time again. The present insurgency within the ranks of the A. F. of L. indicate that a new physician will be called in very soon. The fact that the patient refuses to take the prescription is a certain proof that he is growing rebellious. But that of course will not prevent him calling in another quack as great as Sammy. He will probably try a few others before he finally comes out from under the ether that has been administered to his nostrils for lo, these many years.

Chaos confronts the A. F. of L. Insurgency is rife within it. Every succeeding strike bears more and more the character of a revolt against the methods of conservative labor unionism. Harder and harder the workers strain upon the leashes of the old rules and the officials. With a growing rebelliousness, the workers are coming to view their present leaders as part and parcel of the huge machine which crushes their hopes and stands between them and the realization of their dreams.

The fires of Internationlism are cracking the shell of craft unionism. It is breaking under the strain. The development of the machine process has taken from labor its craft character. The processes of social production are constantly beating down the barriers that heretofore have enabled Labor to segregate itself into craft groups. Capitalistic production processes are welding all of Labor into one compact homogenuous mass with one idea—one hope and one common aim—Industrial Democracy, the control by the producers of the means of production. Those who stand in the way of the rapid achievement of these purposes are but blood sucking leeches, blind leaders and enemies of the workers.

Samuel has ceased to lead. He merely rides. Just how long the ridden will consent to carry this useless load remains to be seen, but it will not be for long.

Miner Burned in Explosion Gets Inhuman Treatment

(Special Correspondence.)

BELLAIRE, O.—On Feb. 26th, 1920, Andrew Nedoma, age 47, employed at the Webbmine of the Cambria Coal Co. was horribly burned, when his lamp fell into a box containing powder, resulted in an explosion. The only wearing apparel not burned from his body consisted of a belt and a pair of gum shoes. The state mining laws provide that the companies shall keep a sufficient supply of blankets and other first aid facilities. Yet not a single blanket could be found to wrap around this unfortunate worker. An overcoat was placed over his cooked flesh, and in this condition he was taken to the surface. One blanket was found on the outside of the mine, and this was smeared with the blood of the last victim crushed in the mine. No first aid was rendered, nothing was done to relieve his suffering, not even sufficient coverings to keep the biting frost from his burned flesh untill he reached the hospital where he was able to relate to his fellow workers the story of how he suffered from the cold.

He was in the hospital four days when death relieved his suffering. His chances of recovery from the moment of the explosion were very slight and even these were swept away through the negligence of the coal company in not living up to the state mining laws.

This is only one case out of thousands, where human life is sacrificed on the altar of profits. This Coal Co.'s mad rush for profits leave it no time to provide the necessary equipment with which to render some relief and comfort to the unfortunate victims who's labour they exploit.

The mine committee reported the case to the Local Union, the result was that on the day of the accident not a pound of coal was hoisted at the big mine which employes about six hundred men. These workers turned out in a body to pay their respects to their fellow worker. And as a protest against the inhuman treatment he received at the hands of the Coal Company. It was a splendid example of solidarity. The miners lined up at the City building in Bellaire, each one wearing an evergreen they marched to the morgue when the body was brought out every hat went off. From the morgue they marched to the grave. Mingled in the long procession were many nationalities, blended with a goodly number of Americans, a spirit of internationalism seemed to pervade the long line of march which was solemnised by two bands which followed the remains to its last resting place. As I marched my mind wandered into the future and I fancied I could see the workers of all industries united together to bury the corpse of the outworn system of Capitalism that has blasted the lives of million of the worlds usefull workers. While even some workers may believe such state of affairs but a dream, who can say that this doom will not in the near future become a reality.

Going! Going!

By Scott Nearing.

American universities and coleges are engaged in a campaign to raise more than $200.000.000. Northwestern is seeking $25.000.000.000; Pittsburgh is asking for $16.000.000; Harvard for $15.000.000; Princeton for $14.000.000, and Cornell for $10.000.000. Boston university, New York university, Oberlin college, Bryan Mawr college, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and some 60 other institutions of learning are busy with campaigns to raise endowment funds, funds for buildings, and above all, funds that will make possible an increase in salaries sufficient to offset the recent increases in the cost of living.

A common denominator appears in all of the campaigns that have made their apperance in the daily press—that is an appeal to keep the higher educational institutions of the country on a sane basis of law, order and 100 per cent Americanism.

One estimate placed the number of "Bolshevik" professors in American colleges and universities at 6.000. Using this as a text, an appeal, circulated among the graduates of certain western colleges centering about Chicago, called attention to the fact that the professors were turning radical, and had actually formed unions in a number of the colleges because their pay was lower, on the average, than that of first class mechanics. If this situation is to be met, the argument continued, if the American institutions of learning are to be kept true to their traditions and saved from the radicalism that was so noticeable a factor in the student life of Europe, the professors must be paid at least a living wage.

Thus, the ideas of the American teaching profession are to be subsidized, eased, assuaged and rectified with plenty of the yellow metal which has recently found so comfortable a lodgement among manufacturers of steel and producers of coal. If the teachers have money enough, argue the saviors of America's higher learning, they will cease to think; or, at any rate, cease to express their ideas, which amounts to the same thing in the long run.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, that there are 6.000 "reds" among the professors — 6.000 who hold that the present economic system is capable of decided improvement within the present generation. Further, for the sake of argument, suppose that the $200.000.000 for which the higher institutions are asking would change these reds into various shades from pink to pure white. Who will give this money?

The trades unions will not give it. Some of them have large reserve funds, but there is no record of any one of them having been approached by any of the colleges in question.

The organized farmers will not give it. The rank and file of their organizations is convinced that, in a democracy the funds for education should come out of the public treasury.

Who, then, will give the money? Those who have it, of course — the manufacturers, merchants, brokers, financiers, and some of the better paid lawyers and doctors. These persons have big funds of surplus at their disposal, and it is from them alone that substantial results can be obtained.

Northwestern university is after $25.000.000. It would require 2.500.000 contributions of $10 each to raise this amount, and the overhead cost of raising it would eat out the heart of the principal. Obviously, the vast sums that are required by the institutions of higher learning can be raised only in comparatively large amounts — contributions of thousands and tens of thousands of dollars.

At the time that the last published income figures were compiled, there were 432.662 persons in the United States who reported incomes of more than $5.000 per year. If each of these persons gave $462, the institutions of higher learning would have their $200.000.000. There were, at the same time, 19,103 persons with incomes of $50.000 per year (millionaries).

If each of these persons gave a little more than $10.000, the sums asked for would be raised. If every person who received more than $5,000 per year should contribute to this fund, less than ½ of 1 per cent of the population of the United States would be contributors; if every person who received more than $10.000 per year contributed to the fund, less than two-tenths of 1 per cent of the population of the United States would be on the list. Even if every person who reported on income of more than $3.000 a year ($60 per week) should contribute, only

It is alleged that vast quantities of British opium is being smuggled into the United States to supply the demand for stimulants created by prohibition.

Miss Ellen M. LaMotte, a sincere and forceful writer with an uncanny knack at getting at the truth of things and citing facts that disturb the poise and peace of mind of the bourgeois is out with a new book "THE OPIUM MONOPOLY," (McMillan).

Miss La Motte quotes from the Statesman's Year Book and from various British documents, which reveal the information that the British traffic in opium in the far east is a government monopoly, carried out under a department of opium administration, and bringing a handsome revenue to colonial governments at the expense of the hideously wrecked lives of thousands of orientals.

The trade is not direct from Englishman to addict. To quote Miss La Motte: "The men who buy this opium at these monthly auctions (of the British government) and afterwards dispose of it are a curious crowd of Parsees, Mohammedans, Hindus, and Asiatic Jews. Few British names appear in the opium trade today. British dignity prefers not to stoop beneath the taking in of profits; it leaves the details of dirty business to dirty hands."

Miss La Motte will be remembered as the author of "The Backwash of War" which contained the most remarkable picture of war horrors ever penned. This book was suppressed "thru fear of the effect it would have upon civilian morale." In other words it was suppressed because it would never do for the people to learn the truth about war.

John Maynard Keynes, a fellow of King's College, Cambridge, the leading British authority on gold and representative of the British treasury at the peace conference in his book the "Economic Consequences of the Peace" advocates among other things, the reform of the currency founded upon INDIRECT REPUDIATION of internal national debts, cancellation of inter-Ally indebtendness dating within the period of the war, and a two billion loan!

He concludes that an anti-German uneconomic peace would mean that the Central powers would collapse first dragging down the rest of Europe; that a pro-German uneconomic peace would mean the collapse of the Allies first dragging down the rest of Europe; and a neutral uneconomic peace would mean that all Europe would collapse together. In his view the nature of the peace merely determines which shall go down first; in the end all will go down, so far as any treaty of peace is concerned.

When a Socialist or Communist says similar things its red raids and persecution from the department of Justice *(), but when the British Authority on gold says it, I wonder if it will soak in anywhere?

The book is published by Harcourt Brace and Howe N. Y. (By mail $2.64).

The bourgeoise have now figured it all out. It was not the loss of the twelve million ilves in the war that hurt. It was not the loss of the billions of dollars but it was the loss of THE HABIT OF WORK! That work habit IS an awful habit and their diagnosis may be true, but is it not possible that the shock of the horrors of war made the people THINK for themselves and try to answer the question, Are we working to live or living to work?

I do not mind working in order to live, but I would hate to think that I lived just to work, especially when I had to work under such an arrangement of society that I got the work and the capitalists got the reward.

You can judge the culture of people by the popular songs they sing. Our poular songs are a mixture of Moody and Sankey hymns, a stuttering stable boy who "when the moon rose over the cow shed was waiting for Katie at the k-k-itchen door" and a razzy jazzy medley of suggestive nonsense, generally on the borderland of the indecent, the smutty—and the obscene.

There is a shortage of study class teachers. When it comes to teaching proletarian science the prize unquestionably goes to Ludwig C. K. A. Congressmen. I do not contend that Martens has been able to accomplish much in the way of educating Congressmen, but over their shoulder he has succeeded in reaching a large portion of the newspaper readers of the nation.

How the Pendulum Swings

LONDON.—The southeastern blockade of Russia, instead of being a blockade against Russia, is now a blockade against the allies, declares the Paris correspondent of The Westminster Gazette.

"The Red armies have broken the narrow circle; they are masters of an immense country with prodigious natural resources," he writes. "The grain of the Ukraine, the cotton of Turkestan, the copper of the Ural mountains, the coal and iron of Donetz, are at their disposal, while they doubtless have great quantities of oil.

"The blockade was always a two-edged sword. The blunt edge" was previously turned toward us. Now the sharp edge is against us, and the Bolsheviki can laugh at the blunt edge."

CHICAGO.—The curtain has now gone up on the second scene of the north woods drama which began with the demand by the convention of the Lumber Workers' Industrial union at Superior for decent living and working conditions. In The Chicago Daily News there recently appeared the following advertisement:

"Men—For guard duty with military service; must be of good build and thoroughly able to obey orders; must be at least 5 feet 10 inches and not less than 180 pounds; this service for the north woods. All applicants must state age and experience, and the best of references, and be citizens of the United States.

"This service is to rid our country of a real menace and we need real men. Address H. B., Daily News."

BERLIN.—The Social-Democratic party of Germany has formally acknowledged that there can hereafter be no possibility of accord with the Independent Socialists. At a meeting of the executive committee hld in the Reichstag, the party somewhat tardily recognises the decision reached by the Independents at their Leipzig conference Dec. 16, that the aims of the two parties are in direct antagonism. President Ebert and several ministers attended the meeting.

STOCKHOLM.—A forceful protest against the white terror carried on by the Social-Democrats of Germany has been issued by the Socialist party of Sweden. The statement calls upon the workers fo western Europe "to create a current of world-opinion against this reactionary regime which is maintaining itself by force and stifling the voice of the working class by strangling its press.

NEW YORK.—The schools of New York city are being crammed with ignorant and unfit school teachers because the city administration will not pay wages high enough to attract well-equipped ones, Rose Schneidermann, labor organizer, reported to the Central Federated union recently. Miss Schneidermann declared that efficient teachers were resigning for want of a living wage, and that Mayor Hylan had lowered the standard of examinations in order to admit low-grade teachers.

LONDON—That Great Britain means to establish a trade monopoly with soviet Russia at the same time she is carrying on war against her by means of her fleet and the Polish armies is the conviction of the Scandinavian countries, declares George Lansbury, editor of The London Daily Herald, who has just been to Scandinavia.

"All the Danish and Scandinavian people welcomed the raising of the discovered that it is still impossible blockade, but since then they have to do business with Russia, and that the allies are using the British fleet and Polish armies to continue war against Russia." he said. "Consequently, the view is gaining ground that Great Britain alone among the powers will be permitted to trade with Russia, and that at the same time she will carry on war with that country. No one believes here that the British fleet has gone to protect people against the soviets, or that the Poles are defending Poland. It is well understood here that the soviets are on the defensive and that their one desire is peace with their neighbors."

PITTSBURGH,. PA.—Negro workers imported to break the steel strike are now being discharged in crowds, it was reported at a meeting of the committee to organize the iron and steel industry held here.

NEW YORK.—Italy is in a state of revolutionary expectation, N. Gisconelli, an associate of the famous anarchist leader, Malatesta, writes to a friend in New York.

"The situation in Italy is most peculiar," he said. "Every day it seems as if the revolution would break out, and then everything bursts like a soap bubble. Agitation, strikes and riots follow one another continually and produce a strange state of mind which helps to keep up abnormal social conditions and which would make any cataclysm that might accur seem natural.

"In short, we are in a period of revolutionary expectation, with the accompanying vague, general fear.

"My opinion is that this state of affairs will not end very soon. but will drag itself out, because among the leaders of the different revolutionary parties and organizations, there are not men of sufficient audacity and ability, to meet the present historical crisis. There is more revolutionary spirit among the masses than among the leaders."

PARIS.—Newspaper workers have adopted a resolution calling for the establishment of a Sunday holiday over the whole country. The plan if adopted by the government, will mean that morning papers will come out Sunday but not Monday, and that evening papers will not appear on Sunday.

VANCOUVER. B. C.—The lumber interests of British Columbia are starting their heavy war tanks rolling against the lines of the Lumber Workers' Industrial union, section of the Canadian One Big Union.

A deftly worded notice has been posted in every logging camp in the dominion, announcing that hereafter the lumber industry will be run on the open-shop principle, but that no discrimination will be made against lawful organizations, or against individual workers.

Members of the L. W. I. U. here declare that this is nothing more nor less than a declaration of war, since the notice is so worded that their union may very well be declared unlawful, in spite of statements to the contrary made by Gideon Roberts, minister of labor.

NEW YORK.—An Italian labor paper is to be established here—the first free working class organ to represent the 4,000,000 Italians in this country. The paper will be called Avanti! (Forward) after the famous Socialist paper in Italy which now has editions in Milan, Rome and Turin. The enterprise is being backed by organized labor in New York, especially by those in the textile industry, of which 75 per cent in the country are Italians.

PARIS.—Lloyd George is convinced that the peace treaty is a voodoo to its framers, according to a story in the Petit Parisien. Upon hearing that that the peace treaty is a hoodoo to reported to have exclaimed to a friend:

"Who would have foreseen this? One would almost believe that the peace treaty is bringing misfortune to all who have touched it."

"That it so," replied his friend. "Orlando, Wilson, Clemenceau—of the four there remains only you—"

"And in six months," said Lloyd George, "it will be my turn."

The Black Sheep.

CHAPT. XXIII.

Another Phase of the Struggle.

Two weeks after his incarceration Jack was once more brought into the filth littered court room of the municipality of Anamoose. Here the jailor handed him his suit case and a railroad ticket and laconically told him to get the next train out of town. He was not a little surprised when the boy informed him that that would be alright if his two companions accompanied him; and that unless they did he would not go until his sentence had expired. The jailor not accustomed to hearing such talk from what he considered a mere hobo attempted to employ the time honored methods of petty officialdom. Said he: "The judge gave me orders to turn you loose and to see to it that you got out of town, that is all there is to it. Now you git."

"And if I don't get, then what?"

"Then By God, I'll lock you up again."

"Well that's what I want. So that isn't so bad."

"No, we'll put you on the train and see that you git out of town. It's the judge's orders."

"Well, I'll tell you partner, the judge can put me on the train and send me out of town and I can get on the train and come back again. Merely throwing a cat out of the window does not stop her from going under the bed, and what is more I might as well tell you right now that I am going to stay in this town in jail or out until my partners are released and neither you nor your judge nor any one below the supreme court of the United States is going to exile me. I will stay here if I have to go to Harvey and get a district Court order restraining justice Duffy from letting me out of jail. Either we all come out or I go back in." So saying he flung his suitcase in the corner and sat down upon a bench and grinned at the jailor.

Low Brow did not know how to take this so he walked out of the court room and into the livery barn office to inform hizzoner of the boy's decision. The story amused the fat Irishman and after taking a copious draft of the forbidden juice, which he kept in large quantities under the oats in his feed bin. He then followed the jailor into the court room.

He smiled good humoredly on the prisoner; it was the first time he had seen him since ordering him to jail. After once more listening to Low Brow's story which this time was far more accurate than what it was at the trial he asked the boy if that were really his attitude. Jack admitted that it was. The judge then told him that he was a bigger fool than he had considered him to be. "These bums would not do that for you kid. They would let you rot and beat it the first chance they got. One of the reasons I have for letting you go is that I came to the conclusion is that you were not really bad but simply in bad company. Now take my advice and get out of town; it is the best thing you can do. Has Low Brow given you a ticket?"

Here the jailor told the judge that the ticket had been offered to the boy but that he had refused it.

The judge using his wit where he lacked wisdom resorted to diplomacy. "Any way", said he, "go up town and look around. Get yourself a bath and a hair cut. in the meantime I will see the city attorney and find out what I can do about your friends. I know that what you say is true, all that I can do is lock you up again, and I don't want to do that. But I'll be hanged if I'll turn those other bums loose until they have served their time."

"And I refuse to be turned loose," persisted the boy. "I'll go back into that jail and stay there. I am as guilty as they and they are as innocent as I. I'm not going out of this can until we go together."

"Well any way go up town and get fixed up and then come back and we'll lock you up", said the judge, handing the boy his suit case. "Take this along, you may want to change clothes or something. Come back in a couple of hours and we'll put you in."

„That's a bargain," said the boy as he took the suitcase and walked out of the door.

Jack had no sooner left the court room than the judge turned the key in the door, as he said to his officer. "Now he is out, and he'll have to go some to get back in.!"

"Yes," agreed the other. "you have him out of jail but how are you going to get him out of town?"

"Don't bother your head about that. He has only two or three dollars in his pocket; he'll be hunting another climate in a day or so. I can't understand why Gus is so damned anxious to get him out of town. In fact I don't know why he is interested in the case. I wouldn't have turned him loose but we can't go against Gus. He'd simply raise the devil I could turn the other two out but that would raise a stink. Every body would want to know why we did it. Once get a bunch of hens to cackling and you don't know where it'll end. I wish Gus hadn't butted in." So saying he went over to the livery barn and called up the city attorney. The two went over the entire case. Small head was of the opinion that "The young snot should be locked up again, but when Duffy informed him that Anderson wanted him freed he immediately read an entirely different meaning into the law."

On the point of running him out of town however the lawyer agreed that it could not be done without running serious risks if the boy had any backing. He was fully aware that there were powers in the United States greater than those of the chief taxpayer of Anamoose.

After this conversation Duffy hitched up a team and took a trip out of town so that when Jack came back to re-enter the jail, neither judge nor jailor could be found. And in view of the fact that it was the second of December in the state of North Dakota he was literally left in the cold.

While up town he had taken Judge Duffy's advice. He had spent the money he had in his pocket for a hair cut and shave, had eaten a meal at the restaurant, bought himself a suit of underwear and found to his joy that his fall's wages was still between the lining and the cover of his suitcase. This money however he determined not to use unless he absolutely had to do it, which now seemed eminent. He had only twelve cents left.

Not knowing what else to do he wandered about the town and finally decided to call on the preacher. This was an act of atavism, for generations his ancestors had been priest ridden. The preacher is a powerful factor in orthodox Calvinistic life. Those who have read "The Doctor of the Old School" and "Under the Bonnie Brier Bush" by Ian McClaren will understand some of the spiritual workings of a powerful church organization on unlettered minds. Also how even the educated will retain the mental characteristics through out all the days of their life. As Kerwood says in his stories of the Northland in describing the characteristics of the wolf Swift Lighting, "was the Ghost of Skagan the great Dane which ran in the wolf's veins and drew him irrestistably to the light in the white man's cabin. So it might have been said of Jack, the radical and the thinker that it was the Ghost of Calvin, of Knox and Cotton Mather down to the blood of his own father and mother which drew him toward the church. Mentally he knew that the church symbolized the cross and was therefore alien to the Christ; but it was this heredity which compelled him to go to the preachers house. His early training in this played but an insignificant part.

It would be difficult just to describe his emotion. A man coming from a poor region and settling in a fat pasture often feels a longing to go back to his native heath. Many foreigners who are successful in accumulating a little wealth in the land of their sojourn return to their peasant life in their home land. So the boy after feeling for several months in rich mental pasture now felt a strange urge to visit a preacher and to hear some of the old familiar jargon. It was a phase of the homing instinct that asserted itself. It was a mental throw back.

When he arrived at the parson's house he felt a wonderful mingling of emotions. It was a conglomerate of heridatery reverence and mental aversion. He was firmly convinced that what this man and his institution stood for was nothing but deception and fraud, and yet, there was a certain mysticism that threw a kind of halo around the man of the cloth. As the boy phrased it in later years, "I felt like kneeling at his feet and punching him in the jaw," all at the same time.

The preacher received him in his study and looked righteously horrified when the boy told him that he had just been released from jail and that he could not get in again. That the judge had gone back on his promise to return him to his cell. He told the preacher all that had happened, also why it had happened and asked him to find him shelter for the night, or to find the proper officials to return him to his mates.

It is needless to say that the parson could not understand his mental attitude. He proceeded to lecture the boy on his unbelief. He urged him to go home. To get out of town any where so that he would be out of the way. But help, no he could not do it. He could not afford to associate with jail birds. He had to consider his standing in the community. His was a spiritual work apart from the world. He was sorry for the boy but could do nothing.

Jack didn't argue points with him very much. He was only impressed with the truth of his friend's philosophy. Collins had made the remark once that there was more christianity at the water front than on knob hill that there was more human charity behind the red lights of shame than behind the colored lights of the church: that there was more brotherhood in the jungles than in the consistory. This fact was now impressed upon the boys mind, so he decided to try his luck in the other part of town. He simply was resolved to test out the theory of his friends.

Leaving the parson's house he slowly walked down the hill toward the main part of town. He passed a few people on their way home as it was now late in the day but no one seemed to notice him. When he reached Main street he met the first familiar face, it was Olive Anderson on her way home. She looked him square in the face and stopped. Jack could not find words with which to break the silence which did ont last but a few seconds, yet which appeared as an eternity to him. It was the girl who spoke first saying, "it was a hard job to get you out boy, but I did it. I simply did not give them any rest until they turned you loose."

Now Jack found his tongue, "I had almost said that it was very kind of you, but now that I am out how am I to get in again?"

"Why should you want to get in again?"

"For several reasons. First my friends are still in, and I don't want to leave them. I was as guilty as they and they are as innocent as I. In the second place, they took all my money and with only twelve cents in my pocket to face this bitter night out doors is no pleasant prospect. Frankly I'd rather be in jail. Still do not misunderstand me, I fully appreciate your efforts. You did a noble work. It is indeed such as yours our faith in the basic goodness of human kind is anchored."

"Where are yo ugoing to stay tonight?"

"I don't know, Box car may be."

"No you won't. You go and stay in the poolroom and wait. I'll go and see the Rev. Goodman."

"That's no use. I've just been there. He dare not do anything. He is afraid that my sin may stain his celestial garments, or tarnish the luster of his crown."

"I migth have known that. Any way go to the pool room and I'll go home and see Dad."

Bolshevism Triumphant!

Will Bolshevism triumph in Germany—soon? Events in Europe are moving so fast that it may be that before this question meets the eyes of the reader it may be answered in the affirmative by the irrefutable fact.

Nothing could with more emphasis show the thinness and weakness of the crust of the present social capitalistic and capitalistic-reformistic system, than the outburst in Germany. The Royalist attempt to overturn the government served as the match to touch off the suppressed and confined revolutionary ferment which had been subdued beneath the iron fist and military of the Noske guards. In the extremety of its peril at the hands of the Royalists, the Ebert regime was compelled to resort to the use of a proletarian method—the general strike. It was successful. Its power was felt at once, the Royalist revolution fell flat. But the workers, who immediately upon quitting the shops became a Red Army, saw their chance. They adhered to the strike, they enlarged the numbers of the Red Army, they took control of the most essential industrial centers in the name of Communism and the Dictatorship of the Proletariat. They paralyzed the Ebert government as they destroyed the Royalists. Demands for the immediate institution of Communism were made. Soviets were established, the workers gained an absolute dictatorship in very large areas. All this amid veritable civil war and the shedding of much blood.

At the present writing negotiations are reported to have been concluded which will etablish the German workers in a CONTROLLING voice in all legislation, includes immediate nationalization of industries and certain lands. To what extent Communism will be established now cannot be foretold. The gains of the Spartacans and Independent Socialists are very far reaching if all reports are true. Whether these gains will establish Communism in Germany on the same scale as the Bolsheviks have established it in Russia the near future will disclose.

Thus far events in Germany have closely paralelled the movements in Russia during the period of its revolution. There, the downfall of the Czar was followed by the Korniloff government and later by the Kerensky regime which were attempts to rebuild Russia along lines of reform. They failed and the Bolsheviks took control based upon the Dictatorship of the Proletariat. On this basis they succeeded not only in keeping Russia in the hands of the workers, but conquered the counter revolutionists and drove the allied invasion from her shores. Ebert may be compared to Kerensky. He has failed in all his promises to the German workers. Only Communism and absolute proletarian rule seem capable of erecting anything staple in Germany.

The world's attention has been shifted from Russia to Germany. Capitalism may well be allarmed at the latest revolution against its too long rule. Bolshevism victorious in Germany must mean an alliance with Russia. And an alliance to which other European nations may join is a near future possibility.

With no less intentness do the workers of all lands gaze upon the German uprising. We may well study the course of affairs there and learn a lesson. Which is that so far Socialism and Industrial Democracy have not been established anywhere by means of reform or the methods of capitalistic political democracy, but by the Dictatorship of the Proletariat. All attempts to establish it by other means have failed and have cost much red proletarian blood as well. The logic of events verify this weapon as that of all successful proletarian roveiutions.

ALL POWER TO THE WORKERS.

Guilty -- Not Guilty!

The trial of eleven members of the I. W. W. at Montesano, Wash., charged with the murder of members of the American Legion on Armistice Day has ended. The verdict of the jury was one of guilt lodged against seven of the eleven on trial. And thus has been written in the cronicles of the courts and the I. W. W. one more charge on the debit side of the I. W. W. ledger.

But another jury, a jury selected by the Seattle Trades Council also sat thruout the trial listening to the evidence. They also have rendered a verdict. "Not Guilty" was their prompt decision. And the verdict of the labor jury bids fair to be the one upon which the American workers will place most reliance.

The case has been appealed and another attempt will be made to free the fellow workers from the charge of murder. Workers should render all asistance possible to these cases. By doing so they fight the battles of their class. We do not expect that the I. W. W. nor the prisoners themselves will be down cast at the decision against them. Rather will they take up the battle cheerfully as has been their historic manner and fight thru with all their former grit to the conclusion whatever it may be.

We accept the verdict "not guilty" for our fellow workers at Montesano. May they see it become the legal verdict and thus justice be enthroned and they enabled to take up the work for Industrial Democracy again.

The Power of the Ballot

The conviction of Senator Truman H. Newberry at Grand Rapids for election conspiracy is another mighty evidence of the "power of the ballot" in the election of the "people's choice" to political office.

According to the sweet smelling intrigue revealed at the trial, nearly a quarter million dollars was spent by this ex-navy commander, ex-presidential Cabinet member and wealthy scion of one of our most "respectable" families to "purchase a seat in the Senate". We almost wonder why the voting kings of Michigan were not also indicted and tried for conspiring to assist in the illegal purchase. At that a good start was made by the prosecution, some 123 alleged participants being first indicted, dwindling to 85, 16 of whom were found guilty with the worthy senator and idol of Democracy.

American voters should feel elated not to say delighted, with the evidence of the power they wield as voters. If any one doubts that the people rule in this land of the free, all they have to do is to read the high lights of this trial and they will surely be convinced.

A crew of political high binders with the interests of democracy at heart may accomplish a great deal when once they set about it—if there is money enough to be had. A brother of the Senator, who dropped the neat little sum of $99,900 in the pot, together with other devotees of the goddess "Political Action" including the president of the Grand Rapids Chamber of Commerce were among the contributors to the purchase price.

According to the evidence, the voters of Michingan did not have to worry much about whom to put on the ticket as the recipiet of their favors. It was all arranged for them. With the greatest consideration, the hand picked candidate was foisted into the limelight as a 150 percent American. His platform was made up of patriotic planks utterly devoid of knot or blemishes. Each was nailed down with a spike guaranteed to be at least 101 per cent. "American"—whatever that means.

It was a simon pure election on stricity "American" issues. It won.

We are told in the press reports that the distinguished Senator from Michigan will not lose his seat in the Senate.

We didn't expect him to. Now if he had been a socialist and had SAID something or other "un-American" well, it would have been different!

CHART FOR CHAPTER ONE.

ALL THAT IS, IS THE RESULT OF EVOLUTIONARY PROCESSES

EVOLUTION	INORGANIC ORGANIC SOCIAL	FOUR LAWS OF EVOLUTION	HEREDITY FECUNDITY VARIATION ADAPTABILITY

The Law of Heredity makes possible the PERMANENCE of (adaptable) species.

The Law of Fecundity makes possible the PRESERVATION of (adaptable) species.

The Law of Variation makes possible the RISE of NEW species.

The Lack of adaptability accounts for the extinction of species.

Chapter 1.

EVOLUTION.

Science is classified knowledge, gleaned from an observation of the phenomena of nature and verified by experiment.

Proletarian Science is science interpreted from the viewpoint of the material interests of the proletarian.

Bourgeois science is the same science interpreted from the material interests of the property-owning class.

The term "proletarian" had its origin in Ancient Rome. A prole was of the lowest class of slaves—literally a slave whose sole function in life was to work and breed. In common usage, today, the term proletarian is applied to the entire working-class, individually and collectively.

The term "bourgeois", comes from the root word "burgher"—literally a dweller in a burgh or city. In common usage today the term, bourgeois is used to designate a member of the upper or property-owning class. Bourgeoisie is the collective form of the term.

A perfect concept of science can not be formed without at least a working knowledge of the processes of evolution as operative in animate and inanimate nature. Evolution is a process of development, from simplicity to complexity, from a low state of organization to an ever higher and more complex form.

The processes of evolution are continuous in the inorganic, organic and social world.

There are four factors that enter into the evolutionary process, to-wit:

The Law of Heredity.
The Law of Fecundity.
The Law of Variation.
The Law of Adaptability.

That tendency in organic nature, for like to produce like, (with occasional variations) is known as the Law of Heredity.

Cats, when mated, produce kittens, never cameles or colts, but always kittens. Corn, when planted, never produces cotton or cabbage, but always corn.

The Law of Heredity makes possible the PERMANANCE of species.

Than tendency in organic nature for the parent stock to produce an enormous off spring is known as the Law of Fecundity.

It is a matter of common knowledge that seeds will multiply when planted and that animals will multiply when mated. One kernel of corn will produce one or more ears of corn. One grain of wheat will produce several heads of wheat. The enormous fecundity of wheat has enabled it to reproduce itself throughout the ages, and in addition, feed the greater portion of mankind. One codfish will spawn a million eggs, out of which but six reach maturity. Infant mortality among certain primitive races runs as high as seventy—two percent.

The Law of Fecundity furnishes the food for the world, and thus makes possible the PRESERVATION of (the adaptable) species.

* The early Greeks were among the first to develop an evolution theory. (See Dr. Osborn's "From the Greeks to Darwin".) From the dawn of the Christian Era to the present time the church has ever been hostile to any doctrine of an evolutionary nature. For a history of the failure of theology and the triumph of evolution, read, chapter one, "From Creation to Evolution", in Andrew D. White's excellent work, "A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology"

That tendency in organic nature for certain individuals to vary from the parent stock, in certain detail of form and structure, is known as the Law of Variation.

It will be noticed in observing a bin of corn that ears of different shapes may be found. These differences may be due to either ATAVISM or SPORT.

If the difference is due to a reversion to a former type it is called atavism.

If the difference proves to be an entirely new form, not to be found in the ancestral stock, it is known as sport.

Variations are to be found in all nature. The accumulation of sportive variations give rise to new species.

The Law of Variation thus accounts for the RISE of new species.

That tendency in organic nature for individuals to adapt themselves to changes in their environment, is known as the Law of Adaptability.

The stratified rocks of the earth abound in fossil remains of species which perished because of their lack of adaptability.

The dinosaur and the pterodactyl perished because their organic structure rendered them biologically incapable of adapting themselves to changing climatic conditions.

The mastodon surives in the modern elephant, and the eohippos changed to the miohippos and again to the pleohippos and then to the modern horse.

The LACK of adaptability accounts for the EXTINCTION of species.

ALL THAT IS, IS THE RESULT OF EVOLUTIONARY PROCESSES.*

SPARKS.

How many "Slanders of the Toilers" has your Local distributed within last two weeks? At the rate they are going you will have to hustle to get your share. They are going out by the hundreds-yes, hundreds. Very few orders ahve come in for small quantities. All of which seems to indicate that some live wires are anxious to see the propaganda go out far and wide.

We are sure that the distributors of this pamphlet will be so gratified with results that they will order even larger quantities of the Code of Labor Laws of Soviet Russia, the second instaltment of which is published this week. Note the ad and the price.

Arley Staples of Christopher Ill. is on the job again. This time he shows results amounting to $10.00 worth of subs. That's being on the job we say.

A package of the "Slanders" goes to Jos. Bower of Creston, O. Also in in the same breath we wish to state that two subs. come from him. Oh the job yes!

If you have never read it, do so. You will never invest 50c to better advantage. We refer to the Bullitt Report of his Mission to Russia for the Allied Supreme Council at Paris. He told the allied diplomats the truth about Russia. But the truth was altogether too good for them to believe. Read it. We have it at 50c.

Comrade A. W. F. Steckel for Tiffin, remits for subs and $1.00 for defense. "We have been selling considerable literature", he says.

W. E. R. of Muskegon sends in $3 worth of subscriptions.

Acting upon the theory that every little boost means more light on the brain, many, many comrades send the Toiler to a friend when they renew their subscriptions. We don't know a better way to spread the red than that, unless it would be to send in two trial subs.

Getting a few subs. provokes one to get some more—that's the way comrade Morford of Dayton seems to look at the matter judging by the last two he sent us.

Comrade Markert of Mt. Healthy arrives again this week with another list amounting to $5. worth.

Comrade John C. Chase of Akron, spoke at Youngstown Open Forum March 7th. Our reporter says he delivered the goods in fine shape.

"The miners of Yorkville do not approve of the brutalities procticed against the radicals by the lackies of capitalism." Thus writes comrade J. J. Hoge of Bellaire. As proof of the loyalty of the miners to the cause of Labor, he remits $10.00 for defense.

Another booster has sprung up at Springfield, O. comrade Brooke Buckley. Two subs. he sends in and is out for more, he says. All of which proves that the live ones come back always.

Five yearlies came in this week from comrade M. L. Springer of Jeromesville, O. He also orders a package of "Slanders". We predict that there will be some more subs from that section soon.

Ten dollars for subscriptions and literature were remitted by comrade Frank Gise of Massilon this week. Comrades are learning to combine literature orders with subs. in a way that makes one rejoice at the amount of propaganda that is being scattered.

"The workers should read The Toiler. Keep up the good work", are encourageing words from comrade J. Braun of St. Louis. He enables us to do so by sending a subscription and promises more.

Thanks B. K. of Muskegon for the two subs.

Muskegon boosters are getting numerous. Here comes comrade C. Thorsen with two half yearlies.

A literature order and three subs. arrive from Toledo. Comrade Toth is the sender. Comrade Rospert is not the only hustler there it seems.

Well, how much do you like our cartoons?
Prove it.

45. In case of urgent public work the District Department of Labor may, in agreement with the respective professional unions and with the approval of the People's Commissariat of Labor, order the transfer of a whole group of wage earners from the organization where they are employed to another situated in the same or in a different locality, provided a sufficient number of volunteers for such work cannot be found.

51. Discharge by request of the wage earner from enterprise, establishment or institution must be preseded by an examination of the reasons for the resignation by the respective organ of workmen's self-government (works and other committees).

Note. This rule does not apply to the resignation of a wage earner employed by an individual, if the work is of character mentioned in subdivisions ''b'' and ''c'' of Section 6.

52. If the organ of workers' self-government (work or other committee) after investigating the reasons for the resignation finds the resignation unjustified the wage earner must remain at work, but may appeal from the decision of the committee to the respective professional union.

59. In determining the standard of remuneration for each group and category attention shall be given to the kind of labor, the danger of the conditions, under which the work is performed, the complexity and accuracy of the work, the degree of independence and responsibility as well as the standard of education and experience required for the performance of the work.

72. Payments shall be made in money or in kind (lodgings, food supplies, etc.).

73. To make payments in kind special permission must be obtained from the Local Department of Labor which shall determine the rates jointly with the respective trade unions.

Note. The rates thus determined must be based on the standard prices fixed by the respective institutions of the Soviet authority (valuation commissions of the Commissariat of Victuals, Land and Housing Department, Price Committee, etc.)

74. Payments must take place during working hours.

75. Payments must be made at the place of work.

7. A wage earner shall be paid his wage during leave of absence (Sections 106-107).

78 During illness of a wage earner the remuneration due him shall be paid as a subsidy from the hospital funds.

Note. The manner of payment of the subsidy is fixed by rules appended hereto.

79. Unemployed shall receive a subsidy out of the funds for unemployed.

Note. Rules concerning unemployed and the payment of subsidies to them are appended hereto.

84. The duration of a normal working day must in no case exceed eight hours for day work and seven hours for night work.

85. The duration of a normal day must not exceed six hours: (a) for persons under 18 years of age, and (b) in especially hard or health-endangering branches of industry (note Section 14 of the present Code).

86. During the normal working day time must be allowed for meals and for rest.

87. During recess machines, beltings and lathes must be stopped, unless this be impossible owing to technical conditions or in cases where these machines, beltings, etc., serve for ventilation, drainage, lighting, etc.

88. The time of recess fixed by Section 86 is not included in the working hours.

89. The recess must take place not later than four hours after the beginning, of the working day, and must continue not less than a half hour and not more than two hours.

92. Where there are several shifts, each shift shall work the normal working hours; the change of shifts must take place during the time fixed by the rules of the internal management without interfering with the normal course of work.

93. As a general rule, work in excess of the normal hours (overtime work) shall not be permitted.

94. Overtime work may be permitted in the following exceptional cases:

(c) When it is necessary to complete work which owing to unforseen or accidental delay due to technical condition of production, could not be completed during the normal working hours. If leaving the work uncompleted would cause damage to materials or machinery;

(d) On repairs or renewal of machine parts or construction work, wherever necessary to prevent stoppage of work by a considerable number of wage earners.

95. In case described in subdivision ''c'' of Section 94, overtime work is permissible only with the consent of the respective trade union.

GOING! GOING!

4 per cent of the population would be included, as there were only 994,425 persons who reported incomes of that amount.

The money for these college and university endowments will be raised from not more than 1 per cent of the American people, and probably from not more than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the American people. This tiny minority, which will be called upon to support the educational institutions in their hour of need, is the same minority that owns the copper, the iron, the forsets, the water power, the railroads, the banks and the other machinery of modern economic life. They are men who ''know the value of a dollar''; they are men who are in the habit of getting what they pay for, and in the present instance they are asked to pay high.

These same colleges will need more money in the future. They will be compelled to go to the same men and to give an account of their stewardship before they get additional contributions. In the mean time, these same men occupy three-quarters of the positions on the boards of trustees.

American institutions of higher learning—Going! Going!!

The ''Triple Alliance'', composed of there live wires of Huntington W. Va. is on the job each and every day. Their usual stunt is to keep a steady stream of subs on the way to the Toiler. As a side line they have branched out on a wide distribution of the ''Slanders''. After this we shall expect to see more subs. than ever.

HON. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, of Ohio

In The House of Representatives, in defense of free speech as guaranteed by the constitution.

JANUARY 10, 1920.

Mr. SHERWOOD Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House I have never been accused of cowardice either in war or in peace. I am opposed to this resolution. I do not think we have any right as a representative body to decide that a duly elected candidate in a fair and free election shall not represent a certain constituency. I am opposed to the resolution on another ground. I do not believe in repressive legislation Let me tell you how it operated in my own district. In 1918 we had three candidates for Congress, a Republican, a Democrat, and a Socialist. I happened to be the Democratic nominee. The Socialist candidate, Solon T. Klotz, polled 2,006 votes. After Eugene Debs was convicted and sent to the penitentiary, a year later, we had another election in that congressional district. Solon T. Klotz was a candidate for mayor. There were in that case three candidates on the ticket, and Klotz polled 15,242 votes. When you sent Eugene Debs to the penitentiary you made more socialists than all the soapbox agitators could make from Maine to California.

The best list that has come from Cincinnati for some time is that of comrade John Hicks. It comprises a list of 30 names and calls for $16.00 worth of subs. We have it from good authority that comrade Hicks can beat any three other Cincinnati hustlers securing Toiler subs. We believe it. Thanks comrade Hicks.

Another list of subs from comrade Staples of Christopher consists of 5 yearlies. He wasn't working that way so he made a job for himself. Result as just stated. Do you know a better way to spend a day?

Just a Moment There —

Just recently you gave the high cost of living and conditions in general a sound drubbling WITH YOUR TONGUE--and you finished your oration by saying that the workers were a lot of Dubs for standing for it—that was what you said wasn't it?

So we just want to ask if you will put a little of that tongue-energy into action, action that will do more than start a breeze: action that will have the effect of waking up the workers to a realization of their POWER and HOW TO USE IT for THEMSELVES? We invite you to turn wasted tongue energy into fruitful work—distribute

Address THE TOLIER

No successful interference with Progress is possible. It's force is irrisistable. When the time came for it to advance in Europe, emperiors, backed up by the greatest military machines which the world ever devised, were standing across its pathway. Those various artificial obstructions were swept aside as if they had been so many straws—and Progress moved.

In the U. S. of America, the stupid donkey of Capitalism has squared itself across the right o' way of this same irresistable force—the passenger train of human advancement. The whistle is blowing and every revolution of the great drive wheel brings the engine nearer. Are you one of the guys who are expecting to see the donkey kick the train off the track?

One way to ''get 'em'' is to let them read'', says comrade Mc Farland of Hamilton, O. He sends in four boosts.

Out in South Bend Ind. is a Toiler booster. Three subs from him this week, comrade Blodgett.

A literature order amounting to $4.50 and 50c for the defense of our comrades comes from comrade Miller of Ironton, O. Literature readers have been heavier this past two weeks than for many weeks. Which all means that the workers are doing more reading than ever before.

Another Toledo booster remits for five yearlies, comrade Bretz. They are growing everywhere, are the Toiler Boosters.

''If a man die, shall he live again?''

"The Mediumship of Farmer Riley."

By SYDNEY FLOWER, LL. D.

This is a book of sixty large magazine pages, in which is related in detail the observations of the author during a two weeks' stay at the home of the medium, James Wesley Riley, better known as ''Farmer Riley,'' near Marcellus, Mich. If you have ever asked yourself the question, ''Does man live beyond the grave?'' a perusal of this book may perhaps assist you in the formulation of an intelligent answer. The book is as interesting as a romance. In his investigations Mr. Flower rigidly adheres to a program which absolutely precludes all possibility of physical agency in the production of the manifestations. The following synopsis will convey a general idea of the manifestations occuring during this remarkable investigation of psychic phenomena:

Strangling American Workers

— BY CHAS. BAKER —

Kidnapped from the state of Ohio, in much the same way that Moyer, Haywood and Pettibone were spirited out of Colorado during the war of the mine barons on the Western Federation of Miners, Marguerite Prevey, after spending over four weeks in jail, was released on bond from the Cook Co. jail in Chicago last week, in order to continue her legal fight against the "Law and Order" "physical forcists" headed by States' Attorney Maclay Hoyne.

Another dramatic chapter in the rapidly lenghtening rule of American Czarism was written in the efforts of the state of Illinois to get its clutches upon Marguerite Prevey of Akron, Ohio, a life long Socialist, indicted by Illinois grand jury on charges of "criminal syndicalism"; when on March 3rd Comrade Prevey was taken from the county jail at Columbus, Ohio, in defiance of the orders of Common Pleas Judge Kincaid and kidnapped to Chicago.

The Columbus papers announced complacently next morning that this lawless, anarchistic act had been performed "on the advice of Prosecuting Attorney Hugo N. Schlesinger."

The direct and arrogant contempt of court which was comitted is apparent upon review of what had occured in court that day.

STAY OF EXECUTION ORDERED.

On Wednesday, March 3rd, Judge E. B. Kincaid after investigating the additional evidence furnished by Illinois, seeking extradition of Mrs. Prevey, decided that altho there was "very slim" evidence of any propaganda of vioelnce, he would rule there was enough to authorize the requisition, in order to allow the attorneys for Mrs. Prevey to take the case on error to the Court of Appeals.

To enable them to perfect their error proceedings he granted a 48-hour "stay of execution."

The entry containing this ruling and its stay of execution was filed about 3 P. M. the same day. And about one hour later the petition in error bringing the matter on review before the Court of Appeals was filed.

Prosecuting Attorney Schlesinger refused to waive service of summons in the error proceeding, a common courtesy among lawyers, and a precipe was filed in the clerks office to have him served in the regular way. All this was done before the courts adjourned on March 34rd. Therefore, Mrs. Prevey was legally secure under the protection of the courts of Ohio, her home state, which were to decide wether it was right and lawfull to deport her to Illinois beyond their protection.

The next morning, March 4th, the Court of Appeals, then seating at Dayton, approved an entry granting stay of execution of the judgement until a final decision had been reached in the upper court, this entry was immdiately mailed to Columbus and filed. Had the supposed guardians of "law and order retained the least shred of respect for the orders of their own courts and laws of their own state, which they were sworn to uphold and defend, Marguerite Prevey would have remained safe from extradition, in the Columbus jail until her cause could be heard in Ohio.

REMOVED IN DEFIANCE OF COURTS.
COMRADE PREVEY'S OWN STATEMENT.

"I grant a stay of execution for forty eight hours on this requisition to allow attorneys for Mrs. Prevey to prepare their petition in error to The Court of Appeals, Mrs. Prevey will remain in the custody of the Sheriff, I will decide if she is subject to bond at one thirty this afternoon."

"This was the statement of Judge Kincaid on Wednesday, March 3rd. at 11:30 A. M. at Columbus, Ohio, I was taken back to the County jail and locked up.

"About two o'clock that afternoon, the Sheriff of Franklin Co., (Columbus) Police Matron from Chicago, and a local Detective, walked into the womens' dept. of the jail and informed me that I must leave for Illinois at once, I told the Sheriff that I would like to call my attorneys on the phone to notify them that I was being taken to Illinois, he said "you can do that when we got down stairs to the office." When I arived in the office, I was told that I could not use the phone, I protested, saying that it was certainly customary, and the right of a prisoner to be permitted to confere with their attorney, and that I would refuse to leave until I could do so, appealed to the jailor Mr. Hill, and to the Matron Mrs. Robb, but they said they had orders from the Sheriff and could do nothing, so I was forcibly taken by the Chicago Police Matron, and the Columbus City Detective, placed in a waiting auto and driven to the Station, there I was held incommunicado until after dark, when I was taken out, and placed in an old delapidated two passenger Ford car, where the three of us, crowded together started a chase over Columbus, up and down the back streets and alleys, the city Detective who was driving the car said he was looking for a gasoline station.

"The lighting system and horn of the car was out of commission, and when the driver slowed down the engine would only hit on three cylinders, after some time we finaly started out of Columbus, by way of the re-

This is not a Trust -- it is Mary's Little Lamb!

WHITEWASHED!

— By Bill Smith —

Was anybody in the United States surprised when the Supreme Court declared that the Billion Dollar Steel Corporation was not a Trust? If such a one exists, let him be produced as the most gigantic freak of modern times!

Let us ask in all candor,—how would any thing presided over by Judge E. H. Gary be other than holy and sanctified?

Were Elbert H. Gary the head of Ali Baba and his Fourty Thieves,—intsead of the directing brain of thousands of conscienceless profiteers—would any court find his gang of marauders guilty of misdoing? In all probability they would be declared a zealous band of Christian apostles and good Samaritans!

What is this Steel Corporation? It is a concentration of about all the great steel industries of America. Organized, do you ask, to cheapen the price of steel to the great consuming public? No, no, no,—not to benefit the public but to burden and bleed the consuming public by higher prices to further swell the fortunes of few.

This colossal deal was engineered by the elder Morgan, and it was of such a vast and mighty ventury, that he, prince of capitalistic jugglers, was nervous of its outcome—but it worked! After all the best paying plants of America had been drawn into this organization,—prices of all steel products commenced to soar upward,—and in but a few short years every cent of the purchase of this plants had been more than paid by the increased "profits." And at this day the American public has paid for all their holdings, over and over again. And to attempt to delude a credulous public as to their earnings they injected fully six hundred millions of watered stock into their fictitious capitalization!

Many people wonder why the Steel Corporation should pick a jurist and place him at the head of affairs,—a person hwo perhaps knew no more about steel, its manufacture Rand explottation than a wooden hobby horse. A little reflection will show you the reason of this. There is in the statute books a law,—more or less dead,—called the Sherman Anti-Trust law. This has never really frightened bigger gangs of industrial bandits,—but it has given them a little trouble —and much undesirable notoriety.

It will be recalled that through this law, the courts at times "gave a slap on the wrist," to the Northern Securites Co—the Standard Oil—the infamous Sugar Trust—the Tobacco Trust and so on;—but not to the U. S. Steel Corporation!—thanks to superior juideal talent. Now you may more readily perceive why it is advisable for these great corporations to have a member of the Brotherhood of Judges on its staff. They are continually running foul of the law—dodging it, breaking it and totally disregarding it. Hence these criminal organiations have need of the most cunning and subtle minds that money can purchase.

Of course every one, with the least modicum of common sense knows that the Steel Corporation is a trust — and a most vicious trust at that, irrespective of the decision of the Supreme Court—or any other court. No decision of any court can alter a fact, no matter how much it may wallop the white wash brush. The opinion handed down by Justice McKenna defending this corporation is of such thin and transparent sophistry that it would bring a blush even to the cheeks of a Jesuit neophyte, had he rwitten it;—and by the way McKenna received his rudimentary education in a Jesuit institution.

Any one knows that a trust is a combination to control production and prices—and to control more than 60 per cent of production makes it amenable to drastic punishment. You may laugh here. Judge Gary maintained that the control of the steel corporation fell below fifty per cent, and during the war to fourty. Yet this same corporation—was Judge Gary napping?—declared that in ten years of its existence it controlled 90 per cent. of Americas total steel export!

And who knows how many subsidiary concerns this trust controls, that ramifics in all directions in every branch of the steel and iron industry?

It is alleged that it did not "fix prices or compete unfairly." Who believes this? It is indeed a stupid person, no matter where he be, who does not know that his meat prices are controlled by the Chicago Packing Gang; his butter prices by the Elgin Board; his oil and gasoline by the little old Standard Oil, and all his steel and iron by the Steel Corporation, and so on. And this Corporation has no competitors except of a fictious character;—there are others in the same business, but when this corporation raises its prices, all others by some strange law of gravitation, raise with it. Judge McKenna said that this Corporation had not resorted to brutalities to stabilize conditions, but admitted that with "competitors" they had "trade meetings through the social form of dinners" etc. A distinguished person some years ago, said that all the dark and unholy schemes that had ever been hatched in Washington, by unprincipled and dishonorable politicians had been originated and perfected at these secret meetings—called dinner parties! And in all history—the careful student has noticed—that some of the blackest and most revolting conspiracies have been hatched at the banquet table! It is now used as a camouflage by financial crooks who conspire against the working classes of the country. Please note the "horny sons of toil" who attend these "dinner parties."

Another reason,—not given in the courts decision,—why the solidarity of this corporation should not be impaired,—is that it is the most powerful antagonist that now faces organized labor! If the minutes of these little "dinners" were written, no doubt you would find there, this matter fully discussed by the crafty scheming brains about that table—and you would probably find all the plans, all orderly arranged to encompass the destruction of all labor unions!

They have picked the cemetary—the grave is dug—but can they furnish the corpse? It is up to you, and nothing but absolute and perfect solidarity in all ranks of labor can prevent it! If nothing of a revivifying nature occurs —between Gary and Gompers—the

The British Labor Movement.

By Felix Morley.

ARTICLE I—THE SITUATION TODAY.

LONDON—Underneath its present orderly exterior, in a slow but sure, thorough-going British manner England is now being steadly transformed into a state completely controlled by productive labor. The upper class opposition is very strong, and the ignorant conservatism of large sections of the workers an obvious drawback. Yet month by month unmistakoble and permanent progress towards a new era is being achivied, and the goal now well in view is something sufficiently advanced to make the economic outlook of Gompers and Gary seem identical by contrast. Ruthless as is the present policy of British militarism in the subject countries of Ireland, India and Egypt, it is now just as important for American labor to appreciate the growing power of Socialism in England proper as it is to condemn the effects of a dying imperialism in her forcibly held dominions. With the exception of Russia, and perhaps Italy and Germany, England has more nearly autgrown capitalism than any other great nation. She is incomparably ahead of the United States in this respect.

Three things about the present labor movement in England impress themselves immediately upon the visitor from America. They may be summed up by saying that in spite of the greater pressure of the war more liberty, justice and common sense have been left alive in England than in the United States. There is first a far greater measure of freedom of speech and press on this side. For instance it is difficult to find either a labor mass meeting where the proceedings are not closed by singing the Red Flag and cheering the Russian soviet republic, or a reputable newspaper which characterizes such outbursts as seditious, un-English, anarchistic, and the like. As for police and secret service raids, suppression of radical newspapers, imprisonment and deportation of agitaters — such things may be common in Ireland and the United States but they are virtually unknown here. If an alleged labor paper is so extreme as to be rediculous nobody buys it. If an agitator prattles of impracticle tactics he is laughed at. This keeps everyone in good humor. There is no cossack terrorism, no bomb plots by anarchists or capitalists, no underground discontent, no imitation of czaristic Russia.

The result is no danger of revolution from the standpoint of the government, no wasted time for the workers in having to struggle for the most fundamental of rights, and real and rapid progress along lines of radical social evolution. There are many elements in this situation which cause grave anxiety to the traditional governing class, but all efforts to check the tide only result in an increase of the power and solidarity of organized labor. A point for America to realize is that the present state of affairs in Ireland and other subject countries will very soon be altered in accordance with the principle of self-determination, when labor gains control of the government. The British Labor party is working as hard in behalf of Ireland as is Sinn Fein.

A second striking difference to the United States is found in the English labor leaders. The majority of them are real leaders, men of vision and ideals, democratically chosen, graduates of factory and mine who make it their business to encourage rather than repress radical ideas among the rank and file. This results in a almost incredible difference in the atmosphere of the two movements optimism, harmony and progress along fundamental lines being the dominant characteristics here. It is the fact that the radicals are in command of English labor that makes the psychology of a Gompers something to the movement here. There is no blinking the fact that men like Bob Smillie, Bob Williams, Frank Hedges, and others who have a large share in the control of English balor policy would be in Moundsville or Atlanta if fate had made them citizens of the land of the free. Ramsay MacDonald told me that he doesn't consider Gene Debs more radical, yet the strength and sohesion of the British miners is such that their government dare not touch this labor general Several most prominent in the labor movement here would scarcely believe me when I remarked

The Caseys had a banquet in our town on St. Patrick's day. Of course they sang, "The Wearing of The Green". Here are two lines of that song.

"I've heard whisper of a country that lies far beyant the say,
Where rich and poor stand equal in the light of freedom's day."

The rich and the poor do not stand equal in this country. Neither do they stand equal in France, Germany, England, Iitaly or Japan. There is only one country today where the rich and poor stand equal, i. e., classes abolished and all with an equal liability to labor. Will some bright young member of the K. C. name that country "far beyant the say?"

A man told me the other day that "we've loaned so much money to Europe that now we've GOT to extend credit and loan more and more and more, "carry'em if necessary". It may be throwing good money after bad but we've got to do it. We don't dare let Europe collapse." He was just a wage-slave of a big corporation. That "we've" of his amused me. I have loaned no money to Europe and do not intend to do any carrying. Have you? Why should we "carry", the counts and no-accounts of Europe?

Let Europe "collapse". The people of Europe will not collapse. The land of Europe is not expected to collapse. All that COULD collapse would be the rotten monarchies and capitalist-controlled governments. The sooner European capitalism collapses, the better for the peace and happiness of the world. Out of the ruins will rise the Industrial Republic, marking another step towards the ultimate goal, the Federation of the World, The Brotherhood of Man.

The more wage-slaves think about their own worries and problems the more the politicians will worry and think about their problems for them. Never mind the politician' problems. His problem is how to fool you. You can fool him easily. Just look out for your own interest and the interest of your own class.

Your folks one time had a fool hen that would cackle for an hour over a china egg. We called her Minerva. Whenever I read of Palmer trying to get the presidential nomination on the strength of his red raids, I always think of Minerva.

When we tried to tell you that bonds meant bondage, they threw us in jail. Here is an adv. from a financial paper, entitled,

"PROFITS IN FRENCH BONDS.

At current prices and exchange rates the following profits are possible from investments in the three principle internal loans of the French Government.

250% on an investment of $50.50 in the 4s of 1917.

180% on an investment of $68.00 in the Victory 5s.

300% on an investment of $74.91 in the 5s of 1920.

Bonbright & Company of Detroit, New-York, Boston and Chicago."

A profit of 300% means that you double your investment three times. It also means that somebody will have to EARN but NOT GET that amount of money before you can get it as profit. Such is the profit system. Such is the proof that bonds mean bondage.

Henry Thoreau once wrote an essay entitled "The Duty of Civil Disobedience." It is for sale now 10c at all the Woolworth 5 & 10c stores, under the title of "Friendship and Other Essays." The department of Justice(?) ought to look into this matter. The DUTY of civil disobedience! Sounds interesting eh?

Why are citizens of a country called SUBJECTS of that country?

Why is any opinion held by a Bolshevist, always spoken of as "a half-baked theory"?

Will the world never realize that the idea of calling all new ideas "half-baked" has been over done!

It developed in the trial of Senator Newberry who was charged with spending millions of money to buy his seat in the U. S. Senate that the Newberry pork barrel and his campaign of 100% Americanism saved America. At least that was the claim of one of the Newberry lawyers.

The bankers saved America. The choolma'ams saved America. The American Protective League saved America. The Commercial Clubs saved America. The boys in khaki, both the volunteers and those who went by request, saved America. Now it was Newberry, and still they are worrying about America—it seems she is still in need of being saved. Poor America! No. America has never been in danger. The thing which has been in danger and is still in danger is the capitalist system, which is not an American but a world product.

They tell us that this "go-to-church-next-Sunday" movement, has for its object, more stars in the mansions of glory, but I have a suspicion that the pastors encourage the movement because it means more cash for the pastor's salary. I am not sure about the Lord loving a cheerful giver, but I am positive the pastor does.

DEFENSE

The abduction of comrade Marguerite Prevey by the authorities and her imprisonment in Chicago has resulted in a determined effort of comrades to defend her against further assault at the hands of the violators of law and citizenship.

No less is the interest in the cases of Lotta Burke and Chas Baker. No comrades in Ohio have found a more secure place in the affections of Ohio radicals and socialists than these three comrades.

Every dollar given for their defenses is a dollar for the defense of loyal and true comrades. We know that when the workers realize the extent of the injustices that are being attempted and have been accomplished against these comrades they will give generously in support of them.

Here are some defense constributions which have been sent in just recently.

THE WRONG SIDE IS CLIMBING.

The wrong side of our Cortoon Account is climbing up. When this happens there is only one way to remedy the matter and that is to put some silver weights on the other side of the scale. We suggest that when our readers observe the splendid character of our cartoons they jar loose from a quarter or so and place it on the light side of the scale and watch results.

The eye of SKYGAC was fastened upon the donations listed in the Cartoon Account. He noticed the disparity between the "coming in" and the "going out" figures. A frown darkened his usually humourous and more or less shepely features, yes, SKYGAC has features almost human. He turned back to first page of The Toiler—a smile as wide as a letter drop opened up his superb and intellectual countence. He turned again to the Cartoon Account, the frown came back, the letter-drop smile closed up with a snap. He reached for his trusty toy typewriter and clicked off the following—I have been keeping my eye upon that Cartoon Account and I wonder what makes so many readers come across LYKELL they do!

We would like to tone down the brupt and irascible sentence of Skygac but we have learned by experiance not to tamper with ANYTHING he writes. We therefore throw ourselves upon the mercy of our readers but we hope they comply with the adroitly worded REQUEST he makes—contribute to the CARTOON ACCOUNT.

servoir to Plain City, ariving there about 9:30 P. M. I had no idea where I was going or what was to be done with me, on enquiry from the Police Woman who had charge of me, she said she had been unable to get accommodations for Chicago out of Columbus, so we were going to catch a train at some other city, she lied to me every time I asked a question, so there was no use of further enquiry, so I settled myself and awaited developments, I did not know whether I was to be turned over to a mob, thrown into the river or executed.

"At Plain City the town Constable was awakened and came to look me over, a whispeerd conversation was held with him by captives on the side walk, guess he did not want me in his bailiwick, so we left, going to Jefferson City, where they did not seem to want me either. We then drove to London Ohio, County seat of Madison County, ariving thre a little after 11:30, the poor old Ford just reached the main street where it gave up entirely. A local police officer was called, he awakened the Sheriff, we walked to the county jail. As the Ford could not be moved, I was turned over to the Sheriff at midnight.

"When the Sheriff appeared on the scene, I opened up on my captors, telling the Sheriff I was being kidnapped by those two persons, that my life had been put in jepardy because of the condition of the car without lights etc., how we went over main line R. R. tracks in several places on high gear with our engine hitting on three cylinders, once we were almost caught by an interurban car, and that I would refuse to leave the custody of said Sheriff, unless I have some assurance that my life would not again be put in jepardy. I also told the Police Matron that she and her conspirator were both liars, that their word did not mean anything to me, and that I would ask the Sheriff to take me before a Judge in the morning so that I could at least ask for protection.

"The Police Matron tried to square herself with the Sheriff by saying that she was taking me to Illinois, but that no train or accomodations were possible for that day. I told the Sheriff two trains had left Columbus for Chicago since she had taken me in custody at two o'clock that afternoon, and that the stay of execution did not give her the legal right to take me, she lied again by telling the Sheriff that no stay of execution had been granted. I told her that it was just such acts as these they were perpetrating that night that was causing so much hell in the country. The Detective said he agreed with me, and had said so in Columbus, but he was working under instructions from the Prosecutor of Franklin Co.

"After they left, and before I was locked up by the Sheriff, I explained the situation to him, that Judge Kincaid had granted a stay of execution for fourty eight hours, at noon that day, the Sheriff said that, if that was the case, the Sheriff of Franklin County could not legaly give me up. I asked him to phone the Judge at Columbus, at my expence, before surrendering me to my kidnappers. I further asked that he take me before a Judge in that County and assertain wether this procedure was regular or not. I called his attention to the fact, that if my body legaly belonged to the state of Illinois, why drag me around in this way in the middle of the night? My attorneys could not, and would not try to prevent my being taken away, if I legaly belonged to the Illinois authorities. Therefore Sheriff, it is your duty as an officer of the law to see that the laws of Ohio are respected, but my pleadings were all in vain.

"In the morning, I refused to dress, the Police Matron put on my shoes and stockings, and called in the man to do the rest. Of course I refused to have him dress me, and told the Matron if she had no respect for the rules of common decency, that I did, and that the man must immediately leave my cell, that I would dress myself, but that I refused to leave the custody of the Sheirff, that her requisition did not give her the legal right to drag me around the state of Ohio, and this in an old broken down machine endangering my life, as well as depriving me of my right as a citizen. She replied "My requisition gives me the right to Shoot gou if you do not go wherever I wish." Well Honey, I said, Get Your Gun! and your handcuffs ready for you will need them, you are going to do one of three things, either take me back to Columbus where I legaly belon or to Chicago Co. jail, or you will be compelled to do some shooting.

"I was again taken forcibly by the Sheriff of Madison Co. and the Police Matron, put in the same Ford car, taken back to Plain City, where we boarded a train for Chicago. Upon my arival, I was locked in the Cook Co. jail, eighteen hours before the stay of execution granted by Judge Kincaid had expired. All this mind you, to have me prosecuted because I am charged with advocating methods of reforming the U S. government taht are claimed to be illegal."

Signed- Marguerite Prevey.

The deeply significant feature of the whole spectacular affair is the readiness of the alleged forces of "Law and Order" under Capitalism to break their own laws and destroy their own order whenever it suits their convenience, even while issuing proclamations and advertisements denouncing the "radicals and reds" for "preaching violence, and lawless methods." Marguerite Prevey has, regardless of the final outcome, won a tremendous victory. She, accused of advocating violence, apealed to the courts, against her accusers who posed as defenders of law and order. She declared her willingness to abide the decision of the Ohio courts. But no sooner did the Ohio laws interpose an obstacle to the vindictive attack of her accusers, than the supposed defenders of law plucked off their mask and openly and shamelessly revealed themselves for what the radicals have all along declared them to be—bandits, and buccaneers masquerading behind the law, only because it served better their predatory purpose and because the law was shaped to suit them.

Marguerite Prevey, after remaining in jail for over four weeks, testing the sincerity of those who proclaim themselves 100% Americans, and the upholders of "Law and Order" agreed to accept bond in order to prepare her case for a further test, for the end is not yet. If she goes to prison in Illinois, she goes with the proud consciousness that she was the means of stripping the cloak of hypocrisy from the traitors, who, under the pretence of Americanism, are seeking to stranglit America to death.

The Black Sheep.

Chapt. XXIV.

The Father's Confession.

Gus Anderson realized the fact that his daughter had overheard his telephone conversation with the judge. He felt that he had done more than all other untoward agencies in rending the veil of delusion with which he had tried to screen her form the world. He gladly would have lost one of his best farms if by so doing he could have blotted the memory of that conversation from her mind. But the fact was Olive had heard and what she once heard she did not forget. She was different from the average run of girls of her age. She took life seriously; its problems were her problems. Their solution she considered her business. She was a crusader of no common zeal. She had been taught to worship God. She did so as a matter of form. She felt that she must serve mankind, this to her was religion. She had been shielded from the world, yet she thirsted for reality and spared no effort to fan every spark of fact into a blaze of truth.

She wanted to know the world as it was and not as it is said to be. She wanted to know how deeds affected man for good or ill. She believed that God was a universal father and could not conceive why he should be partial with his children, blessing one with weakness.

Slowly she had linked together a chain of evidence from tiny glimpses of worlds of truth which contradicted the teachings of her parents, the preacher, and the leading ladies of the church. She had begun to realize that she was living in a dream world of strange, mythical unreality. Anderson realized that in his telephone conversation he had given her what he considered strongest evidence of his own perfidity. It had all been well meant. He had always acted for her own good. The trouble was he was wise business but a fool in life.

He locked the door of his office and for a few minutes paced recklessly back and forth, while he spun a web of profanity and obscenety which he hurled at the preacher's head. It was the preacher whom he blamed for his daughters awakening. He fancied that if she had not entered that jail and met that boy she might never have discovered that the world was in reality quite different from the way it had been painted.

Throwing himself in his chair he nervously lit a cigar alternately puffing and chewing it. Then grabbing the telephone called up his wife but before that lady could answer he hung up the receiver and resumed his walk. He was worried, angered, he seethed with conflicting emotions. He did not realize that his child was what she was by virtue of her heriditary, that she was a mental high explosive only awaiting to be touched off by the fire of circumstance. He was convinced that as his child he could make her what he wanted her to be, and therefore resented the winds of circumrtance which blew her toward her own shores. Anderson could only think of one man responsible for this enevitable happening. This was the Rev. Goodman. He called him up on the telephone. When that person answered Gus let loose a volume of vocefleration into the receiver which caused the preacher to hang up, there by pouring the irate father's anathemas into the deilcate ears of the operator, who immediately informed him of the company rules. This caused him to set down the instrument with a bang an clasping the arms of the chair he had it out with himself.

A few minutes later he called up the high school and ordered the principal to send his daughter to his office at once.

To this the principal agreed and in another half hour Olive walked into her father's office. She was not excited in the least. What she had heard that morning had not surprised her as much as might be expected. It had the effect of a verification. It was as if a new and austere philosophy was being driven into her head blow upon blow. It had the effect of making her mentally ill, confused is perhaps the better word, but then illness is confusion.

On her way to her father's office she tried to speculate on what it was that he wanted. Perhaps he would scold her for following him. Then again she was quite sure that he would not call her out of school for that. Again she could not conceive of him scolding her, he had never indulged in that pastime. He would rebuke her occassionally with a sharp tongue and a present in his hand. As a father he was indulgence itself. Thus it was that she turned every possibility in her mind until she came to the office.

It is needless to say that Anderson was as much bewildered as the girl. He did not know how to attack the problem before him. He wanted to solve it in a business way, but this was not a business proposition. He hoped that Olive might open the subject and thereby show him a way out. To have been caught by her red handed in the practice of his customary ways was the thing that mortified him. Had the supreme court of the United States convicted him of high treason and exiled him from all he held dear it would have hurt him less than this consciousness that his child knew some of the ruthlessness with which he abused power. He wanted to ask her forgiveness but that would never do. He would have to promise her to conduct his life different and that would interefere with business. Within him the father and the business man were at war. Idealiam and commercialism can scarcely dwell in the same heart. He wanted to be her idol as she was his. She was his idol by virtue of her honesty, sincerelty kindliness, and all the virtues that bloomed like flaming flowers in the hearts of human kind. He wanted to be her idol and yet retain the trickiness, the deception, the ruthlessness, the disregard of other's welfare by which he had accumulated the wealth that he legally possessed. This was manifestly impossible. Anderson had within his house the spiritual basis of the class struggle.

No sooner had his daughter entered the office than he asked her if she had heard his conversation with the judge. To which she replied in the affirmative. Then he asked her what she thought of it. And she replied that she had ceased to think. She then surprised her father by telling him that ever since she had been twelve years old she had wondered about the strange contradictions in life. About its inconsistencies, about its universal cruelty. "I wanted to believe that what mamma and Mr. Goodman taught me was the truth yet I could not understand why it was that if it were good and true you took no stock in it. When a mere child I noticed that there were ten women in church to one man. Men do the business of the world, they meet the world as it is. Women are supported by the men and are therefore made what men want them to be. Men keep women as a diversion from business. They want their company as a relaxation from the cares of life. That is why they try to bind them up in such a way that they shall know nothing about business. Men raise women for toys and not for partners. They infranchise the Indian, the negro, and the illiterate. They deny a voice to idiots criminals and women. They do not class their women with criminals but they do their best to keep them idiotic. I have figured it out this way that if women knew the truth about this world's business there would be more honesty and less abusive power. What are we taught? Stories, dancing, scripture, entertainment, and how to wear our clothes to the best advantage. We are fixed up as dolls in the show window of society."

Her father sat and looked at her with open mouth. He knew that what she said was true but he had never thought of it as evil. He believed that women and niggers had to keep their place. To him a woman's place was in the home, and in social life. Her sphere was to comfort, love and amuse man and rear his children. For her to aspire to anything different had always appeared to him as a mark of depravity but now that his daughter voiced the sentiments it all looked different but he was not convinced that she was right. Anderson had a provincial mind. He had always lived in a small town and in a farm community. He knew nothing of that larger life, that art, culture and civilization through the force of industrial development bring to the woman hood of the race. He had scarcely heard of woman suffrage. He looked upon the English suffragette as monsters of perversity. He gloated over the savage abuse that the English government heaped upon these pioneers in the world of thought. "If a woman takes a man's place she should not object if she gets a man's treatment," he would say. The truth was he was ignorant of the forces at work in society, or he would not have tried to rear his daughter in the way that daughters were reared during the hand tool period of production.

Now he listened for the first time to a feminine brain that really thought; that was more than an echo of her master's voice and he felt a strange emotion of mingled pride and resentment. He listened to her while she told him that she understood why he tried to hide the facts of life from her. That she did not blame him for doing what nearly all fathers did. That it was not he bout the customs of the people that were at fault. She told him that he could not expect to give her a high school education and hide from her the facts of life as they are.

To all this Gus. Anderson answered that he knew that he had been a fierce proposition but that she should not forget that this is a dog eat dog world and that therefore he was no worse than other men. "Sink or swim, survive or perish," it all depends upon how you go about things." He then added that all that he had ever done he had done for her, that all he had ever made, he had made for her, that it would be all hers when he came to die. And to this the girl replied that she wished that had never made anything if by that sacrifice the methods of making could be altered. She told him that she did not like to think that the frozen tears of men, women and little children were smoothening her path in life. That what had been acquired through iniquity could never bring anything but ultimate sorrow. "Injustice leads to inequality and inequality destroys the equaliberium of the world. When equaliberium is destroyed in anything it falls. This is true of man and it is true of nations. Inequality destroys the good in human kind. It makes man brutes, cowards, and slaves. Even you Daddy are afraid of that poor boy now held in jail."

"Sure I'm afraid of him. Not for myself. I can deal with him alright but for you. I don't want him to meet you. He's got you locoed," he asserted.

"There you go," she replied. "Don't you see that you have no faith in my ability to take care of myself. Rather than have me strengthened by a storm of truth that will stouten every fiber of my being you prefer to keep me in a hot house of silly fairy tales and lies. That boy can't hurt me. You seem to have the silly notion that a woman cannot be interested in a man without being in love with him. I'm not interested in him but in the principle of justice. You have all admitted that he is innocent of any wrong; that these men, are arrested for their money's sake. Such conduct is a disgrace to our community. It is a disgrace to you and me. I am working to free ourselves from disgrace."

Gus. Anderson leaned far back in his chair and laughed. "I see you're next to some of it kid, but you go about it like a fool woman. You'll make your papa a lot of cheap notriety and get yourself talked about and all that sort of thing. Perhaps you had better go to Valley City to the Normal and finish your education there. I know you'll get yourself in

Your Sins Have Found you out

There is an immense hue and cry going up in the capitalist press about the growing slackening of effort of the workers to pull the world out of the bog in which it wallows at the present time. Every paper and magazine finds space between the advertisement to nudge labor in the rib and give it a hunch that it ought to wake up a bit and exert itself somewhat more to the satisfaction of the employers. They complain that labor is growing exceedingly independent not to say impudent. All respect for the boss and for work as such seem to have disappeared. The cry for more product only meets with resentment which begins with a demand for more wages and shorter hours and ends in taking shorter hours whether they are granted or not. American workers are learning to loaf at the expense of the boss.

In looking about for causes, we ascertain that the reports of hundreds and thousands of per cent in profits reaped by practically every big industrial enterprise has had a large influence in detemining the new attitude of the worker toward work. "What's the use?" is a pertinent question which labor is putting to capital and finds no answer. To work and to merely exist while the profits of employers mount higher and higher is not an incentive to sweat the more and grew more bent. So the laborer becomes a loafer as many minutes during the day as seem advisable. His loafing is a silent protest against exploitation. He knows something is radically wrong in industry. He feels himself abused and exploited of some of his product. Also he is beginning to believe that he ought to have a word to say about conditions on the job. Not knowing the real remedy as yet, he follows the line of least resistance and takes a vacation on full time. The American worker will soon cease to boast of the amount of his produce which has long been know to exceed by far the output of any other worker. Pride in his work has only served to enrich his exploitor—so what's the use of pride?

A striking contrast to this phenomena is that existing in the industries of Russia under the management of the workers. A recent report of George Lansbury to the British press states that since the workers took control of Russian land and industry a stupenduous change has taken place in their attitude toward the job. A great wave of enthusiasm for work is in full sweep there. Knowing that exploitation is no more, the workers respond willingly to the demands for the ranabilitation of Russian civil life. Much voluntary work is performed by groups numbering into the thousands when some special jobs need to be accomplished. There are no slackers among Russian workers. They are working as free men work, not slavishly for an exploiter and profit taker. The industry is theirs, the product is theirs, the State is theirs. All that is in Russia belongs to the Russian workmen and peasants

The Russian Bolshevists, damned by capitalists and exploiters, have solved the problem of how to keep the interest of the worker in his work. When will American workers learn the lesson? Thay at least are learning to pronounce the letters of the first word of that lesson which spell EMANCIPATION!

The German revolutionists continue their strides toward the Left. With every swing of the pendulum in that great drama the pulse of millions of Communists beat higher or lower as the temper of the masses records tendencies toward absolute "self determination" by the working class of all governmental functions or toward compromise with the reformistic and pseudo-socialistic elements.

So far, there are strong indications that the "dictatorship of the proletariat" must be the final outcome. The communists have shown no evidence of a retreat from this principle. The agreement to call off the general strike was based upon the government's promise to fulfill the demands of the communists for socialization of industry and worker's control. Upon that basis the Bauer cabinet was seated. Within a few hours it was seen that there was no intention on the part of the government to fulfill its agreement with the workers and the cabinet was forced to immediately resign.

Fighting for control of the strategic points—industrial centers and food routes continues. The communists are holding on to their guns and all that those guns have won for them in the past two weeks fighting. From the reports current there is no evidence of a weakening either morally or from a military stand point of the forces of Communism.

In the meautive Karl Legien, head of German trades unionism appears as a probable new leader of the revolutionary forces. Whether Communism triuphs immediately in Germany or not, we know that the power of the reactionaries is broken forever. The actual rule or the workers in industry is bound to result. Upon that basis the new Germany will arise as the new Russia has risen upon a like fonudation—and as whole new world will be erected in the not far distant future.

On with the Revolution!

OUT OF JAIL AND ON THE JOB.

Comrades:

I like "The Toiler" and the stand it is taking on the different questions regarding the class-struggle.

My first acquaintance with "The Toiler" was made in Leavenworth Pennitentiary were I spent a year as a guest of the most Democratic Government of this glorious republic.

But the cure turned out to be a failure. I don't love the capitalist system any more now than I did before and I am firmly determined to carry on the fight for Industrial Democracy.

I think the day is not far off when our efforts shall be rewarded. The "Masters" are getting desperate and that is proof of their weakness.

I am literature agent for the Scandinavian Socialist Club here in Salt Lake and as there is no other radical organization doing anything I thought I would try to take a few copies of "The Toiler" each week to distribute amongst my friends. Later on I would have more chance to get subs. So if you will send me 5 copies a week to start with I shall do my best to distribute them.

With best wishes to all comrades from the Wild West.

Yours for freedom

Carl Larson.

Comrades Hicks and Gregory of Cincinnati are still teaming it together for subs. Two more they add to their already long list.

Another sub card purchaser is comrade Esther Markizon of Wilmington Del. She also chooses Lenin as premium.

CHART FOR CHAPTER TWO.
THE ROAD TO HAPPINESS.

Happiness may be defined as a state of being wherein there is an excess of pleasures over pain or discomfort.
Progress,—mastery of natural phenomena for human advantage.
Dynamic Action,—Employment of intellectual means of activity to achieve progress.
Dynamic Opinion,—Correct views of the relation of man to the universe.
Knowledge,—Acquaintance with environment.
Education,—Distribution of extant knowledge.
Knowledge creates opinions.
Opinions cause action (or inaction).
Correct Action brings progress.
Progress brings happiness.

CHAPTER TWO.
THE RAOD TO HAPPINESS.

Lester F. Ward, in the first volume of "Dynamic Sociology," maintains that "intelligent mind FORTIFIED WITH KNOWLEDGE is the only reliable form of directive force. The only proper knowledge for this purpose is that which can be acquired of the materials and forces of nature. As it is the utilization of these which alone can secure the end sought, so the knowledge of these is the prime necessity in the exercise of a directive control over human zeal for the improvement of mankind. Hence the diffusion of this kind of knowledge among the masses of mankind is the ONLY HOPE we have of securing any greater social progress than that which nature itself vouchsafes through its own process of selection."

"The knowledge referred to is just that which is embraced in the word SCIENCE, and the diffusion of it is the process which goes by the name of EDUCATION. Therefore the first element of a truly progressive system is POPULAR SCIENTIFIC EDUCATION."

Those who understand the forces of their environment are naturally more adaptable to changes in their environmental conditions, hence more progressive.

Most of the opinions held by the mass of mankind are based upon belief rather than science, and most of them are incorrect.

Progress is not the natural state of affairs. The bulk of mankind is non-progressive. Progress is forced by economic development.

The development of civilization depended upon man's ability to understand the forces of nature and utilize them for his own benefit. Natural forces, such as the wind, rain and tides, electrical forces, steam, gas, in short all the laws of physics and chemistry had to be mastered by man before progress was possible. BEFORE man mastered them he was the plaything of the elements.

The fecundity of the race forced man to learn the use of the forces of nature. He used the wind to pump water for him and to turn his mills and send his ships across the waves. He used waterpower to run his machinery, to generate electrical energy and to irrigate the desert. All of man's progress is inherent in his ability to USE natural forces. He HAD to make himself master or be made a victim of these same forces.

Our progress in the social world has not kept pace with our progress in the industrial world. In the industrial world we work from causes to effect, while in the social world the tendency is to tinker with effects while ignoring causes. Social reformers usually work at the roof instead of the foundation of the social structure.

Happiness is that state of being wherin there is an excess of pleasure or enjoyment over pain or discomfort.

The cause of human activity is to be found in man's struggle for happiness or self-gratification.

Hapiness can not be secured without PROGRESS

Progress can ot be secured without ACTION.

Action can not be secured without OPINION.

Opinion rests upon knowledge, which is information, correct or incorrect.

Education is the distribution of knowledge.

CORRECT EDUCATION,—scientific knowledge, is necessary in order that CORRECT OPINIONS may be formed.

Correct opinions will necessitate CORRECT ACTION and progress will be the result.

Faulty education results in incorrect opinions which transmute themselves into the wrong kind of activity and an inhibition of progress is the result.

The prevailing opinions held concerning intellect and intelligence may be cited as an example of how wrong opinions produce wrong activity which makes progress difficult if not impossible.

It is a generally accepted opinion that the "workers are poor because of a lack of brains."*) The acceptance of this opinion leads to a condition of despondency that greatly interferes with action. If action is taken it is a biological problem and meets with discouragement at the very start.

It is not intellectual capacity which is lacking; it is intelligence.)

Intellect is mental power.

Knowledge is food for intellect.

Intelligence is intellect supplied with knowledge. Those who desire progress should work for an increase in intelligence through the spread of knowledge.

Action depends upon opinion, and the VALUE of action depends upon the correctness of the opinion and the importance of its subject-matter.

Lester F. Ward, in volume two of "Dynamic Sociology," gives an excellent example of the effect of opinions producing progressive or non-progressive action; "First in order to live the most advantageous way, sound views of the material universe must prevail. So long as man's conceptions of the univesre are erroneous he will pursue a wayward if not a dowhward course. If they are too narrow and he believes that all existing things are within the range of his vision, his conduct will be correspondingly narrowed."

"If he believes the world of short duration, both in the past and in the future, this too will dwarf all his understandings and make an end to progress."

"If he regards nature as consisting of a multitude of animated powers impending over him, he will waste all his energies in seeking to propitiate these powers. If he deems them evil, terror will demoralize him and make life a burden."

"If he conceives the universe to be watched over by beneficent powers, he will be apt to resign all initiative effort to them, and relapse into a condition of complete stagnation."

Today, in spite of all the advancement made by modern science, the opinions of the great majority of mankind, "conceive the universe to be watched over by beneficent powers". with the inevitable result of the people praying to these powers for assistance in righting their wrongs instead of engaging in an active campaign to help themselves.

*) This opinion is well illustrated by a quotation from a noted college professor,—David Starr Jordan, who said, "The man with the hoe is not ignorant because he is poor; he is poor because he is ignorant."

SPARKS.

Mr. Block and the Profiteers is still on the market and doing its share of agitation. Comrade J. M. Scott of New Lexingtown, O. has put a bunch to work lately.

We acknowledge receipt of $1.00 for the defense fund and an order for the half price booklets from comrade Miss Antonia Hornik of Neffs Ohio.

Beats all how the subs come in when the Toiler Boosters step out after them. Here's comrade Huebner of Springfield in with a list totaling $10.50. And he has done it before and intends doing it again. Watch him.

Order a hundred of the Russian "Labor Code", 60c. Show the workers in your shop how industry is carried on in Russia while the workers are rebuilding the industries.

We note two subs. from comrade Vanderoest of Kalamazoo. Staying with us he.

And comrade A. C. Palmer of Kalamazoo does the same.

Local Toledo orders 500 Slander of the Toilers. And that reminds us that the Slanders are nearly gone, so fast have the orders for them come in. But if you hurry we may be able to fill your order for this splendid little agitator.

Five yearlies arrived last week from comrade Sykes of Canton.

Many, many comrades continue to remit for trial subs. for their friends. But some do even better, they remit for several at a time. Among these latter is comrade C. E. Guthrie of Urichsville who sends in two yearlies with his renewal. Boosting, YES.

Comrade Malmstrom of Moline sends in $6.00 worth of newones, and calls for a package of pamphlets for a premium.

Sixs dollars for Toiler sub cards and 100 copis for distribution is an order coming from comrade W. Frederick of Belleville Ill.

A nice list of subs. amounting to $5.50 arrived from Martins Ferry last week. Comrade Fred White is the rustler of these. And we judge by his letter that he will continue on the job.

Our Coraopolis Pa., list is growing nicely. Comrade Fazio os responsible. this latest list consisted of three.

We sold more literature week before last than the week before that. We sold more last week than week before last and we sold more this week than last.

Likewise will we sell more next week than this and the following week and weeks still more IF YOU GET ON THE JOB. How about it, comrade RED!

You can start now with an order for Number one and two of the Toiler Educational Leaflet Series. Get busy—that's not—all but it's a mighty good start.

Five hundred Toilers were distributed among the miners at their convention at West Brownsville, Pa., April 1st. Comrade Asenat was on the job.

This leads us to suggest that every union Red carry a supply of Mental Dynamite to every meeting of union men and women. We'll warrant results will be more than satisfactory all around.

We also suggest that Soviet Russia's Labor Code and Strangling American Workers are the best for these meetings.

Five yearlies from comrade Green of Moline are among late arrivals. Naturally enough he asks for the premium, Lenin the Man and His Work.

Comrade Chaney of Millersburg, O., sends in two new subs.

Rose Farm Ohio is a new town on our list. Thanks to three comrades there.

The Toiler Booster Club idea is growing. A new one has sprung up at Youngstown. One of its first jobs was to round up four renewals and a new one. There is room for a Toiler Booster Club in every town and city in the country. Why not organize one in your town?

Two subs. a literature order and 40c for the Cartoon account arrives from comrade D. G. Berg of Bellaire Mich.

Seven subscriptions and an order for "Slanders" are amoung the past week's receipts. Comrade T. B. Morgan of Moline is the guilty Red.

Sandusky conrads are on the job as a remittance of $10.75 from comrade Litz proves. Its for Toiler press stamps, and various other items. Attive bunch there.

A few of Skygac's little punches brings us a new subscriber from Charleston, Wash. Comrade E. E. Martin heartily approves of Skygac.

The press fund gets a boost this week from comrade Mrs Sarah Rohrer. Two dollars she sends us thru comrade Sykes.

Six more yearlies from Christopher. No. Christopher is not a man, it's a town in Ill. And it looks like every man there will eventually be on our mailing list. Comrade Staples is responsible for this last half dozen.

Comrades continue to remit for Toiler sub cards and thus get some free books and pamphlets. Comrade James of Irondale is among the latest to take advantage of our generous offer.

A comrade at Dayton remits $2.00 for defense but forgot to sign his name to the letter. Thanks comrade.

J. W. Halley sends in two subs from the mining region of southern Ohio.

Looks like the workers of the Arma Kans. section will have a hard time dodging the Toiler if comrade Moore sticks to his post as he is. His latest list comprises two.

Another literature order that deserves atetntion comes from comrade Flodine of Jamestown, N. Y. It includes 100 Toilers.

trouble in this berg. We'll get that kid out of town and then forget about him. It's romance you have in your head, and romance don't sell in the market. It's all right in a novel. 'Taint no good on the counter." Then after a moments reflection. "I wonder what you've been reading. Where do you get your notions?'

"I have been reading a paper that Cora Smith brings to school. It is called "The Progressive Woman," she answered.

"I thought so. Your yarn was too long for your own spinning. I don't know what the government means by letting such junk go thru the mails. Any way I'll attend to Smith's hash", he said clenching his jaws.

"Not if I am awake," Olive answered as she arose to leave the office "That is some more of the way in which you assert your power, but from now on, as long as I have any influence, I shall make it my business to see to it that you will not get away with this high handed stuff. I'll take care of, you papa for your own good." So saying she tossed her head and sailed out of the room.

"We'l I'll be eternally — — —" vociferated her father as he pounded the desk with his fist.

Amalgamated Association may as well kiss itself goodbye!

In this late decision the Court attempts, andwith poor grace—to justify one of the greatest swindlers and violations of law of recent times—commonly known as the Tennessee Steal.

This is still fresh in the minds of the people;—how the Steel Corporation forced its only formidible competitor—the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. to the wall— how the astute Judge Gary and Mr. Frick made their famous midnight ride on a special train to Washington— how they closeted Roosevelt—how they took over the Tennessee Co. for something over thirty millions of dollars—and how J. P. Morgan later said it was fully worth a billion! Do you see now how useful it is to have a well informed Judge the head of affairs?

This outrage against law and decency stunk to high heaven. And the Stanley commission appointed by Congress in 1911 to "investigate" this, reported that these spotless angels, of the Steel Corporation, had deliberatively lied to a deceived Roosevelt. But Roosevelt with his usual obstinacy denied this but stoutly maintained that he and the Corporation through this gross violation of law and brigandage had prevented a great national calamity,—purely imaginary of course. You know what happened to the Steel Corporation? Nothing! In spite of the fact that the Stanley report said — "this unlawfully acquired power is a menace to the welfare of the country."

In this late decision Judges McReynolds and Brandeis, by some sort of hocus-pocus were not allowed to participate;—they had formerly opposed the Corporation. Had they stood by their past record and been permitted to vote the decision probably would have been 5 to 4 against the Corporation. Justice Day in the minority opinion clearly showed that this organization had been organized in defiance of the law,— that it was above the law,—and more, that this decision practically nullified the Sherman Anti-Trust Law. And no sensible person will dispute this. What in the name of all that is holy are the American people to do,—when these infamous organizations are boistered and upheld in their power to ravish the people—by a court that hold itself superior to the will of the people, the authority of Congress and is responsible to no one?

This most astonishing decision brings forcibaly to mind the famous saying of Englands greatest jurist, Lord Mansfield,—Lord Chief Justice of the Kings Bench during the American Revolution, —who said "The law is like a spider's web: the big flies go through, but the smaller ones are caught."

The British Labor Movement

that the attorney general of the United States had publicly characterized James Maurer as a dangerous "red," and they enjoyed a hearty laugh when shown American newspaper clippings on the occurence.

For contrast there need only be mentioned a meeting in London a few nights ago at which H. N. Brailsford lectured on Parliament and Soviet in a manner very disparaging to the present constituional government of England and distincly laudatory to that of Russia. His remarks were sufficiently "seditious" to have gained him a 20 years jail sentence in the United States. Here they brought courteous attention and loud applause from a respectable middle class audience who had paid 50 and 75 cents for their seats. Moreover there were no secret service agents present and no scare headline in the press next morning.

The third striking difference about the English labor movement is the close practical co-operation of all its units. Adherents of different schools of economic thought, left, center and right; and members of all working-class organizations, whether political, industrial or co-operative, are all working in harmony which is the most marked contrast with the disunion of American labor.

In the English labor world individual differences are being buried, group makes concession to group, strength is increased a hundred-fold by union. It is everywhere recognized that the first aim of eliminating capitalism in favor of a socialized industry is common to almost all, and that the differences between individuals and these can best be thrashed out after, and not before, that end is achivied. For that reason there is virtually no anti-parliamentarianism in England now and labor is getting control of the political hand in hand with the economic field.

In domestic affairs nationalization of basic industries, beginning with the coal mines, is an issue which has been taken up by the entire labor movement. A great campaign for state ownership of the mines, and control by district and pit committees; "representative of the national government and the various classes of workers, including those engaged in the managing, technical, commercial and manual processes," still goes on. The campaign for this program very similar to the Plumbplan, is now being pressed in every section of the country, despite the action of the recent Trades Union congress.

Nationalization of the mines is only the entering wedge of the broad program of industrial democracy for which the British labor movement is working. The mines come first because conditions happen to be most advantageous in that industry, for it is recognized that in practical working out the socialization of the railroads would be even easier. But in the mining industry not only is labor most strongly organized and progressive; it also faces a situation peculiarly suitable for radical economic change. The Lloyd George government has violated the confidence of labor in refusing to adopt either the letter or the spirit of the report brought in by the commission of experts appointed, to investigate the ramshackle and inefficient condition, of the British mining industry under private control. It has also been forced by the capitalist to withdraw a compromise bill limiting net profits exclusive of the infamous royalty system) to 25 cents a ton. Now that the government has deceived labor and surrendered to capital on the coal issue, labor intends first to educate the public on the facts and merits of the case and second, to take such action as may be necessary to make the government live up to its pledges. Campaigns for the socialization of other industries will follow in due course. As Frank Hodges of the miners said at the opening mass-meeting of the "mines for the nation" campaign—"The drama opened tonight will witness in its last act the death of the whole capitalist system in Great Britain."

The spirit of direct action, in the sense of political strikes to coerce the government into making concessions which cannot be brought about by parliamentary pressure is, however, something noticeable distasteful to British labor. These tactics will only be used as a last recourse. The English workers by the millions are getting in step with social evolution now—with a rapidity which fully merits an investigation by the Judiciary committee of the United States senate.

Meanwhile in the political field the labor party is daily gaining more experience and power, instilling the vision of a new and better world into the people in every section of the country, and preparing itself to take over the reins of administrative government as the trade unions are preparing themselves to take over the reins of industry. Every municipal election, every parliamentary bye-election sees a steady increase of the labor vote and every day that goes by sees a development of the ability of its leaders in the field of honest statecraft. A general election held tomorrow would see labor cutting the present huge and untruthful majority of conservatives by scores. When the great test does come the results will be a shock to the reactionaries the world over and the fight is crucial because overthrow of the coalition government by labor will obviously be followed by overthrow of capitalist control in England.

WASHINGTON NEWS LETTER

— By Paul Hanna —
Staff Correspondent.
The Federated Press.

WASHINGTON.—Behind the release of more than 100 prisoners seized in raids during the past few months by Attorney General Palmer there is a conflict of policy which neither the attorney general nor the secretary of labor has thus far confessed.

Palmer and Acting-Secretary of Labor Post have both given their support to the general impression that lack of evidence is responsible for the sudden freeing of radical aliens. That is true, but it is not all the truth. Against scores of hundreds of prisoners the attorney general possessed no evidence whatever. Presumably very much frightened himself by the wholly unexplained bomb explosion at his Washington home. Palmer suspended all constitutional guarantees and proceeded to imprison every person whose reputation or social obscurity made it safe to treat in such a manner.

The present wholesale freeing of alien radicals is a direct outgrowth of those high-handled tactics. Against those methods the department of labor filed vigorous and repeated protests with the attorney general. But popular hysteria reinforced Palmer. His chief confederate was Anthony Caminetti, commissioner of immigration within the labor department, who agreed that "to save the nation" the constitution might properly be ignored.

Until the public reaction against Palmerism came, the department of labor was helpless. But certain court decisions have recently been rendered which give the labor department the whip hand over Palmer. Two different federal judges have declared that evidence secured against a prisoner by the forcible search without warrant of his person or premises is no evidence at all.

In addition, the supreme court recently threw out a civil suit brought by Palmer because the attorney general's evidence had been procured in the course of a raid, without warrant, upon the offices of a corporation. After being compelled to return documents seized in the illegal raid, the attorney general's office had come into court again with photostats of the same documents, and a request that the court then order the defendant to produce originals.

Exasperated by this exhibition of the strong-arm plus chicane, the supreme court declared that it was to make a mockery of constitutional guarantees if evidence first procured illegally should be legalized by such a trick.

Secretary of Labor Wilson is described by his friends as a man who does not like to make a fight unless the chance of winning is excellent. The letter of the law appearing to support the attorney general in his raids against alien radicals, the labor department chief "jes lay low," his friends say, and waited for his opportunity to come. The court opinions cited above created this opportunity.

In the absence, due to illness, of Secretary Wilson, Assistant Secretary Post undertook a review of the many cases to assertain how many of the persons held had been seized or subjected to search without warrant by the attorney general. He meanwhile issued orders which immediately restored the right of prisoners to see counsel and to procure freedom under bond.

The backbone of Palmer's position was broken by that single order respecting counsel and bail. To suceed in the newspaper headlines, the attorney general required a darkened laboratory. Bail-and-counsel light spoiled every picture he tried to develop.

In the course of his inquiry Mr. Post discovered that a huge proportion of Palmer's captives had been the victims of utterly illegal raids while hundreds of others remained still, not incriminated by any hook or crook of their persecutors.

While seeking to avoid publicity, for tactical reasons, the department of labor proceeded at once to liberate the totally innocent prisoners, and to plan the early discharge of those against whom prima facie cases had been established through the illegal search of premise and person.

Palmer must either acquiesce in the wholesale jail delivery of his prey or make ready to fight it out in open court against the secretary of labor. Secretaries Wilson and Post waited long for tihs hour to arrive. They are reported ready to fight. If Palmer thinks he can justify his arrests without warrants, the courts will hear his argument.

MR. BLOCK'S PRAYER.

Oh, Lords of the Land, who own the world,
The factory, the mine and mill
We come to thee and on bended knee
And ask if it be your will,

That we run your machines and till your soil,
And gather their fruits for you;
That when it is sold for yellow gold
You'll give us a penny or two?

You may ride around in your automobile,
Or flirt with another men's wife,
You may drink your booze
And get drunk if you shoose
Or lead any kind of a life.

If you'll only permit us to earn our bread
In this grand old land of the free
We'll work while you shirk
And we'll cuss the Red,
And save this old world for thee.

Our backs may break
And our old bones shake
Our arms may pull in two;
Our brains may rust
Our ribs may bust
But we'll keep on working for you.
Amen.

WHO ARE 100% PATRIOTS?

By James Pontius.

During the war the country from North to South and East to West was plastered with what we could not help but call the Capitalists' hypocritical, patriotic posters praising the wealthy and slandering the poor, and the kept and paid press acted as "me toos" in encouraging that sentiment. The propaganda was so unreasonable and absurd that we wrote a similar article to this one exposing the dope, but it was refused space in the papers.

Their aim was to make the common people believe that this dope meant, he who gave $100 or the corporation that induced its entire force to give, whether it robbed their families or not, was 100 per cent patriotic and so on down according to the amounts given.

This seemed to have been the rich men's slogan, but few things can be farther from the truth. Were we to base patriotism on such idea, people with money would be the only patriots and all the poor would be unpatriotic-many had nothing to give, and very few but small amounts. To prove our assertion let us ask ourselves the honest and real questions as a guide to true patriotism.

Does true patriotism depend on those who talk or act; the laborers or profiteers; those who gave their lives or their money?

The few wealthy of the 110,000,000 American people pretend to believe that true patriotism depends on giving a small part of their wealth or force the poor to pay to support the flag and the country, while the millions think giving one's life for the country is still greater patriotism We think with the latter for the reason when our lives are ended our money will do us no good, but if our money is gone we still have a chance to make good.

But for the sake of argument we will be fair and put both labor and capital on an equality—50% for each. With such a foundation who is the 100% patriot? That's easy. He who gives his life and all he has is the only 100% patriot, for the reason that no one can do more.

Suppose A has nothing to give but his life, B has $100, C has $1,000,000 and D has $1,000,000,000 and each would give his life and all he has, each would be 100% patriots. But suppose those with the money would only bive their money or only a part of it and A gives as before, he would be the only 100% patriot, the others would only be 50% or less according to the amounts given. This is too plain to be denied; and to prove this we refer you to the last part of the 12th chapter of Mark wherein Jesus said to those who cast money into the treasury, that the poor widow who threw in two mites "cast in more than all they which have cast into the treasury", because she cast in all she had, even her living. Mark you, Jesus did not say any one who cast into the treasury, but all they who cast into the treasury—meaning all together.

So with the widows at the wash tubs who put in their time to keep their children from want and the Government from aiding them, though they had nothing to give to the Red Cross or to buy bonds, are certainly as patriotic as those who gave no matter how much. If this is not true admit that Jesus did not know what he was talking about.

So it was with the poor laboring men (and we know of many who had not $50. worth of property in their names and some who had not even a sheet to put up on their beds and had to live in furnished rooms) yet nearly all took a $50, or more, Liberty bond which made each a strong 50% patriot. While not one of all the balance—the bankers, merchants, corporations, doctors, lawyers, politicians, officials, clergymen, capitalists, etc. gave all they had in order to make them 50% patriots, and those who gave less than 10% of their wealth are even less than 5% patriots for their lives are not sacrificed and talk don't count—it all depends on what is done.

Now let us see what per cent the millionaires and billionaires test—those who so often prate about their loyalty and patriotism. Nearly all that any of them have thus far given the government had to force out of them from income, graduated and inheritance taxes. We know of none who even gave 10 per cent of their wealth, besides beating the government out of millions by their profiteering. Henry Ford may be an exception though he at first opposed the war. It is stated that he sold all his war materials to the government at cost. If you can point out any others who did likewise we will stand corrected.

A FEW FACTS AND FIGURES: If millionaire only gave $10,000 and a billionaire only $10,000,000 each would only be one half of one per cent patriots. Besides Exgovernor Johnson of California, now in the United States Senate, said the corporations in 1916 made from 500 to 1600 per cent on their money from selling munitions to the government.

And since then, if we can credit newspaper reports, many other corporations have made several hundred per cent more prosfits than did the ones Mr. Johnson spoke of. So instead of giving $10,000 or $10,000,000, as the case may be, to be but one-half of one per cent patriots, they took advantage of the government in its peril and made even more than 500 to 1600 per cent on their money instead of an honest 6 to 8 per cent.

Thus, as we speak of the card player who fails to make as much as he bids, goes "into the oble". So with those fellows, instead of giving a sufficient sum to make them but one-half of one per cent. patriots, have made, according to reports, more than 500 to 1600 percent—leaving them that much "in the hole" from extortion, or, if you please, so much less than no per cent. patriots. Figures don't lie. This is why Congressman Emerson of Ohio introduced a resolution in Congress to put those fellows on the criminal list to prosecute them. And were the administration but one-fourth as willing and anxious to bring those fellows to justice, as they are the hungry poor, all the millionairess and billionairess pro-

Labor Jury Charges Conspiracy of Capitalist Interests in I. W. W. Case.

— By John Nicholas Beffel. —
Staff Correspondent,
The Federated Press

TACOMA, WASH.—The labor jury delegated by six central bodies of organized workers to watch the Centralia labor trial at Montesano has just made its report. By a unanimous vote, after reviewing all the evidence, it found the 10 I. W. W. defendants not guilty of murdering Lieut. Warren O. Grimm on armistice day.

Ample proof was offered, according to the labor jury's findings, to show that Grimm participated in the attack on the I. W. W. hall in Centralia. Cognizance was taken of the fact that the court refused to permit the introduction of evidence vital to the defense; and the labor jury expressed its conviction that the troops were brought to Montesano, the trial scene, to prejudice the jury.

Meeting in the Labor Temple here, the workers' jury issued its report as follows:

"Was there a conspiracy by the business interests of Centralia to raid the I. W. W. hall there? Verdict, yes.

"Evidence was offered by the defense to show that the Centralia business interests held a meeting at the Elks' Club on Oct. 20, 1919, at which meeting Police Chief A. C. Hughes and William Scales, commander of the local American Legion post, were present. At this meeting Police Chief Hughes quoted Prosecuting Attorney Herman Allen as saying that the I. W. W. could not legally be banished from the town, because they had violated no law. To the same effect also Hughes quoted City Attorney H. E. Grimm, brother of Warren Grimm.

"F. W. Hubbard, lumber magnate, then said: 'It's a damn shame; law or no law, if I were chief of police, I would run them out of town within 24 hours.' William Scales, chairman of the meeting, said that while he was not in favor of a raid, no jury in America would convict anybody who might raid the I. W. W. hall. He then announced that he would appoint a secret committee to deal with the I. W. W. situation.

"Was the I. W. W. hall unlawfully raided? Verdict, yes. The evidence introduced convinces us that an attack was made before a shot was fired.

"Had the defendants a right to defend their hall? Verdict, yes. In April, 1918, an earlier I. W. W. hall in Centralia was raided by the tail-end of a Red Cross parade. The furniture was destroyed or stolen, ropes were placed around the necks of the I. W. W. members and they were driven out of town by citizens armed with pick handles.

"Was Warren O. Grimm a party to the conspiracy to raid the I. W. W. hall? Verdict, yes. To our minds the convincing evidence that Grimm was in front of and raiding the hall with others, is the testimony of Lieut. Frank Van Gilder, witness for the prosecution. Van Gilder testified that he stood at Grimm's side at the intersection of Tower Ave. and Second St. when, according to his story, Grimm was shot.

"This testimony was refuted by five witnesses who swore that they saw Grimm coming wounded from the direction of the I. W. W. hall. It is not credible that Van Gilder, who was Grimm's intimate friend, would leave him mortally wounded, to walk half a block alone and unaided.

"Did the defendants get a fair and impartial trial? Verdict, no. The most damaging evidence of a conspiracy by the business men of Centralia to raid the I. W. W. hall was ruled out by Judge John N. Wilson and was not permitted to go to the jury.

"Also the calling of federal troops by Prosecuting Attorney Allen was done for no other reason than to create atmosphere. * * * The presence of American Legion members in court in large numbers also was a factor to weigh against an impartial decision by the jury."

Signers of the labor jury's verdict were: Paul K. Mohr, of the Seattle Central Labor Council, who was chairman; Theodore Meyer, Everett Central Labor Council; John O. Craft, Seattle Metal Trades Council; E. W. Thrall, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Centralia division; W. J. Beard, Tacoma Central Labor Council; and Otto Neumann, Portland Central Labor Council.

All of these organizations except the Brotherhood of Trainmen are integral parts of the American Federation of Labor.

A WHITE GUARD'S STATEMENT

LONDON.—A young officer in the northwest army who took part in the Yudenitch advance on Petrograd made the following statement to The Manchester Guardian's correspondent at Helsingfors:

"I am convinced of one thing, that this whole business of war against the Bolsheviks leads to nothing but the destruction of Russia itself and of honest men on both sides. We started out with a belief in words like democracy, but the moment our advance looked like being successful the northwest government was pushed on one side like a baby, and the real intentions of the leaders became clear. I have heard of the 'red' terror. It could not have been worse than the 'white' terror, in which I have actually taken part. If these things came under my personal observation you may imagine what was the total of terror on the whole front. The worst of it was that we did nothing but destroy.

"I am convinced from what I saw before our coming that there was a more or less efficient working organization of local government in the village soviets. We destroyed it and put back a local autocracy in the persons of officials and military commanders whose object was to get out of the villages what they could. A man with some feelings of humanity, I suffered from what I saw. We captured big estates run by agricultural communes—a sort of state farms. Considering all the difficulties they were in good condition, well stocked with beasts, geese, etc., all well cared for. We literally sacked them, handing them over to soldiers, who killed even the cows, after which we restored the estate to its pre-revolution owner.

"Our people had sacked the estates which the 'reds' had organized and the old owners have no capital with which to run these things themselves. It was the same everywhere. The 'reds' had preserved palaces, etc., absolutely untouched. There was a different story to tell after we had left them."

Free Books and Pamphlets

Beginning April 1st the subscription price of The Toiler advances to $1.50 per year, 6 months 75c. The advancing costs of publication will no longer permit us to publish at the old-rate of $1.00 per year.

In this connection we wish to urge every Toiler booster to strive the harder for subscriptions. The field is unlimited and at the new rate which is not at all high comparatively, there should be no slackening up in the number of subscriptions received. On the contrary, there should now be a greater effort on the part of Toiler readers to help its circulation grow. No weekly periodical gives its readers a higher grade publication than The Toiler and with the hearty support of its readers it will continue to become a better paper.

Our offer of $1.50 worth of literature with every purchase of $3.00 worth of subscription cards has enabled many comrades to obtain good books and pamphlets free. We will continue this offer with only one change. Instead of receiving $1.50 worth of literature for $5.00 worth of cards we will now give the same amount of literature free with every $7.50 worth of subscription cards. Not the new titles in the literature column. You may easily obtain these by getting subscriptions for The Toiler.

The inference of course being that the socialists who teach that the vicious environment of "capitalism" keeps the wage-earner from ever being anything else but a wage-earner, is all wrong, that any poor student can lift himself by the belt of his ambition up into the "upper classes' any time he chooses. The irony of it all is that anywhere you meet him the socialist is conspicioulsy above the average in intelligence and information and while opposed to the "system" on principle, yet is far more capable of surviving under the "system" than most any of the poor deluded dupes of capitalism. Capitalist control of the schools is a positive blight upon the educational opportunities of the young, and "Current Events" is a conspicious example of bourgeois psychology as applied in the schools.

THE BRITISH LABOR MOVEMENT

— By Felix Morley. —
Staff writer,
The Federated Press

ARTICLE 2—INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATION AND THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE.

LONDON.—In the framework of present industrial organization there is found one of the few striking parallels between the labor movements of Great Britain and the United States. Here, as in America, the basis of organization is still one of crafts or trades, with a vast multiplicity of minor unions more or less completely independent in policy and action. Here, as in America, the same cross purposes and antagonisms exist. Strikes fail for want of concerted action, there are frequent jurisdictional disputes, and other evidences of faulty organization. While the coming of the Tripple Alliance promises to sweep away many of these obstacles in England the industrial field still shows a lack of unity in marked contrast to the general harmony and co-operation of the British labor movement.

The most recent example is the long-drawn out strike of the three moulders' unions. All labor now recognizes that, had the employes of the whole engineering industry worked together in this struggle half as well as have the employers' federations the strike would have seen the unions stronger instead of crippled for a long time to come, and would not have entailed anything like the loss to the ocuntry that has actually taken place.

For years past the weakness and disunity of craft centralization has been a source of anxiety to the labor leaders on this side, and is particularly so now that labor's political power is fast outstripping its industrial development. The reason is clear if one stops to consider the result of a socialistic labor government trying to function in a state where all industry is fast in the grip of capitalist control. Labor will be in control of the government of England in a few years, but it can never stay in control until the political organization is complemented by a much more unified industrial power.

A glance at statistics shows that this critical situation is appreciated and that much in the way of union co-ordination and amalgamation has been accomplished, even though much more still remains to be done. In 1899, there were in the United Kingdom 1,310 seperate trade unions with a total membership of 1,860,913. By the end of 1914 the number of seperate unions had shrunk to 1,123, their membership increased to 3,959,863. At the present time the number of distinct unions is under 1,199, their total membership close to 5,500,000. The figures fail to reveal the full significance of the amaglamation tendency. In the first place it is the big and powerful unions that are merging and federating, the weak and unimportant organizations which maintain a feeble independence and swell the total of separate unions into hundreds. Again the decrease in number is in net figures, meaning a decrease in spite of the addition of new unions, many of professional workers, created in recent years.

The general trend today is distinctly in the direction of industrial unionism, with a growing section of executive leadership and of the rank and file alike urging along that road. The reasoning of the English labor leaders in pushing this doctrine is crystal clear. In the words of J. H. Thomas, now president of the Trades Union Congress, "national unionism has become obsolete. Not only must future organization be on industrial lines, and its marking of the units of industry pay some regard to the employer, but there must be co-operation between the various industrial unions."

It is evident that this philosophy is something far more fundamental than anything contemplated by the present administration of the A. F. of L. Nor, on the other hand, does the British theory of industrial democracy bear any but the most superficial resemblance to that of the I. W. W. The idea of violent social revolution is not seriously considered in the development on this side. Industrial unionism is something new for England and at present is regarded simply as an intesely practical step to insure greater power and solidarity for the workers. Not as a weapon for invoking revolutionary general strikes, but as a tool to insure fewer strikes with a much higher percentage of success. To summarize in the words of a prominent union organizer—"the philosophy of industrial development seldom concerns our people. It is always the next thing that counts." The phrase illustrates the practicality of the entire British labor movement and sums up the reasons of its remarkable successes.

A good deal has been printed in America about the Triple Alliance, but little has been said about the most vital result of its creation.—the tendency towards a closely-knit and homogeneous industrial organization which it has brought about. For years past trades union congresses have advocated and furthered the amalgamation of unions catering for similar occupations, and much has also been done in linking up local unions in national federations so centralized as to be virtually national unions. Yet the amalgamatnion process has in general been slow and inadequate to meet the more rapid and efficient way in which the employers have federated. It has been left for the Triple Alliance to point the way for an invincible organization of labor on the industrial field.

The Triple Industrial Alliance of British Miners, Railwaymen and Transport Workers has recast the future of the labor movement in this country. Still to have its first great trial of strength, it is the belief of many that the development has assured the eventful transformation of unwieldly and weak trade unionism to solid, logical and all-powerful basis of industrial unionism. The Triple Alliance is regarded in many circles as the greatest example of constructive labor statesmanship since the launching of the British Labor Party. As a result of its establishment assertions are made that capitalist control of basic industries will be eliminated side by side with the ousting of capitalist control of government by the labor party. Certainly the Triple Alliance has given tremendous influence and promise to nationalization propaganda.

The membership of the Triple Alliance is now about 1,600,000, divided into 800,000 miners, 440,000 railwaymen, and 350,000 transport workers. The president is Robert Smillie who is also chairman of the consultative committee, composed of two officers from each of the constituent federations. While the miners' federation is the only one of the three which is built up throughout on an industrial basis, both the railwaymen and the transport workers have now embraced the principle of industrial organization. It is significant that the admission of other federations to membership in the Alliance has been made to depend on the factor of industrial instead of trade unionism, and that the post office employes, who have adopted a strike clause, and units in the textile trade, are agitating for a change in organization to fit in with this requirement.

As indicated above, the vast power resident in the Triple Alliance does not mean an underlying revolutionary purpose, and it appears that the executives are as keenly awake to their responsibilities to the community as they are to their strength. The Alliance has never yet acted as a unit on the strike field, although there is a possibility that concerted drastic action may yet be taken on the nationalization of mines issue. The clauses of its constitution show how jealously the Triple Alliance guards its power. They are summarized by the 1919 Labor Year Book as follows:—

1—Matters submitted to the joint body must be of a national character in the opinion of the body raising them and such as necessitate joint action.

2—Co-operation is not to be expected until the matter in dispute has been indorsed by the national executive primarily concerned. No movement shall be instituted by any of the affiliated bodies if it is likely to involve the others, until it has been submitted to the joint body for consideration.

3—Periodical meetings of the three full executives to be held at least half-yearly.

4—Consultative committee of six, two from each executive, who may call a conference at any time, and must call one on application by any one of the three bodies.

5—Every effort shall proceed among the three sections to create effective and complete control of their respective bodies.

6—Autonomy reserved to each body to take action on its own behalf.

7—Joint action can only be taken when the question at issue has been before the members of the three organizations and decided by such methods as the constitution of each organization provides, and the conference shall then be called without delay to consider and to decide the question of taking action.

8—No obligation to act shall devolve on any of the three bodies unless these conditions are complied with.

The briefest discussion of the Tripie Alliance, however, would not be complete without mention of the section of labor thought which still favors an improved trade union organization, and holds that the Triple Alliance may easily become the autocratic and unrepresentative tyrant of the whole industrial field. Others, and they are the majority, hold that the Triple Alliance will galvanize the whole industrial side of the labor movement into a more aggressive and well-fortified stand, without itself dominating the field after the present transition period. There must, of course, be a strong, forward-looking executive council of labor to hold the balance between the Triple Alliance and the rest of the organized labor during this transition period, and it is obvious that the Triple Alliance has already resulted in general agitation for a stronger and more uniformly progressive personnel on the parliamentary committee of the Trade Union Congress.

GALE DENIES GARRANZA SUPPORT.

MEXICO, CITY.—Linn A. E. Gale, publisher of "Gale's Journal of Revolutionary Communism" of this city, has issued a statement denying the assertion of Irwin Granich, published in the March "Liberator", which says that "Gale's is published in the printing office of the Mexican government.

"Gale's is not and never has been published in the Mexican government printing office or in any office even remotely related thereto," declared Gale. "Neither is it nor has it been 'subsidized' either directly or indirectly, by Carranza, as Granich says. All such statements are deliberate lies which I believe are inspired by interest desiring to provoke intervention in Mexico. Much nonsense has been published about the 'Bolsheviki policies of the Mexican government.' The purpose of it is unquestionably to arouse the dollar-patriots of the United States and pave the way for war. The assertion that 'Gale's is printed by the Mexican government, which is absolute rot, is just the kind of proof (?) that Senator Fall, Doheny & Co. would like, as an excuse for another bloodbath. THE FALSEHOODS OF GRANICH, AS WELL AS HIS CONDUCT WHILE IN MEXICO, ALL POINT UMMISTAKABLY TO THE CONCLUSION THAT HE IS AN AGENT-PROVOCATEUR IN THE EMPLOY OF WALL STREET!"

Gale added that neither the Communist Party of Mexico nor he had at any time "supported" Carranza. "We praised him for keeping out of the war, for refusing to extradite political fugitives from the United States, and for standing his ground (for a time) against the oil trust. We denounced him for breaking the general strike in Tampico and the teachers' strike in Mexico City. We opposed and still oppose intervention in the interest of the working class, not because the Mexican government is Communist or Socialist. Carranza is a Liberal like Bryan or Borah—that's all. We prefer him to the hypocrite, Wilson, but we are against them both".

Chap. XXV.

Unbuyable Things.

Gus Anderson sat in his old arm chair with his feet propped upon the library table, his face buried in a news paper and his mouth filled with an enormous chew of tobacco. He was all alone, as was his habit when Olive was not in the house. Except at meal time, Mrs. Anderson and her spouse never shared each other's company. There was a good reason for this. Their minds ran in entirely different channels. She would sit by the hour in the dining room and read the Bible or the 'Ram's Horn', or 'The Christian Herald', while he would sit in the front room smoking his pipe and reading the 'Police Gazette' or 'Smart Set' magazine, that is, if he was not reading the stock reports. This evening he was thus engaged when Olive entered. He noticed now what he had been noticing for several days that the girl's mental attitude had been entirely changed. She no longer ran to him with that childlike playfulness that had always been the joy of his life. She had become dignified, distant, almost to stiffness. He resented this characteristic. It reminded him of the ways of her mother. He had always boasted that she was his child with none of her mother's faults, and now that she evinced some of his real characteristics he was unable to recognize them, but averred that they came from the mother's side of the family. Before he thought he complained of it. "Olive, don't act like to your omther," he said almost peevishly. To which she answered that she was trying to act like him. That she was going to be a business woman, as her father was a business man, and as he had many times said that business was a dog eat dog life and that there was no sentiment in business, that she was trying to blot all sentiment from her veins. "I want to become as much like you as possible papa," she finished.

This was the unkindest cut of all. Yet Anderson could not help but smile. He wanted his little girl to be an angel and at the same time to be like him. He saw the conceit of it and laughed "O forget it," he said; "I wanted you to be like you used to be. Just my little girl."

"That's what mamma used to be, too, as long as she was what you wanted her to be, but when she became what she wanted to be then I became your tlitle girl. Mamma learned to love her church more than she loved you. You will have to love business." Then with a saucy toss of her head "I'll be second fiddle to no man or no thing. I'm a new woman, I am."

"Yah, you're a new freak. Plum full of crazy notions," her father roared. "Why can't you be pleasant with me? I've never robbed you."

"No? You have admitted hiding the truth from me and now that it is thrown in my face from every direction and I try to reconcile myself, you don't like it." So saying she walked over to the piano and instead of her usual sacred hymns she began to paly "She Stood and Chewed Her Gum".

"Oh, for God sake, cut that out. What's got into you?" her father cried boistrously.

"I am the new woman. I am through with old fashioned hymns. I am going to play modern music." So saying she switched over on the 'Shade of the Old Apple Tree'.

"Why don't you play hymns? Play me that one you played the other night. That one about the dark night."

"That is sentimental. I'm a live woman now. And life and sentiment can't go together. Beside whose night is dark? And you don't care if any body is far from home." Then she broke into singing "When the Guinea Plays the Organ on the Side Walks of New York."

Gus Anderson's hands dropped by his side. A great big tear rolled down his fat florid face. It was perhaps the first time that his daughter had ever seen a tear in his eyes. It was more than she could bear. She jumped up from the piano stool and threw herself into his lap entwining both of her arms about his neck. "I was just foolin' Daddy" she cooed into his ears. "I was a teasin' you. Just showing you that you do not mean the life you pretend to live. That's all. I want to be Daddy's little girl. Only I want Daddy to let me know life as it is. Don't feed me on lies just because you love me."

And old Gus entwined her in his heavy arms holding her close to his breast. "I'll be damned if we are not all sinners. Even when we try to do good we raise hell. But little one mustn't dissapoint her Daddy. Always be good and Daddy will give her every thing he can. No matter what she ever does, Daddy is goin' to be his little girl's best friend. Do anything for her."

He had no sooner said this than Olive disengaged herself from his embrace and ran her fingers through his hair. "I is goin' to ask you for something right now, and if you do it I'll comb out all your dandruff with a nice new comb."

"Shoot! I'm ready for slaughter!" said her father. "What is it you want?"

"First I must tell you something. I met this boy in front of Higbees this afternoon, and I talked to him. He told me he wanted to get back into jail because his partners were still in. Funny I never thought of that. I might have known that he wouldn't leave them. He told me that he had only twelve cents in his pocket and no where to go. This is a fearfully cold night and I'm worried about him. I told him to go and wait in the pool hall and I would go and see if you would do something for him. Really you ought to Daddy. Don't you think so?" Then pinching his nose and drawing it away down she said, "Call up the pool hall and let them arrange a place for him. Won't you, Daddy?"

Old Gus just laughed. "Woman, woman, its no wonder Adam fell. Guess I'll go and see the kid myself. Bring me my artics, coat and cap and I'll go and see him. Kind of interested in what my future son-in-law looks like." At this she pouted beautifully but hurried to get the articles required.

Half an hour later Gus Anderson walked into the pool hall of Erickson and Johnson. He asked the man behind the cigar case to point out the stranger which the other did. He then walked over to Jack and introduced himself as the county sheriff. He told him that he had come to see why he did not obey the court's order to leave the town. To which the boy replied that the court had no power to issue such an order seeing that his term was not yet expired and he was not the recipient of executive clemency, or other legal process estting aside the commitment order of the court.

Anderson soon discovered that he could not bluff the boy with legal phraseology. A trick which he had often played on the farmer. So he simply settled down into what was ostensibly a pleasant conversation, but which was in realty an endeavor on his part to learn who and what the kid was. In this he succeeded fairly well. The boy told him that he was reared in the counthern part of the state and that he was enjoying his first experience in working in the harvest away from home. He also told him that what they did at Anamoose they did at Westfield, and that it was his purpose to help organize the harwest workers in such a way as to make the tax payers pastime of arresting and fining men rather an expensive luxury. He told him that instead of scattering the workers would come back to the same towns and that the farmers would pay increased wages and reduce production for the inconveniences the workers had suffered on account of their greed. This of course greatly interested the solid citizen. He urged the boy to go back home and help his father cultivate the farm. He warned the boy that there was nothing to be gained by sacrificing ones self for a bunch of worthless bums. "You belong to us" he averred and pointed out to the boy that any effort to organize havest hands was treason to his own people. He pointed out that the farmers life was hard enough as it was, with the burden of taxes, interest and crop uncertainty; that if the workers were organized it would mean shorter hours, higher wages, and more costly food, all of which the farmers couldn't stand and they would go broke with the result that the workers would have no job. He endeavored to show him that organizing the harvest workers would destroy the harvest business and cause every field to over grow with grass.

This argument would have appealed to Jack as logical two months before but not now. He pointed out to Mr. Anderson that bread was a social necessity. That there was a vast difference between what the farmer got for wheat and what the consumer paid for bread. That this difference went into the pockets of mortgage-holding bankers, elevater owners, railroads, commission men, millers, wholesalers, retailers, etc. He also pointed out that by the collective ownership of alnd where the farmer could get as much as he needed for the payment of government tax, would eliminate the mortgage holder; that what the mortgage holder now got could go to the harvest hands and help him to live as befitted a human being. He pointed out that the commission men and the board of trade could be eliminated and the money which they drew out of the wheat business could go to the farmer and the farm worker. He then reviewed the over capitalization of railroads as well as of miller and elevator companies and convinced Anderson that here too was a tremendous source of waste which might go to useful labor. And he finished it all by making a prediction that the workers and tenant farmers of the state would some day rise against all these grafting agencies and sweep them out of existence.

Anderson listened to him with an indulgent smile upon his face. "Some dream kid, some dream. Dime novels have spoiled many a youth. I'm convinced that you're not a bad sort of a guy and I'm going to be good to you. My daughter told me that you was broke. Now I'm going to get you a bed and pay for your meals at the hotel. And give you back what the judge fined you, if you'll promise me to go home on the first train out."

To this Jack replied that as a citizen of the state he could not be exiled. That he was going to stay in Anamoose, in jail or out until his partners were released. And that even then they might buy out Judge Duffy's blind pig and become respective citizens.

Anderson now came right down to business. He asked him how much he would take to leave town to which the replied that there were certain unbuyable things, such as loyalty to friends, to principles, and access to the hearts of others.

"You're quite right kid. I thought that every man had his price much or little, but I have run up against it the last few days. There are unbuyable things. And the hell of it is the things we want most we cannot buy.

The Lesson of Albany

By a singular circumstance the farce ''[illegible]al'' of the five socialist assemblymen at Albany came to a conclusion on All Fools' Day. It is fitting that The final conclusion of this travesty on justice and representative government received such a sitting. It also happens that the vote of the wily members of the Assembly upon the seating of the socialists was set for one day after the last day upon which the Governor could legaly call a special election to fill their seats were they found guilty of the charges against them, thus precluding their reelection at the hands of an outraged constituency as was true in the Berger case. The ''trial'' ended as planned. The frame up worked like a charm.

It is folly feel remorseful at this blow directed at the principel of representative government. Rather may we feel grateful that the hand of the buccaneers has been brought into view and the class character of capitalist government shown up so glaringly.

....While we would LIKE to see that principel embedded in the foundation of the government so deeply that by no means could it be pried lose by the capitalist conspirators, we realize that government is a class institution—erected in the interests of one class and against the interests of all other classes. This is as true of the government of the United States as of any monarchy. the uselessness of remorse becomes at once apparent. Whatever was intended of the provisions of the Constitution 140 years ago, its interpretation has passed under control of the capitalist class. So whatever be its interpretations, they are but in conformity with the needs of capitalism. The henchmen of capitalism at Albany sensed danger in the election of socialists to seats in the sacred body of the State Assembly. As a result a scaffold was at once erected upon which the socialists and apparently the Socialist Party as well were at once strung up.

The department of the socialists and their attorneys during the proceedings was any thing but calculated to strengthen their position before the court of last resort—the working class, whatever their conduct was calculated to win at the hands of the judges. Apparently the Socialist Party lost sight of the larger jury in its desire to win the approval of the one sitting at Albany. They sacrificed the last of their revolutionary tenets for the sake of their seats. They attempted to barter their revolutionary soul for a mess of pottage—and didn't get it.

Since the trial began the gaze of the workingclass of America has been riveted upon it. For upon its outcome depended to a great degree the immediate future development of a working class tactic. The radical, ''red'' element of Labor has been pointing out the uselessness of parliamentary action by the working class to achieve its emancipation. And now the capitalist class in solmn conclave prove beyond contradiction all its claims! It has been teaching that the present State is a machine for the perpetuation of capitalism and could not be used for the production of any thing else even tho the workers should be successful at the elections. The Albany trial has proved it.

The lack of revolutionary attitude of the socialists at the trial coupled with the utter disregard of the principles of representative government by the persecutors will have a tremendous effect upon the minds of American workers who have been schooled in faith in the socalled freedom of the ballo t, representative government etc. They must now swing to the Left—for their is nowhere else they can go. Had the Socialist Party shown the revolutionary integrity which a working class party must have to lead the working class out of bondage—it would have come out of the fray with at least a moral victory to its credit.

With its leaderhaip at stake, in fact its whole future as a proletarian party—it played for small stakes, played out its whole hand for five paltry seats in the New York Assembly — and lost.

The Albany trial marks a milestone on the long road the workers have trod toward the New Day. It will be easier going now with Albany behind and showing the way—class action on the industrial field.

More Punch and Judy

The stage is being set for another grand stand play for the benefit of Henry Dubb and his sister Henrietta A complete paraphernalia of deception is being erected. From colored lights, villians, gay decievers, platidunious moralizers, jokesters, climaxes wherein the heroi[illegible]he dear ''public'' is saved from immediate and violent rape, the whole fake sitting is being put together and heralded in the capitalist press as the last word in ''good government'' that is to be seen on the stage of present day life.

We refer to the latest war—that which has (maybe) been declared upon high rents. Doubtless it is presumed that Henry has forgotten all about the success of the great war upon the high cost of living which was declared by President Wilson and a retinue of political parrots from the Whitehouse down to the village dog catchers some six months ago. Henry has not won the reputation of having a profound memory. The same old gag revarnished occassionally, will serve over and over again to entertain him and keep his mentality from serious things, such as his own interests for instance.

The extend of Henry's gullibity is unlimited. This fact is well understood by all politicians. It is their reliance when they face their constituents just previous to election. If it were not for Henry's enormous ability to fool himself and be fooled such problems as ''high rents and high cost of living'' would never be. If Henry was gifted with horsesense, he would see to it that the houses of the nation belonged to the builders and useful producers instead of speculators. That would settle the question of ''rents''. A nation of renters is a nation of Henry Dubbs who have sold their birthright for the privilege of being flattered by the political benchmen of Henry's exploiters.

One would think to read the daily press that the entire aramament of the nation was being brought into play against the renters of the shacks and warrens in which Henry ''lives'', procreates and rots. All this sound and fury have a hollow echo to any one acustomed to use their heads for else than a hat rack. It will soon pass away leaving emptiness and a few million gaping Henry's in its wake. That will be the net result except that additional proof will be had that Henry is still asleep. Having succeded to such an amazing extend in reducing the high cost of living, same crew of charlatans now mount the stage for another Punch and Judy show—the same audience applauds the slapstick, makebelieve. It thinks that sure enough, by some mysterious legerdemain a great change is to take immediate effect and a tiny bit of the heavy load of existence will be lifted from its bent spine.

Listen, Henry, there's a ''nigger in the wood pile''. While you are gaping in wonder at the promises of the politicians to make life habitable for you, depending upon them to create conditions decent for you—you are forgetting to rely upon yourself, forgetting that no power on earth nor in Heaven but your own organized power as a class can make this a fit world for the workers.

And when you forget that fact you are lost. The workers have the power, then use it. Throw the exploiters off your backs. Take the world and all that's in it and make it fit for human beings. Make it impossible for an exploiter to live.

CHART FOR CHAPTER III.

EPOCHS OF HISTORY ACCORDING TO EACH INTERPRETATION.

THE THREE GREAT CONCEPTS OR INTERPRETATIONS OF HISTORY—	THEOLOGICAL	CREATION TO FLOOD FLOOD TO CHRIST CHRIST TO PRESENT DAY.
	IDEOLOGICAL	ANCIENT MEDIAEVAL MODERN
	SCIENTIFIC	SAVAGERY BARBARISM CIVILIZATION

CAPTER III.

A concept of history is an interpretation of history from a certain point of view. The point of view is generally determined by the material interests of the historian.

There are three great concepts of history, Theological, Ideological and Scientific.

The Theological concept is the oldest interpretation of the happenings of history, and is based upon the assumption that everything happens in accordance with the Will of a Creator. This concept like everything else in the universe has been subject to Evolutionary process.

During the childhood of the race, when the minds of men were undeveloped, when none but the simplest ideas could be grasped, man had many gods, each of whom could do but one thing. Thus we find them worshiping gods of fire, winds, thunder, storms, smoke, water, etc. Later as their mental abilities developed they increased the abilities of their gods, and thereby reduced their number, until eventually a concept of Deity was evolved which embodied in itself all the gods of Ancient Polytheism.

In other words instead of a concept of many gods, each of whom could do a single thing, they evolved a concept of a single god who could do many things, eventually a god all-wise and all-powerful who could do ALL things.

This concept carried within itself a fatal contradiction. A god of perfect good could not be the author of evil, so it became necessary to evolve another god, the author of evil. Today in the theological world we find a duality of gods, a good god, author of all beneficience and a ''bad'' god, author of all evil, called Devil.

Those who subscribe to the Theological concept of history are inconsistent, for instead of blaming their self-made devil for the evils which afflict them, they blame each other and build jails and penitentiaries to hold those who in their opinion have gone contrary to the Divine Will.

The Ideological conception of history, often referred to as the ''Great Man Theory'' teaches that in each generation great men are born into the world who by the sheer force of their greatness and personality cause great changes to come into the world which makes for human betterment. This theory is the basis of the Hero-Worship of to-day. It carries within itself several contradictions, for if great men are born who influence the course of history for good, then it is but logical that there are those born who influence it for evil. This is the basis for assassinations, the assassin laboring under the delusion that he is removing an evil from the world.

Another contradiction is, that if great men influence the world for good, other equally great men can influence it for evil, thus the influence of the one would be canceled by the other and progress would be impossible.

All reasoning, if such it may be called, of most of current fiction, some sermonizers and most public lecturers and librarians are based upon an assumption of the correctness of the great man theory.

The Ideological Concept of history is taught in the public schools. The Theological Concept is taught in the Sunday Schools, yet there are thousands of grade school teachers who teach in the public schools on week days from the Ideological concept and in the Sunday Schools from the Theological Concept, and never notice the contradiction!

The Scientific Interpretation of history, generally known as the Materialist Conception of History, teaches that changes in social structure are due to changes of method in the acquisition of the necessities of life.

According to the Theological Concept, Gods cause change.

According to the Ideological Concept, Great Men cause change.

According to the Scientific Concept, changes in the the methods of production cause changes in the social structure.

The clearest statement of the Materialist Conception of History that has come to the notice of the authors is that found on page 707 the Communist Manifesto by Marx and Engels. (Kerr Edition.)

''In every historical epoch, the prevailing mode of economic production and exchange, and the social organization necessarily following from it, form the basis upon which is built up, and from which alone can be explained, the political and intellectual history of that epoch—.''

An epoch of history is a division of historical time based upon the length of time any given historical phenomenon lasts *)

Each interpretation of history has its own divisions of historical epochs. The Theological interpretation divides historical time into three great epochs as follows: from Creation to the flood, from the flood to the birth of Christ and from Christ to the present day. We still use the Theological interpretation in our measurement of time.

The Ideological interpretation divides historical time into three great epochs, Ancient, Mediaeval, and Modern.

The Scientific Interpretation also divides historical time into three great epochs, Savagery, Barbarism and Civilization.

*) The International Geological Congress adopted the following time scale:
ERA
EPOCH
AGE

''One of the most striking differences between human and geologic history is the extreme brevity of one as compared with the vast time represented by the other. Human history is to be measured by some thousands of years while geologic history must be measured by at least tens of millions of years.

A recent event, geologically speaking, like that of the building of the coast range mountains, or the carving out of a tremendous canyon like the Grand Canyon of the Colorado in Arizona, required hundreds of thousands if not a few millions, of years.''—W. J. Miller in ''Introduction to Historical Geology.''

Human history begins with the AGE of lower savagery.

Lower Savagery was an EPOCH in the Pliocene PERIOD of the Cenozoic ERA.

For a chart showing the main divisions of geologic time see:

CHART OF GEOLOGIC ERAS AND PERIODS

1. Archeozoic Era.	Archian
2. Proterozoic Era..	Algonkian period
3. Paleozoic Era (Primary)	Cambrian period. Ordbvician period Silurian period. Devonian period. Carboniferous period. Permian period.	LOWER OR MISSISSIPPIAN. UPPER OR PENNSYLVANIAN.
4. Mesozoic Era (Secondary)	Triassic period. Jurassic period. Cretaceous period.
5. Cenozoic Era (Tertiary)	Eocene period. Oligocene period. Miocene period. Pliocene period. Pleistocene period.

The names of Eras follow a definite plan, depending upon the great life stages. Thus Archeozoic means literally, primitive or beginning life; Proterozoic means ''earlier or less primitive life''; Mesozoic means ''intermdiate life'' and Cenozoic means ''recent life''. The period names do not follow such a definite plan but are usually named after some place or lochtion. Human life did not appear until the Pliocene period.

SPARKS.

A rebel writes—The····Co. will not operate May 1st, we are going to celebrate. And we say that even the dummest worker should come to life on May 1st and celebrate the Russian victories over Capitalism. Tis tru there is little to celebrate in the U. S. but there may be.

If you have to work May 1st—you can square yourself by giving that day's wages to the Movement.

Another comrade writes, ''Enclosed find $3.00 for sub cards. I have been out of a job for six months on account of too much gab.'' We presume he was prone to discuss the interests of the workers instead of those of his boss—all of which was very displeasing to him, so the capitalist dictatorship was brought into play. But this order proves that it takes more than one shot to will a RED.

And a miner writes this warning, 'A miner's stomache can not be filled with promises''. No, and they will refuse to ''eat grass'' as the workers of France were admonished to do before the Revolution.

Comrade Chapman of Toledo is around again for more literature premiums for the sub cards he is selling. Many comrades are building substantial libraries in this manner. You can too.

Isn't that handy—A half price combination of 8 pamphlets and 35 copies of Slander of the Toilers all for one measely dollar. Robert Dodge of Portsmouth is one of many comrades who see it that way. He sends a sub. also.

Up in Canada there is a Toiler booster too. Comrade Iverson of Bawlf, Alberta sends $5.00 worth of subs. and gets a premium.

The Youngstown Toiler Boosters are making headway. A little effort on the part of a few netted $10.50 worth of subs. And we are promised that all the energies of these comrades are not used up in one day either. Another try is scheduled, in fact many of them.

Twenty one subscriptions were received from Local Ashtabula last week.

Comrade Phillips rounded up 5 subscribers last week. All of Adena, O.

Comrade Hinton of Akron, is on the job again. This time with a list of three.

Yours for a Red Germany, writes comrade Walchli. We don't know if there is a connection between that wish and the $8.00 worth of subs he sends us or not. Perhaps there is. We rather think so.

Comrade Maxwell of Sandusky remits for three subs. this week.

Comrade Pries of Lorain finds a way to redeem himself for neglect in sending in his renewal. He gets six more. Can you beat it?

Skygac Finds a King in Disguise

— By Skygac —

Remember that good old hymn we used to sing, about a Child of a King? Quoting from memory it went something like this:

> ''My Father is rich in houses and land
> He holdeth the wealth of the world > in his band.''

It now appears that the child has grown up and come into his heritage, wholly imaginary of course, but, well anyhow, here is the yarn, figure it out for yourself.

While browsing thru the pages of one of the current magazines, I found the story of the King in disguise. It seems there was a poor dissatisfied workingman who complained bitterly of his cruel and unjust employer. ''Every day something happened to put him in a fury of indignation, and every day his impulse of revolt was blocked by the dead wall of fear.'' ''If he angered his boss, what about his job, his wife and children, his old age?'' He had to swallow his wrath and that gave him indigestion.

A great doctor was called, who diagnosed the case as a mental abberation, and, but let the Doctor talk;

''We started with the assumption that since he had to work for an employer, he was a slave. We agreed, next, that it was in the nature of taskmasters to be cruel. He was a humble slave, serving a cruel taskmaster. Good. As an honest slave, he would do an honest day's work for his day's wages, put the money in his pocket and go home. But there he could throw off the livery of slavery. With his wife and children, in his own home among his friends, dispensing the fruits of his toil he could be a king. That was his real life. That was his real happiness.

''And then when he returned to his work, why not go as a king in disguise? Why not accept the terms of his slavery as a disguised king would, submitting to them amusedly until he could drop the livery of his slavery and return to his kingdom?''

''Why not indeed? He tried it and it cured his indigestion. The boss cannot irritate him now. He has escaped from the evil of work-resentment.''

There you have it plain as mud.

If you are dissatisfied, you are ''suffering from the evil of work resentment'' and the cure is, ''accept the terms of your slavery as a disguised king would, and submit to them AMUSEDLY'' but above all, SUBMIT.

It IS rather amusing.

If you are class conscious and a real man you naturally would resent any system of society which allowed private ownership of all the sources of raw material, thus placing whole sections of the workingclass in a position where they have to wear the livery of slavery.

But the remedy is plain. Just imagine yourself a king in disguise. If you have been worrying over the constantly rising cost of living and wondering how you are to get Irene a much needed new pair of shoes, and rubbers for Gracie and a new suit for George, when the present pay check is not big enough to pay the rent and grocery bill, don't worry any longer. Just imagine yourself a king in disguise and then you can draw on the king's wardrobe for the needed clothes and shoes. The boss would much rather you would thus draw upon your own imagination than upon his swollen profits!

If the wife shows any signs of being ''peevish'' because that year-before-last gingham dress is worn out and cotton now is higher than gingham was then, just slip her the information that you are a king in disguise and by virtue of the marriage certificate she is a queen, that ought to please her.

A king in disguise! A wonderful remedy for the evil of work resentment. But that is the kind of piffle that is eagerly sought, bought and printed in the leading (misleading?) magazines of today. A clever idea forsooth, yet methinks it is lacking in a very grave particular, and is susceptable of improvement, to wit;. While you are imagining yourself a king in disguise you had better imagine the time to be in the eighteenth century. The King business flourished better in those days.

If you go around daydreaming nowadays you are apt to lose step with the rush of modern industry and find yourself without a job, your place taken by some more awake and alert toiler. Then again you are apt to come in contact with some wide awake class-conscious toiler who is conscious of the robbery of the whole king, capitalist and wage-system business and doing all he can to awaken others to the danger and you are apt to find yourself without a kingdom and will be a king in disgrace. A king without a kingdom is a king in disgrace.

The evil of work-resentment is not an evil but a positive good. It gave to the world the measure of progress which we have made. It is the driving force back of every improvement in labor saving machinery which does the most of the work of the world today.

A king in disguise is a king in disgrace.

One dissatisfied slave means more to the progress of mankind than a dozen satisfied kings.

Wake up! You are not a king in disguise but a slave in chains.

MEXICAN POLITICAL SITUATION

Will the July presidential election in Mexico bring revolution?

Many believe it will. Undoubtedly American capitalism would like to have such a result, so it could have an excuse for intervention.

Some time ago when Gen. Gonzales who is the candidate of the reactionaries and the American financial interests for president of Mexico, asked Gen. Alvaro Obregon if he would sign a statement promising not to resort to arms in case of defeat at the polls. Obregon declined to commit himself. Enemies of Obregon declared this constituted proof of his determination to make himself president by force if he could not do so at the polls. Friends of Obregon retort that this is not true but that Obregon will certainly abide by the result if the elections are honestly conducted. However, they do not expect that such will be the case. They believe that the Carranza government will count out Obregon no matter if he has an overwhelming majority of votes and they say it is because of this belief that Obregon has refused to make any promise as to what he will and will not do after election.

The choice of the Carranza government today is unmistakably Ambassador Ignacio Bonillas. Originally it seemed to be Gonzales but it appeared that Gonzales was too reactionary and too much under the influence of American Financial interests, also that he would be too weak a candidate. Carranza's support then shifted to Bonillas.

The machinery of the government today is being utilized to the fullest possible extent to help elect Bonillas and ''El Demacrata'', ''El Civilista'' and ''La Republica'', all of which are financed more or less by govern ment money, are actively supporting Bonillas. It is said that Bonillas was picked by Carranza himself in a conference with the Ambassador in Cuatro Cienegas, the president's home town, after it had been decided to withdraw support from Gonzales. Obregon mon also assert that the Bonillas boom was officially sprung by a handful of government clerks in Quaretaro, the most backward state of central Mexico, which they claim is another evidence of the star-chamber nature of the Ambassador's candidacy. They charge that Carranza is building up a huge espionage system consisting of spies and censors, whose purpose is to hamper Obregon's campaign and frame up the election.

Both Bonillas and Obregon are making vigorous appeals for the support of the Radical elements and labor unions altho so far it appears that Obregon has the larger share of them. On account of the fact that local A. F. of L. unions are aligned mainly with Obregon, the Bonillas papers are boosting the I. W. W. enthusiastically as well as the Communist Party, which stands for the I. W. W. brand of unionism. Gonzales makes no effort to get labor support, being very frank in his opposition to Radicalism and even Liberalism.

If Obregon is defeated on July 4th and his followers believe the election was a frame-up, there is no question that trouble will follow. There are some who believe that the administration has no intention of interfering with the popular choice and that all this talk of coercion and fraud is part of a clever scheme on the part of Obregon to get the masses in an angry frame of mind so that he can put across a revolution successfully.

This Sale will positively take place on Whether this is so or not, it would appear at this stage of the game that Obregon has a majority of the people with him and that a resort to arms would result in his triumph. New developments, of course, may change these probabilities. A little while ago, the Carranza government was backing Gonzales, and Bonillas was an inconsequential factor. Today the situation is quite different with the government backing Bonillas who is now Obregon's chief rival.

WHO AR 100% PATRIOTS?

fiteers would be in the penitentiary for life, instead of running at large grinding down the poor.

We suggest, as the common people furnished most of the money for the Liberty Loans and the Red Cross that those profiteers be made to pay the balance of the war debt for they made millions while labor was giving their lives. Besides it is certainly as justifiable to conscript as it is to conscript life.

LONDON.—More than 1,500,000,000 English workers are now affiliated ing the decision taken at the con- with the American I.. W. W. follow- ference of the Workers' Committees and Shop Stewards of Great Britain. The delegates voted to indorse the principle of industrial unionism and to express their solidarity with the American form of that idea.

The shop steward movement grew up in the spring of 1915 in the shipyards of the Clyde. The trade unions, in an excess of patriotism, had given up more of labor's rights than the workers could endure. So the ship builders cut straight across the lines of unionism and organized every shop as a unit, with the rank and file as the dictator.

The movement spread like wildfire throughout the shipbuilding industry, the munitions factories and other great industries. It established its position by a number of successful strikes.

After the war the shop steward movement won the allegiance of the triple alliance of transport, mine and railway workers, and has continued its rapid growth.

An Enemy of Mankind.

Ignorance is the enemy of mankind. To remain ignorant is to make one's self an enemy of all men and women. Knowledge gives power and without knowledge, the working-class can never gain nor retain power. To remain ignorant is to remain a slave to other's will and opinions. The workers must learn to view the world from the standpoint of the useful producer. They must supplant their master-class teachings with the teachings of Science interpreted from the proletarian viewpoint. Workers who refuse to read the literature of the proletarian revolution that is now sweeping capitalism from the face of the earth are a loadstone about the neck of Labor.

The literature listed below will educate you in the CLASS STRUGGLE without a knowledge of which you can never assist your fellow workers to win and hold the world. ALL POWER TO THE WORKERS—but it must come thru knowledge.

"The Mediumship of Farmer Riley".

By SYDNEY FLOWER, LL. D.

This is a book of sixty large magazine pages, in which is related in detail the observations of the author during a two weeks' stay at the home of the medium, James Wesley Riley, better known as „Farmer Riley,“ near Marcellus, Mich. If you have ever asked youreslf the question, ''Does man live beyond the grave?'' a perusal of this book may perhaps assist you in the formulation of an intelligent answer. The book is as interesting as a romance. In his investigations Mr. Flower rigidly adheres to a program which absolutely precludes all possibility of physical agency in the production of the manifestations. The following synopsis will convey a general idea of the manifestations occuring during this remarkable investigation of psychic phenomena:

Jem Riley. The Beginning of Things. The Camp. The Test. The Start. Early Recollections. A spirit Playmate. The Mother Love. The voice. The Materialized Form. Getting to Work. Home Sittings. What Political Prisoners Think of Amnesty.

Leavenworth, Kansas Apr. 4 1920

MY DEAR ALLISON:—

A letter from a penitentiary is no longer a thing out of the ordinary. The only strange thing about a letter from a victim of the cowardly subterfuge of commercial highwaymen, the Espionage Act, is the fact that such a law can be seen on the statutes of a nation, hitherto declared to be founded on justice, I place my verb in the preterit, (hitherto), purposely, for no person with any intelligence and moral honor, will affirm that any such thing as justice obtains now. Judging from the description given by Hitchcock on the prison at Atlanta, I am disposed to compliment myself on my location. We have no "enforced" attendance at "divine service," and this to my materialistic and rationalistic mind, is an improvement. No one attends any church service, or "religious worship" unless he elects to do so, although we have all kinds of piffel from ouija board supporters to the "Faith of Abraham."

Another very marked difference between the two prisons is found in the general treatment of men. Any man can write whatever he pleases so long as he is not obscene, profane, insane or something else naturally inspired by his surroundings. There are about four hundred men here who refuse to accept the charge that they are criminals. In spite of the pious silly stuff put out by Pontius Pilate, the Quaker ex-honorable custodian to the contrary we know that we are victims of class hate and political combination, and that our sins consist of pleading for the object which our sacred oracle declared to be the reason for plunging this nation into the murder—fest of Europe—democracy. But in spite of the bloody lessons of the criminal profiteers, we still see workingmen clinging to the nasty snout of the elephant. the ugly prehistoric relic of the Stone Age, or fondling the tail of the stupid mule adopted as the mascot of a party of intrigue, mob rule, ignorance and fear. There is more hope of a maddog exhibiting the disposition of love than there is of a workingman finding his rights supported in the clique of the elephant; and a rattle snake in "dog days" is a safer plaything for a baby, than is the mob headed by the mule for the defense of justice to labor.

"Samuel the prophet," running around the country talking about "rewarding our friend and punishing our enemies", is either a stupid old ignoramus, or he is the most calloused hearted hypocrite on earth, (except one, and his long illness, declared by many to be a mental break down, forbids me even hinting at the identity of the exception). Labor has not a friend outside of the ranks of conscious solidarity of material interests with it. Any exception to that test rule is a sentimentalist, and in a crisis will join the Russels, Sparges, Mitchells and Sinclairs. All this talk about "Amnesty" is wasted breath and energy. Wall Street is against it, and the administration of things political, is as completely the reflected desire of the bloody handed jingoes, as is the image reflected from a mirror the features of the man before it. Leonard Wood is the full incarnation of the system and the age, and from the gentleman with the wrecked vision to the last white washed flunkie of capitalism, the whole cold blooded bunch of tory stool pigeons secretly indorse his efforts to win the nomination for president, and every act and word contribute to the success of the scheme. If Wood is not nominated it will be because the munition vendors, the bond skavers and trade grabbers fear that there is more real manhood in this nation than at present seems to be the case, and the flunkie will be picked with the hope of putting an awakening set of Henry Dubbs back to sleep. His theory of "shooting or shipping" is the legitimate philosophy of militarism. A young, innocent youth snatched from home and sent three thousand miles to have his heart blown into jelly and his brains into froth, a bullet hole in his breast and his limbs blown off while his mother is evicted from a rented shack by some hog joweled speculator because the poor creature cannot pay ten prices for the ram shackeled hovel is not the kind of Americanism entitled to the "100%" brand, but, according to the open charges being scattered over the country just now, that is just about what we have selected to head the machine for the next few years.

The tap root of the infamous tree of which militarism is the most essential support, is the profit system, and the men who are playing a game of political deck stacking under pretended hostility to armament and national murder will support the most heartless jingo at a general election after the financial highwaymen purchase his nomination in the primaries. Borah said as much in his speech at Detroit recently. Solomas the ancient polygamist whom "reverend" gentlemen quote with approval understood the thing when he squinted up one eye and looked sweet at the ebony colored girl from Egypt whose ancestors had experienced some trouble with a general strike of the one big union led by Col. Moses, said: "The ox knoweth his master's crib". These modern political oxen will bellow all over the pasture as to which shall be the main bull, but they will return to the crib after the bellowing. Every man in prison for expressing political opinions at variance with those sanctified looking wolves who carry a bible in one

The Soldier and the Bonus

— Bill Smith. —

By the time the picture in our weekly art gallery meets the eyes of our readers,—Congress may have passed a Soldiers Bonus of some sort. But nevertheless it still presents the moral that it was intended to convey.

It will be readily recalled that when the last loan was issued,—the 5th or Victory they named it,—the public was informed that at least one, and perhaps two more might be required to cover expenditures incident to the war. No one outside the workings of the invisable government at Washington could tell the reason for these,—but as all know, they were never issued.

And the methods used to float these loans! Time is clarifying things that were vague and uncertain in the confusion, the clamor and hysterical shrieking, that was every where during the war. The brutal tactics used—the black page that a decent person would infamous persecutions—will make a scarcely wish to read. The passing time is now showing that these bonds were forced upon those who could ill afford them,—while the vicious hungry bands of capitalistic avarice were to profit by them! Thievery then,—as now—wore the halo of patriotism! Many will recall the maledictions brought down upon a high Brazilian official who wrote from Chicago to his wife in South America, disputing our claims to democracy,—and saying of these loans,—"America has 30,000 millionaires alone who could well absorb these loans with no great inconvenience,—but instead they are being forced upon the laboring classes, and for a very obvious reasons." Do you wonder that a paid capitalistic press should not thouroughly damn a man for spilling the beans like this!

The market price for Liberty Bonds in the New York market to-day—for a hundred dollar bond—runs from $90.50 to $96.50—the $90.50 being the 3rd loan of 4½% and the $96.50 being the 5th of 4¾%. It would insult your intelligence to explain why these countless thousands of bonds are on the market, as you well know they are sold Communist Labor Party Battles in Court.

Okland, California.
March 31, 1920

DEAR COMRADE:—

Received the copy of the Toiler you sent me to day and was certainly glad to get the news and to know that you are still on the job.

We are not so fortunate out here. Oakland was immune from the attacks of the plutes during the war but they are making up for lost time now. They do not like the platform and program of the C. L. P. More proof that it is a good one, so they have arranged to bundle us all off to jail. Comrade Anita Whitney, of our S. E. C. was the first to be convicted. She managed to get out on bail. Comrade John Wieler was the next to be convicted in the worst kind of a kangaroo court. Comrade Whitney was convicted on one count and got from one to 14 years but comrade Wieler was convicted on four counts and got just a little joilt of from one to fourteen on each count which the law did not provide should run concurrently so it amounts to only 56 years. And while Comrade Wieler sat with two little boys in his arms and another close by the judge handed him the 56 years without a blush. it is improbable that he will be admitted to bail pending an appeal.

Comrade James Dolsen, State Sec. Treas. is now on trial and it is going into its second week. He is defending himself and I can assure you he will get away with it if any lawyer can altho he has never studied law. They are going to earn their money before they put him over. With a cool, placid smile on his face he keeps them snarling and barking continualy. He threw the court into a fever when he asked a prospective juror if he would convict him for advocating "lawful terrorism". "What's that, what's that?" growled the prosecutor and judge in the same breath. (The law provides punishment for advocating UNLAWFUL terrorism). Anyway, it took the judge 15 minutes to sustain the objections.

Seven more of us here in Oakland are slated for the jute mill. My case will be called tomorrow, the 1-st but will probably be put over till after Comrade Dolsen's case is out of the way. J. Ragsdale's case is set for the 9th of April, Edrie B. Smith's for the 15th. C. A. Tobey's for the 20; J. E. Snyder's for May 3rd with the cases of Alanson Sessions, J. G. Reed, Clarence Tobey and P. B. Cowdery waiting a definite date. At least a dozen fellow workers are already at San Quiention so by the time we arrive we ought to have a goodly committee of welcome.

Naturally as we are all supeoned in all the trials, we are spending most of our time in the courts but at that

BIG BUSINESS BUYS THE CHURCH

— Skygac. —

There is something inherently wrong with any religion to which men must be driven against their better judgement and something doubly and damnably wrong with any religion which has to depend upon the millions of the millionaires for the spread of its propaganda.

This is an age of propaganda. The late war withessed the development of the art of skillful propaganda to a degree of perfection never before thought possible, much less obtained. The various "drives" (drive suggests driver and a flock or herd to be driven) of the war-time period taught the drivers many skillful little tricks in the art of handling the mob—the common herd. There were drives for the red cross, drives for the Salvation Army, drives for the Y. M. C. A., drives for the K. Cs., drives for Community service, drives for war budgets and community chests, drives for the various liberty loans. The lessons gained in this way are now being applied to the Interchurch World Movement, an organization ostensibly formed to spread the gospel of the meek and lowly Jesus, but in its advertising campaign it has repeatedly "spilled the beans" and allowed its REAL purpose to become apparent. The I. W. M. is composed of thirty of the leading sects and creeds and financed by the big business men of the civilized world.

In an advertising campaign of such magnitude that more than a half million dollars has been set aside for advertisements in the Japanese press alone, a campaign so far reaching that even the little local county papers of more than two thousand counties get a whack at the appropriation, they have allowed the truth to slip in to such an extent that the plan and purpose of the Interchurch World Movement stands revealed in all the hideous nakedness of its prostitution with mammon.

As a nation we are a people of great faith. We take our religion, our polities and our economics on faith. Somebody told us something in church or Sunday School and we believed it. We did not accept it AFTER a thorough investigation as to its truth or falsity, we simply grew up in the faith and knew it was so because somebody said it was so and that settled it. In the same manner we grew up Republicans believing in a high protective tariff prosperity and the full dinner pail, or Democrats believing in free trade, not because we knew and could EXPLAIN what it was all about but because it had been the faith of our forefathers and was "good enough for me".

We got our knowledge of values and economics from the same source in the same manner. Everybody KNEW (?) that both capital and labor was necessary in the production of commodities and that capital gave labor opportunities for employment and hence the growth of capitalist industries was the thing to be encouraged, and we believed it—as a nation. True there were some—more daring or fare-seeing than the rest of the herd, some who were not content with running in the same rut wherin their fathers ran, who tried to tell us as did Lincoln, "Labor was prior to and antedated capital and was deserving of the greater consideration"; that the worker in effect paid the capitalist employer for the privelege of being allowed to work, but these few were usually hooted down by the unthinking mob, who always hoot at any new idea just as certainly as a dog will bay the moon.

There are many "friends of labor" (besides the politicians who are seeking "the labor vote") who believe that labor should not mix in politics and above all should not "attack religion" holding religion to be a private matter and any discussion of it liable to be a means whereby the solidarity of labor might be destroyed. In my opinion these "friends of labor" have never analyzed the plan, purpose or function of religion. Those who have analyzed the plan, purpose and function of religion have found it to be the most efficient method whereby a master class may keep a slave class in subjection and contended with its slavery.

The church in the past has always preached, "obedience to those who are your masters" and upheld whatever monarch, king or ruler who happened to be in power. Today as ever in the past, the church is the bulwark standing between the "respectable" robbers of labor and the wrath of outraged toil. The advertisements of the Interchurch World Movement admit this in a manner most refreshingly. In the "Literary Digest" for March 27th 1920 there appears a two page advertisement that is packed full of damaging admissions once the matter is understood.

The advertisement shows a skyline of a modern city with a gleaming cross for a background and the one word, "Faith", followed by this statement "Not political Doctors but good old-fashioned Doctrine—that's what the world needs most." Continuing it says; "What is the cure for the world's present troubles—for unrest and covetousness and fear?

Legislation?

Industrial Compromises?

Political readjustments?

We've tried them all and they do not satisfy. We are hungry and thirsty for Faith."

I have long maintained that the Church has ever been the enemy of progress.

Surely the foregoing is proof sufficient. By implication the Interchurch World Movement is advertising that that it is all a mistake to attempt to remedy wrongs by legislation or industrial action. In effect it says, "You do not need industrial compromises. You do not need social readjustments, you do not need better wages, better living conditions, better opportunities for yourself or your wife or your children. Just do nothing and be nothing except a blind "holder of the Faith!"

"The world needs a "genuine religious revival" cabled the London financial editor of the New York Evening Post and he added, "This is the view of hard-headed business men. "What hard-headed business men are now proclaiming the churches of Jesus Christ have always proclaimed"—such is the trend of the advertisement. Then follows some testimonials from recognized leaders of the House of Mammon.

Charles M. Schwab, of Bethlehem Steel Trust fame, is quoted as saying, "It goes without saying that I am a firm believer in the fact that in a strong religious sentiment lies the firmest foundation for the preservation of our civilization." One needs only to remember that "our present civilization" is based upon the daily systematic robbery of all who toil through the medium of the legalized wages-system. The robbery is legalized but it is robbery just the same. Some years ago Mr. Schwab voiced an intellectual conviction that NOTHING could stop the onward march of Socialism. Now he is expressing a hope that a "strong religious sentiment" may do the trick but I fear his intellectual conviction will be verified while his hopes are to be withered.

Next in order, Mr. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, is quoted, "The only real and permanent solution

The British Labor Movement.

By Felix Morley.

ARTICLE III.

London— "The recent by-election results in England are something far more significant than a swing of the political pendulum. The smashing victories which the British labor movement is now recording at the polls really express two deep psychological changes in this country. The first of these is the growing political consciousness of the trade unions. The second is the growing realization on the part of the so-called middle classes that the Labor party alone gives positive and definite promise of a better England. Workers, of hand and brain alike are rallying to their party—the Labor party—in tens of thousands. In ever-increasing numbers they are expressing through the ballot their demand for national and international justice."

The above is part of the answer given by Edgerton P. Wake, national agent of the Labor party when asked him to account for the recent remarkable triuphs of the political labor movement in Great Britain. Wake's office and the mechanics of his duties are closely akin to those of the Republican or Democrat national party chairmen in the United States. He is the general entrusted with all the major organization work of the British Labor party and his efforts are said to be largely responsible for the singularly efficient political machine which labor has built up since the last general election. Yet to make a personal comparison between Wake and, say, Will H. Hays, would be much like comparing Abraham with Uncle Joe Cannon. Like a majority of the British labor leaders the vision of their national agent is focussed on the horizon of humanity and not of politics.

Much of the present landslide to the Labor party is due to the clearent platform of policy on which every election campaign is fought. This program, generally known as "Labor and the New Social order," was affirmed by the national executive committee of the party when Labor withdrew from the coalition government at the end of the war and is a striking contrast to the tissue of compromises on which the unnatural Coalition party and the Independent Liberals both take stands. The Labor platform provides in brief:

For a peace of reconciliation, leading to a world without military alliances, economic barriers, or secret diplomacy; for immediate peace with soviet Russia; for a repudiation of imperiailsm based on force, and for complete self-control in Ireland, India, Egypt, and other subject peoples under the British empire; for nationalization of the land and socialization with democratic control of all vital public services, such as mining, railroads, shipping, canals, electric power supply, and milk distribution; for the conscription of wealth to pay war debts, and for limitation of armaments; for the democratization of education; for the complete abolition of military conscription, whether or not veiled as "universal military training;" for the immediate repeal of all legislation restricting civil or industrial liberty, including amnesty for all political prisoners; for putting in hand urgently needed public works as a safeguard against unemployment, including the building of "at least a million new houses" at the state's expense, these to be let to the workers in congested districts at moderate rents; and for local potion in the liquor traffic.

This platform has a direct appeal to the war-awakened social consciousness of England and is in large part responsible for the present successes of the Labor party. It is not as completely Socialistic as some desire, but it certainly provides a handful of stout coffin nails for capitalism. It compares with the vague formulae of conservatives and liberals as day compares with night, and it has the outhstanding virtue of being a program indorsed ungrudgingly by every element in the labor movement without the internal splits which are the most potent weapon in the armory of the common foe.

A good party program combined with an aroused social conscience are fundamnetals, but by themselves these will never win a majority in parliamentary government. There are other important factors which must be understood to get at the reasons for labor's rapid rise toward political supremacy. One of these was touched upon by Wake in speaking of "the growing political consciousness of the trade unions."

Ten years ago the British Miners' federation, which at the last general election placed 25 of its men in parliament, had been so bound up with the Liberal party that its members would scarcely look at a Labor candidate. British labor bore the same relation to the Liberal party a few years ago that many A. F. of L. officers would now have American labor bear to the Republican party. Today solidarity of the workers behind the workers' party has become a reality in England. And for the reason that the majority of English trade unionists are also Socialists some amazement and more amusement is derived on this side from contemplating the bitter hostility toward Socialism exhibited by such eminent trade unionists as Samuel Gompers.

Another development which has contributed greatly to the success of the political labor movement is the Labor party reorganization effected early in June, 1918. By this act the party ceased to be merely a federation for political purpose of trade union and Socialist bodies. The basis of membership was broadened so as to include every man or woman willing to accept the party program and pay a subscription of 25 cents a year. The effect has been to rally to the party standard thousands of teachers, doctors, clergymen, lawyors, journalists, managerial employes, clerks and secretarial workers; and literally tens of thousands of women in all walks of life. "It is the class of mind and not the class of life with which we are concerned," as the national agent puts it. The result of this infusion of "intellectuals" has been to develop a corporate sense as a national party and bring a large number of trained executive minds to the service of the labor movement. The absence of any prejudice against these "middle class" members can best be shown by the fact that the member of the present executive committee of the Labor party elected by the greatest number of votes is Sidney Webb, the famous economist. Nor, on the other hand, does the most ardent proletarian fear that the British labor movement will ever be dominated by what must always be a relatively small broup of supporters of the intellectual type.

A most democratic system of decentralization is employed by the Labor party in selecting its candiadtes for parliament. Local labor parties have now been formed in nearly every constituency. The various organizations affiliated with the local party, whether trade unions, Socialist bodies, or independent members as described above, nominated their own candidates. Choice of the man or woman who shall contest the district for labor is made by a democratically chosen local selection conference. Ratification of this choice by the executive committee of the National Labor party (known as the national executive) is then required, although this ratification is almost always a mere formality. It should be held in mind that under the English system of government a parliamentary candidate need not be a resident of the district for which he stands.

At first glance the election campaign also appears largely a local affair, but in reality a great deal of responsibility is centered on national head-quarters. Eevery by-election in England now is a fiercely contested battle and generally a three-cornered battle, as the Liberal party has virtually severed its allegiance to the utterly discredited coalition government of Lloyd George and is running many independent candidates. With the coalition and the liberals sending their most able speakers to the field of each successive election, and the press of the entire nation taking an active part in every campaign and generally bitterly hostile to labor, it is evident that the national executive is called upon for continuous good generalship in order to gain seats for his party.

A large part of this responsibility devolves on the national agent, who sends his organizers to the constituency the moment an election is declared, arranges the schedule of campaign speakers, and has also a large share in determining what planks of the general party platform, i. e., Russia, nationalization of industry, conscription of wealth, etc., shall be stressed in the campaign. It is a post calling for wide knowledge and the keenest political instinct.

There is an old saying that "nothing succeeds like success." The truth of this is now being proved by the British Labor party.

What Political Prisoners Think of Amnesty.

hand and an automatic in the other, and who hide the crimes of starving babies by blockades, wives and daughters driven to suicide, prostitution or insanity by being reduced to the depths of poverty and the wilful murdering of men for profit, under a washing of lamb's blood", are living example of the kind of generosity fostered by capitalism. That any wage laborer or little craftsman or farmer, can be deceived year after year to the point of supporting the huge juggernaut is one of the marvels of human psycholgy Such a non-descript is only capable of seeing beauty on the mangy stern of an elephant or wisdom in the head of a brainless ass. The frenzy of war, carried on the insane lips of such bipeds, can be counted upon to justify every crime and act of mob cowardice on earth when the grafters want an orgie of blood in order to rob and pillage the world. The poor tools will beat up, rob, burn out, slander, tar and feather, jail and murder their neighbors and see helpless wives and children beg their bread from the hands of charity, and boast of their cowardly deeds as patriotism and one hundred percent loyalty.

I know personally that I am writing the truth, for I am a victim of such infamous things. Because I left the ministry and undertook to help establish justice among men in Oklahoma, I am here in prison, while my wife and four helpless children, the oldest one only seven, and the baby only two years old are gracefully suffering all the privations of outcasts at Guthrie, Oklahoma. My wife is an English woman. I married her in London. She lost two brothers in the war. I am an American, and descendent of Elias Hicks founder of the Hicksite Quakers. But what is nationality? What is citizenship? While I wore the robe of minister and apologized for the infamies of robbers, and taught: "Servants be obedient to your masters", I was popular, I went to India and other places where thieves live off the fruits of toil, but when I joined the Socialists and became active in the efforts to humaizo the d----n system and met a few reverend liars in debate and was placed on the ticket for the Senate, I dug a chasm as wide and deep between myself and the tool sof mammon as that indicated in the fable of Lazarus and the gentleman in "fine linen." The war gave the excuse for evening up personal and political grudges. I was one of a number of men who were pronounced "dangerous", and after engaging in a public debate with a Judge of an Oklahoma district on "Why the government should conscript wealth as fully as blood to fight the Kaiser", and gained the decision, I was arrested, dragged two hundred miles, placed under a $10.000 bond, (which I filled), a jury was "chosen" and a bunch of swearers, swore some great long swears about me not believing in murder, and a small sized worshipper of the "law" sentenced me to Leavenworth with a meal ticket stamped "Twenty Years", and then to mock at my poverty assessed a fine of $10.000. Of course the Constitution of the United States (1st Amendment) guarantees free speech and peacible assemblage. The same document (VIIIth Amendment), guarantees that no "execessive bail" shall be demanded, and that no "unusual" "cruel" nor excessive punishments shall be imposed, and these Judges take an oath which pledges them to uphold and enforce the Constitution in every particular, but they have no more compunction of conscience against perjury than has a thieving tom cat against pilfering a cupboard.

The kind of democracy secured to the world by the war can be seen in the fact that the British dominion has been extended to include more added territory than is contained in the United States including Alaska. The Union Jack, instead of being made the flag of democracy and brotherhood, has been turned into a bloody napkin in the wake of bomb planes and forty two centimeters; while Egypt, Presia, India, Tibet, the Soudan and East Africa, are in revolt against the usurpation of the grafters, and Ireland is putting the shams of British pretense in the spot light of the world.

The Supreme Kangaroos, inthe Steel Trust and stock dividends decisions, have fully vindicated every charge put against that legal jugernaut by liberals and radicals that it is the "bulwark of capitalism". The persecutions launched against the penniless workingmen in this country by the little-souled pretender at Washington breathes the very spirit of the masters who own him. Anti-strike laws, injunctions, paid spies and thugs, fake reports of bomb plots, possibly made to his orders, lies about campaigns against the profiteers, the shameful surrender to the packers, the sixty different scandals growing out of the war activities, the hypocritical pretense regarding free speech, the brutalizing of the soldiers in ten thousand ways, the mobbing of honest critics, the private war and the infamous blockade against Russia, the lying about the European attitude on the League, the deporting of men without any specific charges being proved, the colossal scheme of brutality and black mail launched against Communists, Communists Labor, the A. F. of L., the Non-Partisan League the Committee of Forty Eight, the Farmer's Unions, the Socialists, the Railwaymen all of whom are branded as outlaws, anarchists, traitors, seditionists, Bolsheviki and every other vile libel invented by hate, cowardice and violence; the unseating of duly elected representatives of the people for no other reason that they are members of a political party now controlling one half the territory of the world, the mockery at the appeals of helpless wives and babies whose fathers have been imprisoned or deported for demanding simple justice—all these things and more are being observed by men as never before. Russia at last learned over 5,000,000 graves of exploited workers, what character of magnanimity capitalism developes in men. Others are learning: we will learn.

Recently ten of us decided to test out the feelings of men who came here on other charges than war activities. We agreed to approach the men privately, knowing that nearly all men will conceal their real feelings and convictions when talking publicly or writing to officials and others, hoping to gain advantages by such concealment. The result of our careful investigation astonished us. Out of 314 soldiers approached, seven of whom were radicals when they came here, 288 have become positively radical, and can give intelligent reasons for the change. Out of 470 civil prisoners, nine of whom were radicals when coming here, 435 of the number have become radical since coming. Ordinarily six months in prison turns the most obdurate Dubb, and a year confirms him. They judiciously keep these facts from authorities, but the results are certain. Amnesty would be very unscientific from the view point of the man who knows the remedy for capitalism. Letters from every nook and corner of the nation, and from many countries daily come to the prison. We gain a thousand times more real information on the situation in detail from these letters than from the press. Even radical papers only tell about a tenth of the story. We all want out. Our loved ones need us. But scientific facts have no sentiment. Prisons are doing more to open the eyes of the public to the hellish designs of the militarists and plunderers than a million agitators could possibly do. Use the plea for amnesty as propaganda, by the poor and are bought by the rich.

You recall well the chief cry in all these loans—"our boys over there! Nothing too good for our boys who cheerfully left heart broken mothers behind to make the world safe for democracy! Help the boys!" And while those boys were suffering—hunger,—disease and death,—the capitalistic buzzards at home fought and clawed and tore,—for profits!—for profits!—and gorged their carrion craws with that money contributed for the boys! And all the while George Creel with his six million dollar outfit of liars,—controlling every atom of news coming to America—was telling us of the exquisite comforts of the boys—their luxurious bills of fare,—and at the same time attempting to mould Americas' self appointed representative into a colossal and overshadowing figure that would stand first in universal history for ages to come!

But the boys are home now—and they are telling things. One told just yesterday of the forty tons of candy sent by the school children of the East to soldiers in his sector. He and his comrades had never received an ounce of it! What little candy they got was bought at an extravagant rate,—an ordinary chocolate drop costing twenty cents! This is but a trifle of course,—but it is one of those straws that showed how the wind blew. And at home here! We cannot even burden this article with mere mention of the —the swindles of all sorts—perpetrated by these financial thugs—who as they merciless graft—the wholesale robbery robbed and plundered,—were always skricking—"Potriotism! Patriotism! Patriotism!"

Many have wondered at the curious definition given by the great English lexicographer, Dr. Samuel Johnson, of the word "patriotism." He defines it as "The last refuge of a scoundrel". Who doubts the correctness of his his definition now?

Where has the thirty billions of the the returned osldier what share was estimated cost of this war gone? Ask his? Then look at the incomes in the internal revenue department—if you could—and at the "profits"—even from the maker of pants buttons—and tin spoons to the Beef lords and the Steel kings and ask what share was theirs? The share the boys got was the share the poor pagan, thirsting for the beauties of civilization, gets from the missionary fund. Of this—an English officer in India said,—"At a modest computation it requires at least one pound—near five dollars—to get six pence to a native."

As to the bonus:—Anyone who cares to compare the treatment of the returned soldiers, with what Australia, New England and Canada, have done for their boys,—must admit, that at least, ours have been very shabbily treated. All sorts of relief measures have been introduced, but like congressional "investigations" they have amounted to nothing, except of course pyrotechic barrages of hot air. But like Banquas' ghost this bonus question "would not down". Hence but very recently Congress came out flat footed and declared that it was impossible to grant this bonus—it would take a billion and half dollars at least to do so—it would disturb business conditions—it would depriciate outstanding bonds it would burden the people etc. etc. But a horrible hair raising jolt awaited these dignified conservators of the public welfare. It was but a few days after Congress had decided to allow the boys to go barefooted this summer,—untill cute little billet-doux came drifting from the West.

Nervous senators and perturbed representatives,—read some of these notes on the floor of Congress—they were all of the same import—one from a governor—saying in substance!

"Since Congress has definately rejected the soldiers bonus, the returned service men of the West are joining the I. W. W. by thousands."

What!!! Hells fire and Blue Blazes!!!

The hot air ballons were corked and the Ways and Means Committee got busy,—and as said—by the time you see this most probably a bill will have been reported out by this Committee. Then the usual political jugglery and sleight of hand work by the two great Bunco gangs for political effect in the coming election.

But oh! my fellow workers there is a mournful and tragic side to this! What will the poor buzzards, and vampires of capitalism do,—seeing that they are deprived of their lawful prey, and their "constitutional" graft and pillage? And then this bonus will not rest on a bond issue,—it will be paid, it seems,—from an increased "luxury tax." Now watch the pipe smokers and the kid ice cream cone eaters get it in the neck again! Could we draw on the thirty "thousand millionaires" mentioned by the Braziilan official to help us out? We wot not.

Let us now ask a hypothetical question:—Do you think that if this bonus measure had been swung,—say as the 6th Loan, and it were so fixed that the air craft gang—the Hog Island gang—and in fact all the predatory gangs—would get their avaricious claws on the greater bulk of it—do you not think such a measure would have been passed long ago? So do we.

The Black Sheep.

Chapt. XXVI.

Westward Bound.

Before he left Anderson saw to it that the boy had bed and board for the night, and also that he had a few dollars in his pocket, but try as he would he could not get the youth to leave town unless Collins and Rudolph accompanied him. And as Anderson had his mind firmly set on this point, he decided that it were best to have the others turned loose also, although he did not admit this to the boy.

It was rather late before he left the pool hall and Jack went to his room and waited for the hours to slip by. At last the pool hall was closed and there was not a soul to be seen upon the streets when he cautiously made his way to the rear of the jail building. Here with the assistance of a ladder which he had found in the ally he climbed up to the little barred window that overlooked his companion's cells and lost no time in knocking out the glass, after which he informed his friends that was out and was unable to get back in, but that he would stay on the job until he was either put back in or had them out.

This amused his friends greatly, altho they cursed him soundly for breaking that window and letting the cold wind directly in upon them. There was no more sleep for them that night. The place became too cold. So the two persons spent the night in arguments as to whether conduct such as Jack's was really essential to class consciousness. Collins maintained that it was. He was a stickler for loyalty and would ruthlessly exclude from any organization to which he belonged any one who was in the slightest degree disloyal. It made no difference to him whether the disloyalty was due to weakness or to malice, or to ignorance. To his mind organizations should be built up thru the grouping together of the common minded, and the ruthless exclusion, and expulsion of those who were to any degree contrary minded. It was his idea that members of an organization be it political or industrial ought to have the utmost regard for each others feelings and think on all subjects exactly like Collins. Jack had pointed out this mental characteristic more than once during the days he was in jail, but Collins could never see it. Now it was Rudolph who pointed it out again by saying, "you like the kid because he does what pleases you. He is loyal to you. It is not that you admire his democracy. You do not know what the word means. You are a blonde beast that wants to associate with its kind, and seeks to trample all others under foot. You forget that the problem we have set ourselves is one which concerns the toling masses, white and black, jew and gentile. It is a problem of industrial evolution. You make it one of personal morality. This might be a good world if you were boss of it but you aint goin' to be boss." Then Rudolph sailed into a long argument in proof of his contention that Jack had acted from pure idealism and not thru a sense of labor's solidarity.

But argue as they would they could only agree to one thing that the kid had in him the right stuff to make a good working class fighter, if his philosophical bend of mind did not destroy his usefulness.

Early the next morning Anderson called up Duffy and Smallhead and persuaded them to let the other two out so as to get the whole lot out of town on the eleven forty train. Thus it was that about nine A. M. the jailor brought the other two men their bundles remarking that they might need additional cover these cold nights. He then left incidentally forgetting to lock their cells as well as the outer door. They were not slow to take the hint and in less than fifteen minutes after he had left they passed the pool hall where Jack joined them. The boy wanted a little time to call on Anderson and thank him for his kindness as he put it. The fact of the matter was he was trying to learn Olive's name and more about her. But Collins would give no reprieve. "Oh damn the Bourgeois! Let's get out of this hole before something else happens. Remember you busted that can window."

So it was that the trio made their way down to the railroad track where they waited for the first west bound freight. That evening they landed in Minot and four days later after a cold and dismal ride across the Montana plains and over the snow capped Rockies Jack for the first time in his life entered the Priest River forest. Here they were thrown off the train by an irate brakeman and Jack and his companions enjoyed a walk of about twenty miles to the next station.

It was a wonderful trip along the turbulent waters of the Priest River, among mountains which towered skyward covered with mantles of evergreens. Toward nightfall they boarded another train and in the morning found themselves in the city of Spokane.

It was the boy's first experience in so large a town. Everything was new to him. He had it all to learn. Incidentally he was a source of much amusement to his companions. He offered to pay his fare in the hotel elevator and when he asked the street car conductor how much he would charge to haul him to the park his companions nearly collapsed. But their amusement was short lived. The boy soon shed his verdure and became familiar with city ways.

During the time they were in town Collins made it his business to hold forth from a soap box down on Steven's street and it was here that class. He learned the meaning of such different organizations of the working the boy became familiarized with the terms as 'Starvation Army, Mission Stiffs, Stew Bums,' and a variety of other descriptive epithets designating the different strata of the migratory worker and non-worker.

During the day, he followed Collins to the library and busied himself with a variety of books. The library was his favorite haunt. But as staying in the city costs money he told his friends that he was going to look for a job. A task which at that time of the year was not easy and no one knew this better than Collins. He frankly told the boy that it were better for him to live cheaply and spend the winter in study than to try at this time to find employment. He told Jack that in a few days they would go out to a place on Couer D'Alane Lake and there "hole up" for six weeks or two months until spring work opened up in the Palouse, or until the weather got so that a man might get a job railroad grading and work with some comfort. "You'll never get rich working kid, and my advice is use all the time you can get to improve yourself and work when the pay is good and the weather is with you. The only way you can get any joy out of life is by using your head in the management of your affairs."

Argue as he would Collins had no effect upon the boy's determination to get sufficient money with which to achieve a college education. He wanted to rank among the best in the world and by the best he meant the most learned. It is true that at the cabin on the shores of Lake Couer d'Alane, among the virgin pine woods he applied himself assiduously to a systematic study of Marxian Economics while Collins encouraged him in the reading of working class history. Both Bollins and Rudolph were trying to do what the whole world is trying to do, what religion for ages has tried to do, make a man what by hature he is not. Mentally Jack could grasp the idea of their socialist faith. He saw the ephemeral justice of it. He sometimes became even enthusiastic over its possibilities. But it never became a spiritual fact with him. He learned socialism; he did not become socialized. His mind was that of a naturalist rather than that of a sociologist. He seemed to have but one idea and that was to get a job and save money with which to go to school where he might sharpen his tools of reseach.

While at the cabin he daily scanned the advertisements in the news papers and tried to persuade his companions to go with him in search of a job. But these old veterans would not budge. They had "holed up" for the winter. And the winter was their playtime. The time they spent in companionship of books. The hours in which they communed with the mind of civilization. They had no ambition to cope with capitalism during the season of bad weather.

After about three weeks of the cabin Jack became thoroughly restless and they all agreed to go back to Spokane for a few days. When once more in the city the boy made up his mind that happen what might he was going to get a job. He walked down Railroad Avenue and scanned the boards of the employment offices for suitable work. He noticed an advertisement for railroad help on the Chicago Milwaukee and St. Paul and he went in to inquire about it. He bought the job for two dollars, and then discovered that it was located in Montana, as well as that it would take nine dollars to get there. But he had the money and was bound to work. So after giving Collins and Rudolph an opportunity to tell him what they thought of him, he was on his way. Two days later he arrived at the place designated, with four or five other men sent out by the same employment office and was put to work. He noticed that when he came to this camp several men were leaving, but he was bent on making money and resolved to let nothing disturb him. He worked four days during which bad food gave him indigestion, and quarters so filtry that his clothes became alive with vermin. The foreman on the job was a big burly, illiterate sort of a fellow, who was not at all choice in the language he used toward the men. At the end of the first day there was a group of new workers came into camp, and a corresponding number were discharged; it seemed to be a daily routine. Collins had explained this to him, but in spite of his experience at Anamoose he was inclined to look upon it more as theory than fact.

The game was to collect a free from the man for employment to employ him a couple of days, then to discharge him, and collect fees again off of new man who came to take his job. It was just four days when Jack got his "walking papers." When they had charged him for board, room and hospital fees, he owed the company thirty nine cents, which they generously donated He was now really broke and three hundred miles away from his friends, with the snow clad Rockies between him and them. He decided to go back on foot or frieght and it was during this trip that experience proved to be the best teacher.

It was fortunate for him that he was in splendid physical condition, and that for the first two days of his journey back to Spokane, the weather was unusually mild. He walked the first day up the railroad track, never stopping to eat and kept on walking all the next night and the next day. Two days and a night during which he took nothing but water and covered the distance of one hundred and ten miles. It was during the afternoon of the second day that he began to feel exhausted and eager for rest. Toward evening he stumbled into the waiting room of a little telegraph station on the road. He had no sooner sat down upon the seat, then he was fast asleep, and did not awaken until the station agent two hours later shook him by the collar and told him to get out as it was time to lock up. Jack told the man what had happened to him and the agent informed him that he heard that story every day. That the working class would have to learn not to be roped in by employment grafters, so saying he pushed the boy out of the door and locked it.

To his perfect dismay he found that his limbs were so sore that he could hardly walk. Still he trudged on until the night fell like a cloak of blackness over the mountain region and with it came a biting cold that seemed to grip his vitals. From time to time he caught himself telling the girl at Anamoose his troubles, in fact he held imaginary conversation with her as he

The Leaven is Working

The hopes of those who expect the lion and the lamb to lie down peacefully together are bound to be withered. Even in America—the despair of some revolutionists who proclaim the impossibility of American workers ever awakening to the fact of their exploitation, the red menace—discontent, hunger, impossible living conditions is stalking forth upon his rounds.

The switchmen's "unauthorized", "illegal" and "headless revolution" brings one up with a quick jerk of realization of the fact that all the elements of real working class uprisings are with us and liable to break out at any moment. And calling the insurgents names as the capitalist press is doing will not alter the conditions that underlie this latest revolt, nor will they have a soothing effect upon the minds of the strikers.

Five years of world-wide destruction of life, property, wealth of all descriptions has rendered the capitalist machine of government and production incapable of working to the satisfaction of the world's workers. It is breaking down, incapable of feeding, housing and clothing the inhabitants. All the world's in turmoil, nowhere is there a sign of coming peace and a basis upon which human life may continue its existence—nowhere but in Socialist Russia, which is solving the problems of production by first eliminating the exploiters of the masses.

The switchmen's strike contains in it all the elemental characteristics of a revolution. At the bottom lie insufficient incomes to enable the workers to live. They have tried all "legal" methods to increase their wages. Failure has resulted. The machinery which they have heretofore functioned thru—the craft unions, now prove utterly incapable of securing to the members a livelihood. The weapon which has heretofore been used in a redress of grieveiences utterly fails in the hour of crisis. The wise ones among the rank and file seeing its uselessness discard it. And here developes another characteristic of revolutions—the rank and file seize authority. Along with the former weapon is also discarded the conservative officials of the union. Power and authority are seized by the rank and file. They take their destiny into their own hands. All authority save their own is cast away. The stage is now reached where the fight is on between the revolutionists and consevatives for power.

A further development along lines followed by revolutions is apparent. The union officials, feeling their power slipping from them, go over to their historic enemy—in this case call upon their exploiters and the capitalist State for assistance in putting down the revolt. The union heads deserve the brand of Cain for this traitorous act to Labor. Nothing could illumine more brightly than this infamous act the supliant and renegade character of old line, conservatie trade unionism. For years the A. F. of L. brand of unionism has been disintegrating. The loss of the steel and coal strikes have filled the workers with discontent and have convinced them of the futility of craft unionism. More than one rebellion has broken out against the union officials who are straining every nerve to keep the rank and file in leash. The rank and file are demanding a new deal and a clean deck.

To what extend the switchmen's strike will spread cannot be determined at this time. It has already paralyzed industry in many cities and adherents are walking out in increasing numbers. Meanwhile, the "regular" officials are crying frantically for "loyalty" on the part of the membership and seeking an alliance with the capitalist State and the railroad owners to assist them in breaking this revolt of the masses against an impossible economic condition and an outgrown form of labor unionism.

Whatever be the results from a material standpoint, it will have a tremenduous educational effect upon labor. America seems on the verge of that condition which begins with spasmodic bubblings of discontent and ends—in victory of the workers.

In Orderly Sequence

We are afforded a glance at a late development of the class struggle in the local landscape. Behold a picked group of Cleveland city police at target practice with machine guns! A new thing indeed. Rows of railroad ties stood on end, trees, answer for targets. A veteran of the World Massacre is in charge. The suburban atmosphere is charged with all the smells and noise of battle tho no blood flows—as yet.

Such a phenomena raises numerous questions in the mind of the curious. Indeed, since the war to end war was fought and won with such overwhelming success and suffering humanity cries for peace and a beating of swords into plowshares—it IS a curious thing to see a police squad training in the use of the latest murder devises. Are 18 inch clubs and automatics insufficient to keep order in a Christian nation which has just concluded a victorious war for Democracy and Righteousness?

The answer is furnished by the police themselves. After one such demonstration of the arts of war, a question from a spectator as to "What's the grand idea," the answer was given, "We expect a lot of trouble on May Day!"

Such an act of self delusion can be precipated by only one thing—fear of a just retribution. Machine guns follow in logical sequence the course that has been followed by the capitalist dictatorship in its treatment of Cleveland workers. Time was when worker-citizens of Cleveland legally elected two councilmen and a member of the school board to represent them in the governing of the city. Soon after, they were useated at the behest of the profiteers and political poltroons who infest the city hall and the Chamber of Commerce.

Having ruled out of office the representatives of the workers, steps were immediately taken to see that no more were allowed to enter the sacred precints of the governing body of the bourgeoise State. Having nullified the workers' franchise it was arranged to disfranchise them completely. The political party of the workers was set upon by as conscienceless a crew of pirates as ever cut a throat or throttled justice. After eighteen months of unremitting terrorism, raids, searches, unlawful seizures, persecutions, arrests, spying, insults, destruction of thousands of dollars worth of property, we find the task about complete. The workers of Cleveland ARE disfranchised insofar as useing their ballot in the interest of their own class. They can neither write, speak nor vote as free men, but must comport themselves at all times and places in conformity with the will of the capitalist class—expressed by rules laid down by the police and the Loyal American League, who are the agents of the bourgeoise.

Reaching the present stage, what is the next step which must logically be taken if the workers are to be kept in submission? Since force has proved to be the magic wand to rander subject the slaves of capital, why not accentuate its use and influence? And, since discontent is even more rife today, than previously among the slaves—the machine gun suggests itself.

...'Tis true, we anticipate to immediate use of it. Considering present circumstances we can't imagine any use for machine guns, nor even a "billy" on May Day. The daily press informs us that May 1st will be celebrated as American Day. Being such, we presume that the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution and the various Amendments will be read and considered deeply and prayerfully by every straight thinking dweller of Cleveland. We recommend that they do so. Especially do we recommend that each inhabitant "learn by heart" the first Amendment and take it as a rule of his political and civil life.

Should these suggestions be followed in the administration of city affairs and ALL its inhabitants adhere strictly thereto, we are positive that the bitter mouths of machine guns would be closed with rust. That would mean the peaceful passing of the capitalist dictatorship—but history teaches that no ruling class ever passes from power except thru a sea of blood of its own making.

CHAPTER FOUR.
A Scientific Interpretation of Historical Epochs.
SAVAGERY.

The epoch of Savagery is divided into three ages, Lower, Middle and Upper.

Lower age: This dates from unknown antiquity.

The first men had no history—except as animals have history, and left no history except such as may be read from the record of the rocks, wherein we find the bones of early man and the animals he had eaten or by whom he had been eaten. Prior to the advent of modern science, but little could be known of this remote age. Today, thanks to the development of the sciences of biology, geology and archaeology, the story of the past is slowly but successfully being retraced.*) Haeckel) says that "The ontogeny of the individual recapitulates the phylogeny of the race."

The term ontogeny means the development of the individual from inception to death. Phylogeny means the development of the race from protozoa to man.

The Law of Biogenesis teaches us that in its development from the parental cell to maturity, each individual passes trough all the stages through which its race has passed in its evolution from the primordial protozoa to the present time.

A typical illustration of this law is to be found in the destructiveness of children. A stick in the hands of a small child, instantly becomes a club wielded for destructive purposes, as many a household pet can testify. A stone to a small boy is merely an excelent something to throw regardless whether the object aimed at is a window, a bird, a dog, a cat or a playmate. The reason for these activities is to be found in the fact that sticks and stones were man's first tools.*

In the lower age of savagery the chief desires of man were to satisfy hunger, keep warm, and out-wit the other animals.

A study of the skulls of men of this age shows that in thought and action they were brute-like.)

The tools of lower savagery were sticks and stones; the shelter, trees and caves, (natural shelter only as man had not yet learned to build). No clothing was worn. Mankind at this period was just a gregarious horde of human animals living on worms, locusts,) grasshoppers, fish, shellfish, fruits, nuts and succulent roots.

Man in the age of lower savagery, had few words, little communication of ideas, and these mostly by sounds, signs and gestures. He was almost entirely at the mercy of the hostile forces of nature.

Savagery may be defined as that period of human history dating from the time man first assumed an upright posture to the time of the development of the arts of agriculture and pottery-making. It marked the beginning of man's conscious mastery of the hostile forces of his environment.

Man's first great achievement was the development of his ability to stand erect, which gave him the free use of his front feet to use tools and carry burdens. It is maintained by some scientists*) that the ability to stand erect and to use tools brought him in more intimate contact with a variety of objects, thus necessitating the coining of words to distinguish one from another, hence the development of articulate speech is sychronous with the development of tools.

The elemental forms of language may be traced to the animal world. The warning cry of the cock upon sight of a hawk may be distinguished by any one from the call he uses to notify his harem of the discovery of another fat worm. The purr of a cat is readily distinguished from its nocturnal lovesong.

The language of animasl may be said to be vocalized expression of mental reactions to definite facts in its environment that may affect the individual for weal or woe. Human language differs from the language of other animals in this; it has evolved definite sounds for definite things, while animal language has certain sounds for various emotions. A dog howls, whines or barks according to his mood.

Human language began in the lower age of savagery, evolving from sign and gesture language, and marks the second great achievement of man. Without language as a vehicle of expression no high order of thought is possible. No high order of language is possible without a high order of social development. The vocabularly of all savage tribes is very limited.

Thought is a mental reaction to experience. Man can not articulate that which he has not experienced, hence it follows that the greater the social experience the more ample the individual vocabulary. The vocabulary of this early age was limited for the reason that the racial experience was limited.

Man in lower savagery had no conscious social organization. During this age the faint beginning of a primitive marriage system developed out of promiscuity. Rudimentary forms of religion also developed in the form of Sun dances and kindred nerve-reactions.

Primitive religions rose from the nerve-reaction which primitiv man experienced at the coming of the dawn. To tree-dwelling man the night was a time of terror. Large poisonous reptiles glided noiselessly trhough th trees and monstrous carnivora prowled along the ground. To escape being crushed by the one often meant being crunched by the other enemy. It was thus that the night was a time of continuous nerve tension which was suddenly released at the coming of the light, manifesting itself by shouting and dancing, for now the enemies were visible and could be the more easily eluded. Modern religions still describe evil as darkness and good as light.

This age of human history closes with the discovery of the utility of fire.

The Lesson of Albany

Walter B. Dillon.

There is much food for thought for all Communists in not only the result of the investigation that took place at Albany, N. Y., but the actual testimony and statements made by the defendant Socialists. In fact, we as Communist workers are far more interested in the attitude adopted by the defense at Albany than we need be in the result of the whole farce.

At this point, however, in view of the fact that this is a presidential year, we must look the matter fairly in the face from a purely political angle also. We are vitally interested in the outcome of this legislative tangle, first, as showing the limits to which Capital is prepared to go to dominate the state, and second, as demonstrating conclusively the duplicity, depravity and utter worthlessness of such "leaders" of Socialism as Hillquit, Stedman, et al.

There are very few of us, perhaps, who needed the developments at Albany to prove the Judas Iscariot nature of the Socialist Party to the workers as the party is represented by such men as Hillquit, Stedman, Waldman and many others of their ilk. But to thousands of good and loyal Socialists who chose to remain with the old party rather than split away, such a lesson was absolutely essential to demonstrate the close affinity of such socalled Socialists to the Kerenskys, Scheidemanns, Noskes, Eberts and Thomases of Europe. Let us hope that the lesson was not lost on our honest comrades of the Socialist Party.

From a purely political angle, however, we are much more interested. It is a fact that the men who were expelled from the legislature at A4lbany were elected to office by the votes of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of those who at the time were members or sympathisers with the Socialist Party, but who are now Communists or Communist Labor in affilliation or sympathy. Where are we going to stand when the accid test is put up to the electorate of these assembly districts again? That is what we must decide.

From all indications we are not going to be allowed to place a Communist Labor ticket in the field and through such a ticket exercise our right of franchise, If not, should we vote for the Socialists whom we know will be about as valuable to the working class and as powerful in their interests as Ebert in Germany or Kerensky in Russia? For myself, I most respectfully decline to waste my time voting for puppets of the bourgeoise, but I am not sure that such is the attitude of all of us. Neither am I sure that to leave the fight open between the cohorts of Capital on the one hand and of middle class reformism as represented by the Socialists on the other hand, would be conducive to the best interests of the workers. In the long run, of course, the reaction will set in and we will logically take our places at the helm, but we should not stand aside and let the Socialists be crushed if by saving their skins we can prevent a great deal of suffering by the entire working calss.

It is certain that in the event that the Socialist Party is wiped off the slate as well as ourselves, there will then be no liberal element capable of stemming the sweep of Capitalism gone mad with its own excesses. That means a long siege of White Terrorism for we must not blind ourselves to the fact that the workers of this country are far from being organized to take over control of industry, and yet too imbued with the idea that they are freemen to meekly submit to the Iron Heel. Hence, they will revolt, spasmodically and in small groups, and be as ruthlessly repressed as under the Czar in Russia or Noske in Germany.

So, returning again to the point that there are many thousands of good, loyal Socialists who cannot as yet take the advanced stand that we do, and to whom must come the bitter experiences of the proletariat of Russia and Germany under false Socialists, it is perhaps the better and less painful method to give every aid and assistance to the political aspirations of the Socialist Party that we are capable of giving. They will hang themselves in due course of time, but in the meantime we will have avoided the worst features of White Terrorism.

There is another method we might pursue which appeals to my sense of humor as well as strategy. In many states candidates are nominated by primaries. Let us enter these primaries and nominate Communists on the Socialists ticket. If Hillquit, Stedman and Company do not like the candidates we place on their tickets let them take the fight to the courts or nominate independent candidates of their own. In either case they proclaim their colors to the workers.

If Capital is as sure of its ground in this country as it now appears to be, it will have no hesitancy in ruthlessly suppressing even Socialist political activity, but the passage of time is against us, and we must stem the tide of repression until we are better enabled to teach the workers industrial solidarity, the lessons so disastrously neglected by the Socialist Party in their fear of hurting the tender feelings of Gomper's A. F. of L.

The leaven of industrialism is fast permeating Sammy's pet unions and it is only a question of time when the A. F. of L. will officially drop its 19th century attitude and take up its rightful place in 20th century unionism. But they, too, like their prototypes in the Socialist Party, must go through the fire of baptism before they will be purified and ready to enter the new society properly equipped to manage it.

As COMMUNIST LABOR states in the issue of March 25th, we are rapidly adapting ourselves to the changing conditions under Capitalist Imperialism, and this is as true of the attitude we may from time to time be compelled to take with the Socialist Party and the A. F. of L. as it is of our own organization methods.

This article is written more for purposes of argument and comment than for a decisive plan of action. We must all act according to the plans that seem best adapted to the needs of the moment in a given locality or district. But at the same time there should be a well defined general plan around and into which all minor action should fuse.

While the lesson of Albany is plain to all of us, it is particularly applicable to New York City where all five of the defendants were elected. New York City Communists and Communist Laborites, therefore, must meet that particular situation as they think best. The rest of us will watch interestedly the developments.

But whatever the outcome of the Albany affair, one thing is assured. CAPITALIST IMPERIALISM has reached its zenith, and the workers of the United States are face to face with o foe that will neither ask nor give quarter.

How will the workers answer?

of the vexing problems which seem more acute than ever since the end of the World War, is the application of the Golden Rule." I quite agree with Mr. Daniels but for the sake of consistency and that same golden rule of doing unto others as we would be done by, why doesn't Mr. Daniels order the return of the Marines from the republic of San Domingo? Or for the same reason why doesn't Mr. Daniels give credit where credit is due? The Golden Rule is not an integral part of the Christian religion but is basically a part of the religion of Confuscius, it having originated amongst the Chinese.

John Grieb Hibben, President Princeton University is quoted, "The spirit of Christianity alone can successfully cope with those influences in our country which tend to destroy our great institutions, both reilgious and political." Our great religious institution is the church, which has ever been a stumbling block in the pathway of human advancement. Our greatest political institution is the State, which is a class institution, maintained by one class for the purpose of keeping the other class in servitude. If the "Spirit of Christianity can be depended upon to save these institutions after they have outlived their economic usefulness then the spirit of Christianity can be depended upon to uphold and perpetuate slavery.

Hamilton Holt, Editor The Independent is quoted, "In these days of reconstruction when the very foundations of society are rocking, we need to stress the great moral principles of Christianity as they alone can save us." Save us from what? From being pried loose from the ill-gotten gains? Save us from losing our opportunity to rob and cheat and despoil the toiler?

Four others are quoted but it took Roger W. Babson, Business Analyst to word it so plainly that none can escape the conclusions herin reached. Babson says, "For our own sakes, for our children's sake, let US BUSINESSMEN get behind the churches and their preachers! Let us from this day give them more time, money and thought, for upon them, the value of ALL WE OWN ultimately depends." There is the cold raw, blunt, brutal truth. Labor has created all the values in the world. US BUSINESSMEN by the legalized robbery of the wages-system have come into possession of the wealth of the world until now, one builds and another inhabits, one sows and another reaps, one produces and another consumes. The VALUE of all that the businessmen posses is a stolen value—values stolen from labor—and labor is learning the truth about the robbery. The jails of the capitalist-controlled state are full to overflowing with the teachers of this great truth and still the state finds itself powerless to stop the spread of the truth about the origin and distribution of values. Now if the state fails of its function, we must get behind the churches and their preachers, for upon them alone can we depend to protect us and our stolen loot. Such is the wail of the business men and such is their conception of the mission of the church! Such is the gall and the frankness of Mammon and such is the amazing frankness of the Interchurch World Movement. It IS a world movement, a movement to save the world for US BUSINESSMEN and the class-conscious element of society will treat it accordingly.

History has a habit of repeating itself. In the final stages of Feudalism the feudal lords used the church in an attempt to prolong their hold on the feudal slaves. Out of the crash which followed capitalism was born. Before —capitalism could emerge the power of the church had to be broken and church and state had to be separated. Now we find the capitalists attempting the very same tactics which proved a failure when feudalism was tottering. Capitalism is now tottering to its fall and no power on earth, and no religion can avert the crash.

The church through the Interchurch World Movement has confessed its incompetence to the world and its advertisements merely show that it has been bought with a price, by big busi- that there are some things which their illgotten wealth cannot buy. nessmen, but they will learn in time

The feudal barons lost all that they possessed and passed into history. The Capitalist Barons are treading the same road, and the prostitute church cannot save them or the value of all that they possess.

"Us businessmen" can have the church, while the victorious hosts of labor will go forward content with the religion of the Brotherhood of Man.

"The Mediumship of Farmer Riley".

By SYDNEY FLOWER, LL. D.

This is a book of sixty large magazine pages, in which is related in detail the observations of the author during a two weeks' stay at the home of the medium, James Wesley Riley, better known as "Farmer Riley," near Marcellus, Mich. If you have ever asked youreslf the question, "Does man live beyond the grave?" a perusal of this book may perhaps assist you in the formulation of an intelligent answer. The book is as interesting as a romance. In his investigations Mr. Flower rigidly adheres to a program which absolutely precludes all possibility of physical agency in the production of the manifestations. Communist Labor Party Battle in Court.

we are working hard with the O. B. U. which is now well under way and which will take on a landslide apperance in the next few days. It is catching like wild fire so at least the economic part of our program is being nicely fulfilled and the shop steward system is being arranged for. The Los Angeles local of the O. B. U. is in full swing also. The carman's union, 1800 strong joined en mass last week. The local in San Francisco is keeping pace with the other two, so you see things are moving on the coast. Now wouldn't a threat of a general strike, in about six months from now, make that 56 year sentence look like the proverbial snow ball in the hot place??!

Everything everywhere is ripening up nicely; keep up the good work, comrade, for about the time the plutes think they have us nicely stowed away they will have to do it all over again and just a little more beside.

Wishing you every success in the work. I remain.

Very Fraternally Yours

He was going to make himself an uninvited guest, even if he had to kill the man that was now in possession of the fire. With this resolution in mind he slid down the embankment and found a party of six who were jungling up.

Ruminations of a Rebel.

By Tom Clifford.

This old world is certainly "topsy turvy." The spirit of unrest prevails everywhere. The workers of Europe are no longer docile and obedient and are in open rebellion against their masters. Their refusal to return to their pre-war industrial slavery and produce wealth as of yore is the despair of the bourgeoisie, for if their erstwhile slaves persist in refusal to again place their necks in the yoke it it is good bye to capitalism. The liquidation of the vast debts incurred by the nations participating in the World War can only come from the wealth produced by the workers, and the latter are manifesting no disposition to shoulder the burden. They seem to have arrived at the conclusion that the war was not of their making and are determined that those responsible shall suffer the consequences. What will be the ultimate result? Industrial chaos, followed by the gradual building up of a new society that will make wars imposible. Russia is pointing the way. The example is infenctions.

Even here in the United States signs are not wanting of an approaching crisis. In spite of the strenuous efforts of the bourgeoisie to regulate industry so as to secure a greater output the workers refuse to be speeded up. In fact, they are sabotaging on the job. While the mass of American workers still remain unenlightened as to their real condition, they seem to be averse to piling up surplus wealth for the benefit of their employers. The bourgeoisie are frantically clamoring for increased production, yet the workers give no heed to their doleful cries—just put in their time, draw their wages, and, spend every cent in securing what they deem necessary for their comfort and happiness. What will the harvest be? Wait about a year and see

The signs of the dissolution of the capitalist system are so abundant they should be apparent to the most obtuse. The competition in production, in spite of the fact that there is no market in sight for the surplus, must inevitably eventuate in an industrial depression. When the storm breaks the inflation of the currency will augment the consequent suffering and destitution of the workers. Speculation has become epidemic and profiteering is a universal obsession. Even the manufacturers have imbibed the fever of speculation, and are largely producing for a prospective market. The bankers and financiers generally appear to sense the coming cataclysm, for they are curtailing their loans and otherwise preparing to weather the storm. Our inherently unsound financial system is at the point of breaking down, and, since all business is based upon it, the whole capitalist system will collapse and the ruin will be complete. Well, let it come. Out of the debris will arise a new social structure that will be sound because scientific—a social structure that will guarantee industrial equity and world peace. I am ready for it. Are You?

Among the multitude of profiteers the landlord is bearing the brunt of adverse critism. He is held up for execration because, forsooth, he insists upon enjoying the sacred rights of property. He contends, and rightly too, that he is in perfect accord with the right to collect in rent all the traffic will bear. The exeruciatingly he ethics of capitalism, which give him amusing feature of the whole procedure is the fact that those who are vociferously denouncing the poor landlord for exercising his lawful prerogative are staunch supporters of the system that accords to him the incontestable privilege to skin, fleece or otherwise rob the luckless individual who is compelled to dicker with him for a place to sleep. Funny world, isn't it?

The long threatened insurrection against the arbitrary rule of union officials seems to have at last materialized in the present railroad strike now being conducted by a so-called "outlaw" organization, which is condemned alike by the railroad managers and officials of the "safe and sane" railroad Brotherhoods. The latter are appealing to the membership to remain loyal an durge them to "scab" on the "outlaws," declaring the strike is "unauthorized." However, it appears that the long suffering rank and file of the Brotherhoods have decided to support the strike even though it be not sanctioned by the respectable A. F. of L., and it threatens to become national in its scope. Now that the Brotherhood officials are forced to declare themselves, they promptly line up with the railroad managers, and are even calling upon the federal government to enforce the Cummins-Esch act to break the strike. This latest movement of the railway workers indicates that they have grown weary of the duplicity of their officials and will no longer submit to their dictation. "One for All and All for One" is the rallying cry of the rebels, which means that they are at last recognizing the necessity of solidarity. It is about time.

Notwithstanding the columns of publicity given the Presidential aspirants, who are willing to sacrifice themselves to serve the country at Washington at the merely nominal salary of $75,000 per annum, there is a notable lack of interets on the part of the public, most of whom don't care a damn who is to be the next President. The real issue in the campaign will be whether this nation is to remain "dry" or shift back to "wet."

That is what "Two Minute Talks on Today's Topics," published by "The Toiler," in my humble opinion, may without exageration be fittingly designated. Elmer T. Allison, the author, has certainly made a unique contribution to Communist literature. The startling events of the past two years and their evolutionary significance are vividly portrayed in the order of their occurrence. The evident intent of the author in presenting this retrospect is to keep these events fresh in the minds of the workers, whose besetting sin is failure to retain an intelligent grasp on world happenings and their relation to the changing social order. It is a pamphlet deserving of a place in any worker's library, for it can be read again and again with profit. Nothing has been recently printed of equal propaganda value, as it deals largely with social events of recent date and cannot fail to enlist the attention of the reader. The illuminated cover is an added attraction, but the contents is the stuff that "brings home the bacon". Wide awake Communists who know a good thing when they see it will not rest satisfied until they have placed a few copies in the hands of the unenlightened. I cannot recommend "Two Minute Talks" too highly.

Go To Kansas.

By Noah F. Whitaker.

If monstrosities you seek,
Go to Kansas!
On that living fossil freak
Cast your glances!
Yes, he's there, with legal whip,
Herding labor lest it slip—
Lest it take a flying trip,
Where thought advances.

Think you old King Nero's dead?
Go to Kansas!
Pillage kept and profit fed,
There he prances:
Gone full long, but back too soon,
With his jig and rigadoon,
He's still fidding his old tune
While labor dances.

Seek you rotton politics?
Go to Kansas!
There's where legislative sticks,
Turn to lances;
There's where recent laws were made,
That belittled and betrayed,
And put labor in the shade
To dim its chances.

THE "OUTLAWS"

Now comes to bat a real UNAMERICAN strike. All strikes are un-American of course, but the strike of the "outlaw" unions is particularly un-American. Strikes engeneered by the reactionary leaders of labor are not in good taste to the boss class at any time. But strikes against the boss class of the capitalist system as well as against the bosses in the unions — that kind of strike is hell, sure enough.

Tired of waiting for Wilson's administration and Railroad Brotherhood chiefs to run out of words and to tire of confabs, realizing that action, mass action, spoke louder than conferences and arbitration, several thousand railroad workers went on strike in Chicago. In almost a day the strike spread to a dozen industrial centers. The Chicago meat industry was put out of business. Coal shortage threatened Ohio industris. The steel mills were hard hit. Freight was tied up in scores of yards. And all this because a few thousand workers struck. 45,000 out of a total employed in the railroad industry of 1,900,000 is the number the capitalist papers give.

Two dozen reactionary Brotherhood officials signed an order commanding the strikers to go back to work And they did not. The strikers were threatened with a loss of their union standing, their union benefits. To no avail. Then the Brotherhood officials acted true to form and began calling for "loyal" Brotherhood men to take the places of the strikers! The result-firemen and enginemen joined the strikers and refused to work with the union scabs.

Tears were shed by the capitalist dailies because the workers gave no warning before they struck. Mr. Gompers was asked point blank by his bourgeois mentors whether he really knows what is going on inside his organization. Strikes in such numbers (the New York harbor strike; the Kansas coal strike and with such sympathetic relationships and with such demonstration of a design to win "by force rather than on the merits of the industrial struggle" (New York Times) seem a queer phenomona to the capitalist class — and yet not, for this class seems to sense that the whole movement has something to do with Sovietism and that the strikes, the "outlaw" strikes are linked with what is now called "Russian propaganda". Do we need to add that all porpaganda is "Russian propaganda" which seeks to liberate the workers from wage slavery?

What interests us a whole lot is the apparance in the American labor movement of "outlaw" unions. A new class phraze—"outlaw unions". In a day to come a teacher will ask little Willie: "Willie, what kind of unions were outlaw unions in the days when capitalism ruled?" And little Willie will answer: "Outlaw unions were those which rebelled against the reactionary A. F. of L. leadership as well as against the employing class." One hundred per cent in history for Willie!

Hail the outlaw unions! We have them now in almost every trade represented in the A. F. of L. The chiefs of the Brotherhoods in a joint statement described the cause of the strikes as an attempt by radicals to advance the One Big Union idea. That's what all the "chiefs" have said about their outlaw unions. We say—

All right! Guilty!

As this is written the railroad workers strike is increasing in strength. And the capitalist dailies are cutting funny antics. In one cloumn they report that the strike has reached its peak and is now losing. In another column they report thousands of additional strikers agumenting the forces of those already out. The strikers are renegades, the strike is termed as "headless", all of which are good signs, for the more the lackeys of the capitalist class bombard it the better strike it must be, and if it is really headless—well, as we said before, let the slogan among the labor unions from now on be "all pover to the workers".

The administration in the meantime is handling the situation gingerly, if that means that they are up in the air. It's this way—if the administration interferes it may kindle the flames and if it don't, they may ditto. So it does not know what to do. Palmer is nosing about a bit, looking for a mandate hailing directly from Russia ordering the strike!

The strike may yet have political significance. The Lever act is still in working order and the coal miners were enjoined, you know. We'll amend this by saying that the strike already has political significance. Is it not against the administrations success in making monkies out of the Brotherhood chiefs?

Whether the strike of the "outlaws" is won or lost in the end, the strike is now won. It was won the second or third day for it registered a spirit of revolt among the railroad workers which will help settle the fate of capitalism.

This parting shot—IF THE MINE AND STEEL WORKERS HAD WAITED UNTIL NOW, AND THEN—ALL TOGETHER!

Little Lessons for Labor

SKYGAC.

They say that the school of experience is a hard school, but a school whose students always learn. Like the university of hard knocks it forces even the backward and the unwilling, to learn. During the past five years we have had an overplus of patriotic propaganda, the whole tenor of which was if labor will protect the government the government will protect labor.

When some of us who had discovered the class nature of society tried to tell the multitude that the government as it is constituted today was a government of for and by the capitalist class and that the interests of the employing class and the working class were not identical but opposed, we were jailed and persecuted. Now that the coal strike settlement commission has brought in its report we have something concrete to offer as evidence that there ARE classes in society and further that it is childish to expect a commission made up of the employing class to look out for the interests of the working—class. The evidence in this case is so plain, so blunt, so raw, that it seems that even a wayfaring man though a fool might see the truth and act accordingly.

The miners asked:

A 60% increase in wages. (Cost of living has increased over 75% since the last wage scale was adopted.)

The miners got;

A 27% increase in wages, or less than one half!

A thirty hour week. This was to provide for a steady income throughout the year in the place of the overwork at some periods and months of idleness at other periods.

The miners got;

They were allowed to retain the eight hour day!

The miners asked;

Time and a half for overtime, and double time for Sunday.

The miners got;

Left.

The miners asked;

Termination of wage contracts in the fall instead of in the spring.

The miners got;

Wage contracts terminating March 31!

The miners asked;

Nationalization of the coal mines;

The miners got;

Ignored.

The miners asked;

The commission to establish a number of vital reforms in the industry.

The miners got;

Disappointed.

It is just such bitter little lessons as this one, which will drive into the heads of the more reactionary of the miners the idea of the class nature of society and the futility as well as foolishness of wage contracts expiring at a time best suited to the employer's interests.

Government at best is but the executive committee of the capitalist class. It will so remain until enough of the working-class become class conscious and the forces of industrial evolution has forced a new order of society It is a bitter pill for the miners to swallow, but it is out of the sum total of such bitternesses that a new order of society is born.

Craft Unionism -- An Admitted Failure

The acute situation engendered by the railroad strike brought forth some remarks from Samuel Gompers, President of the A. F. of L. while attending the Cigar Maker's Convention, last week in Cleveland that are well worthy of more than a moment's passing attention. Said Mr. Gompers in reference to the strike after scoring the profiteers and the political jerrymandering by Congress of the food control laws,

"No wonder, then, that the workers who did so much to win the war and who are now 33 1-3 per cent worse off financially than before the war are discontented and resentful on account of their present conditions and surroundings.

"Unless wages are increased to meet the increased cost of living, it is equal to a reduction in wages and a corresponding lowering of the workers' standards.

"No wonder, then, that we find workers, nonmembers of organized labor and even some who are union men becoming impatient and disregarding the discipline usually practised in labor unions.".

"Unless wages are increased to meet the increased cost of living, it is equal to a reduction in wages and a corresponding lowering of the workers' standards.

"No wonder, then, that e find workers, non-members of organized labor and even some who are union men, becoming impatient and disregarding the discipline usually practised in labor unions

Looking at these statements by and large, what are they but an admission of the utter failure of craft unionism—the kind fostered by Samuel Gompers for the past 40 years? Mr. Gompers admits by these statements that the workers by organizing into his fossilized craft unions have not been able to maintain their standard of living, but have fallen to a standard one third lower than before the war which they won and out of which grew a crop of 30,000 millionaires.

Officials of the A F of L. take great pains to open their conventions nowadays with declarations that the A. F. of L. is NOT a revolutionary organization seeking to overthrow the present system of—but is a business institution for the maintaince the "American standard of living" for the workers and an increase in the good things of the workers and an increase in the good things of life for them, but without making any radical changes in the industrial system. What would you think of a business institution which had lost one third of its business in two years? You would say its business methods were in need of radical readjustment at least.

And that is what is the matter with the A. F. of L. Its methods are behind the times. It can no longer cope with the capitalist imperialism which has developed within the past ten years. When Machine industry was young and undeveloped to its present stage, when hand labor and personal skill entered largely into production, the workers had some showing against capital. Today the machine has replaced the craftsman's skill. The skill of the mechanic has been placed in the intracate mechanism of machines, the distinctive character of the crafts are all but obliterated: They all melt into one another. But the character of the labor unions, fostered by Gompers remains almost the same. Instead of adapting labor unionism to the changing forms of industrial processes, Gompers has sought to retain the out worn characteristics of a bygone industrial epoch. He still atempts to win a battle against nationwide and worldwide trusts with a handful of workers organized in seperate crafts and with out co-ordination with other groups.

To whine now when the workers are faced with starvation, and attempt to place the blame for it upon politicians is merely to beg the question and to evade the logical results of his own policy and principles A unionism having a membership of 4,000,000 men and women which cannot force from its employers a living wage has something radically wrong with it. But Gompers cannot see it.

But the workers can; they are catching glimpses of a new weapon in the arsenal of Labor. They are examining it and trying it out in spite of Gompers and his host of reactionaries. It is labeled One Big Union. With this weapon, we will win, not paltry increases in pay but a world in which Labor receives the ful ful sociol value of its toil. All power to the workers!

Grand Jury Will Hear Charge.

Charges of violation of the Lever Act against Charles Baker of Ohio, socialist speaker and organizer and J. P. Cannon, Editor of the Workers' World of Kansas City, Mo., will be presented to the Grand Jury sitting at Kansas City April 26th.

Both comrades have been out on bail for some weeks pending the decision of the judgement of the Grand Jury. Comrade Cannon is charged with violation of the Act because of certain articles which appeared in the Workers' World. It is alleged that Baker violated the Act in speeches before bodies of striking coal miners in various Kansas coal camps during the recent national strike of soft coal miners. Comrade Cannon has lately recovered from an attack of influenza contracted while held in prison awaiting the raising of sufficient bail for his release.

The Workers' World, began publication about a year ago, being organized by a group of Kansas City comrades. Comrade Cannon is about the only one of its staff who remains out side of jail at the present time, the rest having been sent to jail some months ago for two year terms for anti-capitalist activities. Their sentence to prison marked the downfall of this fighting organ of the workers. Its publication was discontinued after about nine months due to the repressions imposed upon it.

The Lever Act is one of the indefensible war time laws whose sole function is that of subjugating the workers to the capitalist class will. The Kansas City hearing will be watched by workers of Kansas and Ohio where both Cannon and Baker have strong sympathy and thousands of friends.

MARGUERITE PREVEY ON SPEAKING TOUR.

Comrade Marguerite Prevey, whose incarceration in Columbus, Ohio, jail, charged with violation of the Criminal Syndicalism law of Illinois by assisting in the formation of the Commmunist Labor Party at Chicago last August, and who was abducted at night from jail and forced to journey to prison at Chicago at the hands of Illinois agents, is filling a number of speaking engagements in Ohio.

A very successful meeting was held at Akron April 11th. She also spoke at the Labor Temple at Toledo on the 18th. Meetings at Shadyside, Neffs, Bellaire, Youngstown, Portsmouth, Cincinnati and other Ohio cities are scheduled. It is probable that she will fill dates in Illinois. Thousands of leaflets describing her abuction are being circulated all over the United States.

Comrade Prevey finds interested audiences awaiting to hear the story of her jail experiences of which she has a large fund as the period of her incarceration lasted 29 days and was spent in three prisons, two in Ohio and the other in Chicago.

Making Money

By Scott Nearing.

Capitalist inefficiency is illustrated nowhere more effectively than in the seldom warms them. The place was financing of the European governments during the war. Take France, as a horrible example.

France is in the control of one of the most conservative bourgeois groups in the world. During the war, in order to save themselves, they refused to pay any considerable increase in taxes; instead, they issued paper money and bonds. One quarter of the war cost was raised by taxation in Great Britain. In France, only 15.4 per cent. was secured in this manner.

Instead of paying for the war as they went, through an increase in taxation, the ruling class of France decided to pay for it by printing paper money and by issuing bonds. The total debt of France, before she entered the war was $5,500,000,000; on March 31, 1919, it was $30,500,000,000. In 1914 the Bank of France had 6,000,000,000 francs in note circulation; in November, 1919, the note circulation was 37,000,000,000. Fourteen per cent of this circulation had behind it a metal reserve—gold and silver; the remainder, or 86 per cent, was paper.

When the war broke out, the franc could be bought at the rate of about five for $1. Today francs are selling at little less than nine for $1.

The French business classes believed that they had discovered a new way to make money—turn on the presses, print bonds; engrave paper, and the trick is done. They might as well try to make army blankets out of moon beams. As long as the present system of finance is continued, so long will it be necessary to put value behind paper. The attempt of the French business classes to make money out of paper is merely another illustration of their failure to comprehend the working of the system that has made them rich, and that is now busy destroying them.

Skygac's Column

Arthur Brisbane, Hearst's editorial writer says, "Our recent trouble with Russia was due to the fact that bankers who bought Russian bonds and expected to make a fat profit found they were going to lose all." Quoted from Chicago Herald-Examiner of April 5th. It is all too true--yet up in Minnessota some few years ago there was a gang tried to mob me for making the statement that soldiers were not expected to fight for their own interests but for the interests of those who controlled the state, the capitalists, bankers and politicians! Our penal institutions, (guess we have a right to call them ours — our class builds and inhabits them) are full today of men who made similar statements, but unfortunately who did not have the backing, the money the "pull" to get away with it as does Brisbane.

"The Mediumship of Farmer Riley".

By SYDNEY FLOWER, LL. D.

This is a book of sixty large magazine pages, in which is related in detail the observations of the author during a two weeks' stay at the home of the medium, James Wesley Riley, better known as "Farmer Riley," near Marcellus, Mich. If you have ever asked youreslf the question, "Does man live beyond the grave?" a perusal of this book may perhaps assist you in the formulation of an intelligent answer. The book is as interesting as a romance. In his investigations Mr. Flower rigidly adheres to a program which absolutely precludes all possibility of physical agency in the production of the manifestations. The following synopsis will convey a general idea of the manifestations occuring during this remarkable investigation of psychic phenomena:

Some History and Senator Fall

— By T. E. Pendergrass —

"Six Righteous Reasons Why American and Mexican Workers Should Spill Each Others Blood," in issue of Feb. 27th impels me to add some of my experiences on that important subject, also personal knowledge of the early history of one A. B. Fall, the impartial and "disinterested" Senator from Texas, who represents New Mexico, and who has recently been gathering evidence as to conditions in Mexico.

Mr. Fall.

A Bit of History.

The writer has known Mr. Fall for twenty-five years or more, that is, up to tha time he became politically and socially "famous", at which time he arose beyond our humble station in life.

In our youger days, in the hey-dey of the West, when the saloon and the gambling house were the social center for the male members of the tribe, we have spent many pleasant hours straining our eyesight, looking for two pair, three aces or a full hand in the effort to drag fourth the long green from each other, or some other unlucky member of the round table fraternity.

The scene of most of these sittings were in the towns of Tularosa and Sar Cruses, N. M., the latter then being Mr. Fall's home.

Albert B. Fall was a criminal lawyer of no particular note, practicing only in the local N. M. Courts, up to 1901 to 1904, when he became assistant counsel for the El Paso & North Eastern Rail Road, later the El Paso & South Western, now a part of the Rock Island system!

Shortly after becoming Counsel for this road, which enters Texas at El Paso, both, he and its Chief Counsel W. A. Hawkins, were elected to the legislature of New Mexico. They at once forced thru that body a measure prohibiting persons having claims for damages against Rail Roads of New Mexico, that is claims originating in N. M. bringing suit for settlement in courts of other states! New Mexico was then a territory and its judges were appointed by the President and served both as Local and Federal Judges.

This legislation was specially designed to keep claiments out of the Texas Courts, which state's laws were much more liberal and who's courts were not so completely under the dominence of Railway Corporations. Thus did Mr. Fall begin to assend the political ladder of privilage and prominience.

Next he became Chief Counsel for the Rio Grande Sierre Madre & Pacific Ry., operating out of El Paso into the state of Chihuahua, Mexico. Shortly after this time this road had a bankruptcy proceeding and went into the hands of a receiver. Mr. Fall was made receiver, or became chief counsel and adviser for the receivership. This road was later sold and reorganized under the name of The Mexico North Western. It was purchased by The Pearson Syndicate, an English-Canadian corporation, promoted and headed by The Late Dr. Pearson, who went down on the ill fated Lusitania.

Up to the time Mr. Fall became connected with Railway Corporations he was a very poor man. After the receivership, sale and reorganization of the R. G. S. M. & P. Ry. he began to display considerable wealth. It became common gossip that Mr. Fall was a large holder of Mexican Industrial Securities. He built a palatial home on the mountainside, in a suburb, overlooking El Paso. He later pur- summer home for political purposes. chased a catle ranch at Three Rivers, New Mexico, where he maintains a

In 1910—11 the writer often delivered daily necessities to the Fall home in El Paso, he—the writer—being employed by a Meat and Supply House in capacity of deliveryman. Every order was sent there C. O. D. My instructions were "get the money or return the goods."

Mr. Fall is commonly known out here as The Texas Senator who represents New Mexico. And I might add, he has been both a democrat and a republican.

He began his career as a democrat but as he ascended the political height of ambition, his long ears were transformed into the elephant's snout, New Mexico being mominelly republican.

So much for the man who is making an "impartial" and "disinterested" investigation into Mexican affairs. I shall now add some of my personal experiences to the volumns already gathered on Mexican "Terror".

Some Experiences.

During the whole of the year of 1912 the writer was employed by The Pearson, Madero Co. Ltd. a large lumber corporation, of the Pearson interests, already mentioned, operating at Pearson and Madero, Chihuahua, Mexico. I was located at Pearson, in the very heart of the so called Red Flag Rebellion—Arasco, Solozar-et-al. Many bands of rebels came and went away again. Likewise Federal Soldiers. The color of the flag floating over the town changed often. Yet, strange to relate, the only blood ever spilled was let at a strictly American affair, a Thanksgiving Celebration, which terminated in a drunken brawl, and for which no one was ever punished.

Business went right on, undisturbed except, of course, interuptions with railway traffic.

The only thing approaching a disorder was when the Rebels demanded the surrender of some firearms deposited at the American Hotel. This the management refused to do, declaring there was none there. But the Mexicans knew better, so they threatened to search the premises and seize the arms. They actually locked the propriator up for an hour or two. The arms were later surrendered by mutual agreement. The Rebels receipted for them and went their way.

There were frequent interruptions of railway service, consequently of mail service between us and the states. During all my stay I heard but one gunshot, an accidental discharge by a careless American. Yet, after these interruptions in mail service we would read in the American Press of battles, burnings, lootings, hangings, murder, pillage and rape at Pearson and nearby communities. Most of this we got from the local El Paso papers. These papers would print any lurid story purporting to come out of Mexico. Without attempting to varify it or giving authorship. They would appear under the heading of "It Is Reported." Especially was this the policy of the El Passo Times, the Phelps Dodge Copper Trust (of Bisbee fame) sheet.

It is true that Mexicans did often take supplies without paying for them. At Pearson the Co. had a large merchandise store. They often got food and clothing there, giving only a receipt in exchange. But I never knew of them looting the place. Or even helping themselves, tho the officers often went behind the counters and assisted the clerks in selecting clothing for their men.

The Pearson-Madero Co. remained neutral throughout, consequently none of their property was distroyed except that of transportation.

It is true that they finally had to suspend operations, due to continued interruptions of transportation. They have suffered a loss of profits certainly. But this loss they charge up to the Mexican Nation, expecting it to be paid with interest when peace and tranquility prevail.

I passed out of Mexico several times during the twelve months. Not once was I held up, robbed or molested. This in spite of the fact that different factions controlled. Jaurez, the border port town. at different times. When returning I always brought considerable goods, tools and other personal effects, with me from the states. Not once was I charged a duty on them. And only once was a passport required of me by the Mexicans. But on leaving Mexico finally, the train on which I was riding was held up by a band of Rebels near Chihuahua City. All persons were searched for arms. No money or other valuables were taken from any individual. But being in a playful mood, the "Rebels" sent the train wild into Chihuahua City, leaving us to hoof it some fifteen miles.

I am not pretending there has been no atrocities committed in Mexico during the ten years of Revolution and Counter-Revolution. Personally I know of a number of them. What I am trying to do is to show that there is no foundotion whatever for most of those reports, and to establish the reason for their circulation. It is economic and is deep-seated in the profit taking system and is exploited by those who would profit by intervention.

Bear in mind, Mexico has been in a state of war, more or less, for ten years. Compare the reported atrocities both in number and degree with those reported of other countries and other wars in like period and we find they are as but a speck on the atrocity world map, assuming they are all true, which they are not.

In this connection it is well to quote from another. A capitalist heavily interested in Mexican Oil. In the Ft. Worth Star Telegram, date March 1st appears a statement accredited to one Joseph F. Guffey of Pittsburg, Pa. David Lawrence, newspaper reporter, reports Mr. Guffey as having said, commenting on a reported speech of Governor Lowden of Illinois, wherein he made the statement that affairs in Mexico were "deplorable". Says Mr. Guffey: "Probably an investigation would show that there have been more hold ups, robberies and murders in Illinois during Mr. Lowden's term than in the whole of Mexico in a like period." Mr. Guffey is a man of prominence in America, politically, socially and financially. He states further that most of this stuff about Mexico is propaganda of those financially interested in Mexico saying "The chief offenders in this respect are so called associations for the protection of American rights in Mexico." Mr.

The Black Sheep.

CHAPT. XXVII.

The Jungle.

It is not an uncommon sight for one travelling on the railoads just before entering some of our western towns, to see a small group of poorly clad men huddled about a camp fire on the right of way. Some times they are sheltered by a little shed made of old ties, at other times they are camped among the willows or other forest growth which grows along the track. Even when the men are not there the place is generally marked by a variety of old cans and buckets, store boxes, and other apparently worthless stuff. Also by a variety of names and initials carved on the trees and fences, if such there be. "It is a jungle, and to spend the night in such a place is known as "jungling up."

The average person living in a comfortable home and, having an income from business or otherwise as a rule has a very erronious idea of the class of men that inhabited these places during the time of this story. They were not tramps in the common meaning of that word; they were migratory workers who followed the harvests and other seasonal occupations. This work was too poorly paid to allow the worker to establish a home and live with any degree of comfort, for no sooner did he accumulate a few dollars than he had to move on in search of new employment. This form of labor which is absolutely essential to American grain and fruit industry could not help but develop the rolling stone which in its rolling lost what little moss it was inclined to gather.

These men as a rule did not earn money enough to partake of the commercial hospitality of the towns or to ride on passenger trains. Their mode of travel was in box cars or on the rods under them, and their hotels were the places described at the beginning of this chapter. Here they stayed regardless of rain or storm while they waited for their next opportunity to board a freight which would carry them in the direction they wanted to go.

It was in such a place that Jack found himself the evening he tumbled down the railroad embankment and joined the group that was sheltered in the Culbert behind the cheery blaze that had attracted his attention. It was what they called a "jungle of some class." That sygnified that it afforded more than average shelter. It was located in a little ravine at the bottom of which was a culbert under the railroad grade. The men had stopped up the further end with railroad ties, dry grass, and tamped it with snow excluding the bitter north wind and in front of this they had built a fire As long as the fire burned brightly the interior of the cave so construcaed was comfortably warm but the moment the fire died down the cold struck in and chilled the inmates to the marrow. Thus it was that while two or three slept two or three were kept busy rustling wood to keep up the glim.

When Jack arrived at the bottom of the ravine he found that the men about the fire were just an ordinary group of 'jungle birds' They were workers in search of a job and consequently like himself broke. One or two of them were extremely ragged and almost shoeless. Tired and footsore as the boy was he pitied them, and earnestly wished that he had the nine dollars which he paid the railroad company for the trip to his Montana job. It never dawned on him that if he had that nine dollars he might never have left that cave alive. In those days as now poverty was an essential to safety for the man who follows migratory labor.

There was but little formality of welcome except an anxious query on the part of the junglers as to the boys financial condition. Or if he had any punk (bread) in his possession. When he informed them that a lone fifty cent piece was his only companion they immediately began to figure what that would buy if the additional sixty cents possessed by the company were added to it. The whole amount was now intrusted to one of their number who was delegated to go to the village about a mile down the road and purchase the trimmings for a mulligan. It may be well to explain what a mulligan is. It is nothing more than such eatables that can be scraped together and boiled into a stew hich the hungry men eat with improvised forks and spoons generally cut from twigs of trees. The steaming hot mess has a wonderful revivifying effect upon any group of half frozen jungle Ambassador departed to the jungle ambassador departed to the village than two others were sent to raid the defenseless hen roost of a farmer who was known to live som where down the ravine. Jack having contributed the largest single share to the finance and being in an exausted physical condition was elected to stay near the fire and rest and being more tired than hungry he laid down upon the frozen ground and fell asleep. His leep was not dreamless however for the vision of hot soup drifted before his eyes and then again he saw visions of the little cabin on the shores of Couer d'Alane and Collins and Rudolph frying fish and arguing philosophy, and then again more presisitent than all others he saw the bars of the jail at Anamoose and beyond them, the auburn hair and blue eyes of Olive Anderson. He really slept for two hours but to him it seemed but a moment when the two men came tumbling into the cave with the mortal remains of a couple of old hens. We use the adjective old advisedly. They said that they had to go nearly two miles before they met a dog with whom they could talk business. They had no sooner deposited their prey in the large five gallon kerosine can which served as the jungle stew pot than they asked for the trimmings and were informed that the ambassador whom they had sent to the center of civilization had not returned with the articles of commerce, for which he was to negotiate. Suspicion was immediately aroused and threats were made, dire, horrible threats which of course were not executed. If Jack had been a little more acquainted with jungle ways he might have quoted very appropriate scripture to those who did the threatening for with the exception of the boy every mother's son of them had doen what their ambassador was doing there fore he might have said "he whom there is amongst you without sin, let him cast the first stone."

The fact was that their ambassador finding himself in possession of a dollar and ten cents immediately forgot his constituents. Every one of them were broke and he was a monied man. For it must be admitted that there is a vast difference betewen a dollar and he arrived in the village he forthwith he arrived in the village he forth with entered the premises of "John Barleycorn" and there sailed the seas of happiness until the last penny had crossed the bar, after which the jungle Ambassador was forcibly evicted by a husky bar tender. It was about two o'clock in the morning when he returned to the jungle in what police judges call "an intoxicated condition". Jack was the only one who listened to his story of having met a friend who was hungry and too weak to come to the jungle, the others paid no tatention to him. There had been occassions when they told similar stories themselves. Needless to say when the miscreant returned the others had devoured the chicken and he was forced to continue his fast.

About five o'clock the next morning Jack followed his new found companions to a point about two miles west of the town and there in the morning twilight they boarded a west bound freight and clung to it until in the evening, when one of the group told them that they had better get off as the most blood thirsty rail road bull on the entired division was to be found at the next stop. They had however crossed the great divide and were well down on the Pacific slope where the weather was much milder—and the jungling easier. They camped for the night in an old cabin which evidently had belonged to a prospector in days gone by. Two of the group now went to the town to do a little "pan handling" and they invited the Ambassador of the night before to go with them leaving Jack and a young fellow who called himself 'Boston Slim' to arrange matters in the cabin. The Ambassador was rather ill having had nothing but whisky for about fifty hours. The other two were in no happy frame of mind toward him, so it happened on the way to town that they forced him into an argument and gave him a sound drubbing after which he was dismissed from their company.

When the two arrived in the town of Mullen one went to a hotel and asked for an envelope and some stationary He put the stationary in the envelope and wrote on the outside the address of Mrs. Sarah Jones, Leesville, Ohio, and went down the street. The first residence he came to he knocked on the door and told the lady who answered a hard luck story asking her to give him a postage stamp that he might send this letter to his mother for assistance. She did not have the stamp but gave him a quarter and so he went from house to house until he had gathered about four dollars. He returned to the cabin, loaded with the necessaries of life. The other partner had taken less labor having simply taken a dressed chicken and two loaves of bread out af a grocery delivery wagon while the delivery man was in a house. There was a feast in the jungles that night and the next morning Jack walked into town and got his first job in the mines.

Once safely installed in the mine boarding house Jack was given a glimpse of another phase of the class struggle. He had been suddenly transplanted from the agricultural to the industrial proletariat and his analytical mind was not slow to discover that a man's industrial environment greatly modifies his mental processes as well as his physical habits of life and action. He noticed that there was a mining type as there was an agricultural type, and later on he would learn that each particular industry has tendency to draw to itself definite types of men and women.

He was employed as a mucker at first but in a couple of days he was given a job swinging a drill hammer. From the start he liked the work as it took him far into the bowels of the earth and by actual contact taught him much about the formation of rocks and the disposition of metaliferous ores. Eagerly he listened to every conversation the miners held upon the subject of formation, lodes and fissures, as well as upon the technique of working the mine, and in less than a week he caught himself using such terms as "dip, contact, talewall" as well as the different technical names of ores that the local mines yielded. But his contact with George and Herman, Rudolph and Collins had opened his mind's eye to the human side of the question. He could not help but ask how does this work effect the men engaged in it? How does it effect society as a whole? To what extent is the farmer dependent upon the miner? Can the miner exist independent of the farmer? This led him to interrogate his fellow workers as to their social conditions, and thru this discovered that the class war of which his friends had spoken and the foretaste of which he had experienced in the Anamoose jail was in reality the most diabolical fact in modern existence.

For the first time he learned that the Western Federation of Miners had been, and still was in a life and death strugle with the mine owners. They told him of the pitched battles which had been fought at Cripple Creek and other Colorado towns, of the thugs and gun men employed by the company to terrorize workers into accepting company conditions of servitude. They also told him that only the summer before the union miners in the mine he now worked had been taken and herded into a bull pen, guarded by companies of negro soldiers. These negroes seeing that the white men were confined and helpless had openly insulted and taken liberties with the

Crashing on to Ruin

Capitalism is running a race with Destruction. Here as elsewhere. All informed observers agree that unless Europe can be placed in a position to feed itself and quickly at that, the downfall of the present system and the rise of Sovietism is inevitable. The world war disrupted the industrial machinery of production to such an extend that revolutionary uprisings of the masses of suffering peoples have resulted almost universally.

A general world revolution is what capitalism faces. That is what it is attempting to keep down. And the tale which all travelers from Europe bring is—more credit, more food, more clothing, more of all things which human beings need and crave for a decent existence for Europe—or Sovietism, Socialism, Bolshevism will inevitably arise. Revolutions rise from unsatisfied hunger, even dense capitalism realizes this—now. It is bending every effort to stave off the inevitable collapse.

The elements which have brought about the present condition of Europe are active in American industry and social life. Millions of workers, organized workers, are unable to live upon their incomes. Capitalism in the one country of the world which actively participated in the recent holocaust with practically no economic loss, finds itself unable to guarantee its workers enough of the necessities of life to make living bearable.

Within the past six months nationwide strikes in three basic industries have occured. Thousands of lesser strikers have taken place. Hundreds are occuring every day in the year. Spontancity, always an active element in times of unrest is seen in all of them. The workers, without apparent reason to a casual observer strike, disrupt the industrial processes to a tremenodus degree. Labor is restive. An insignificant group of workers walk off the job, a workman is jailed, and as a result, a whole industry of a city or even a state is knocked out of commission for a day or a week.

Continuance of the capitalist system of production demands an unceasing flow of products for out of the products must come the profits of capital. A discontented, striking, sabotageing working class is not only a non producer of surplus value, profits, but is a positive element of danger to the system of production. It may at a propitions moment decide to dispose of the owners of industry and operate it for their own benefit. Unless capitalism can guarantee the workers enough of the necessities of life to keep them contentedly at work, the danger is accentuated to a degree that increases in proportion to the discontent.

American capitalism, it seems has evolved to the point where it can make no such guarantees. It is because of this fact that we witness the perpetual industrial strife and the ever growing discontent of the workers. Capitalism is crashing on to its ruin here as elswhere. Its day is done.

A Spring-time Fad

The overall wearing fad has lately struck the country—or at least it has in the newspapers whose enterprise keeps them on the alert for bunk of this sort. If you took them seriously you'd believe that our poor millionaires and politicians were all going to clothe themselves in the "purple of the poor." (That's our own.) Ostensibly, the overall is coming into its own as a means of reducing the cost of living of those who can afford to live well. The papers have been filled with pictures of politicians, judges, bankers and a lot of that riff raff posed in their new blues. The idea seems to have a sudden appeal to persons of quality who never heretofore had a desire to be photographed in the garb of a useful citizen.

Now, we know something about overalls. We were born in them so to speak. At least we grew up in them and have worn out as many pairs as any one of similar age and carlessness, we wager. And we know that no one wears them for appearances, comfort or for the satisfaction of any aesthetic taste. And so when we view their sudden putting on by members of the bourgeois we just smile and say, "wait six weeks." The fad will pass—and it will pass without having reduced to a half penny the high cost of clothing.

Methinks the bourgeoisie might do well to get used to the scratchy things tho, the sooner the better perhaps. Since the big turnover in Russia it looks like overalls were going to be in great demand and it might come suddenly, so if the bourgeoisie have a few pairs in the attic or the basement when the demand is heavy they will be in luck. We would even suggest that they retain the fad until that time as it will save them a great deal of embarrassment when the order comes to mobilize for useful production. It would be the first time that we know of that a fad became a useful habit.

By all means keep them on—you might be taken for a useful producer.

DEFEND THEM NOW—WHILE DEFENSE WILL HELP!

Lotta Burke' Charles Baker and Marguerite Prevey have been indicted for opposing the Dictatorship of Capitalism. They have done their best for the workers in the Class War between Capital and Labor. Capital has indicted them and will attempt to put them in jail where their usefulness to the workers will cease.

They must be defended. You can help defend them by helping to pay the costs of their fight for freedom. We ask you to help NOW when defense is needed and your dollars will help most.

SAVAGERY.
Middle Age.

The second age of human history is known as the age of middle savagery and dates from the discovery of the utility of fire.

We know practically nothing of the circumstances under which man discovered the utility of fire. We can only speculate upon the probable circumstances. It is highly probable that the utility of fire was discovered and lost and discovered again by various tribes of primitive man before its utility became generally known.

While we may never know just HOW the use of fire originated, we CAN know that all the advancement of later civilization rests upon the unrecorded strivings of primitive man through the uncounted ages of the past.

Curiosity was the probable cause of primitive man's discovery of the utility of fire. Curiosity is a marked characteristic of all primitives, and the supposition is, that in examining the smoldering embers left from a forest fire the discovery was made.

Whatever the method first used, fire from lava or volcanoes, fire set while playing with pieces of transparent quartz, fire by friction, fire by spontaneous combustion, fire from a lightning stroke, we know now that man is the only animal which can build a fire and keep it burning.

All of the methods by which fire may be produced may be summed up under three heads, electrical, chemical and tactile.*)

All animals except man dread fire. Without fire, man was the prey of all the predatory animals of the night. The camp-fire was man's first real home, his first refuge of safety from the teeth of the dark. The love of fire is an instinct which has come down the ages to us from the period of middle savagery. This instinct had its origin in the safety and comfort which the fire afforded.

An instinct is a race memory—things we do because our ancestors HAD to do them in order to survive.

The lure of the camp-fire entices all who are human, but it has an especial lure for children who biogenetically are passing thru that stage of their development which corresponds with middle savagery in our phylogenetic history.)

Fire gave man an enormous advantage in the struggle for existence. It gave him protection from beasts of prey and in addition it enabled him to increase his food supply. Cooked food was added to his daily menu. Fire also enabled man to widen his range of travel.

Early migrations were doubtlessly due to several causes. Fire, by making a fish diet palatable, enabled him to travel along the shores and steams. Forest or prairie fires by destroing the available food supply would force man to migrate in search of other sources of food. Fecundity would also force migration.) The fiction of man's existence at the beginning of the fire age.

number of individuals becoming greater than the food supply of the territory, not yet having learned artificial means of production, migration was the only other alternative.*)

Migration caused primitives of various groups to meet, and by the law of imitation, to copy the language and methods of each other. This is the basis of primitive education.

The primitives who were adaptabel and learned the utility of fire had an enormous advantage over their non-fire-using brothers. An opportunity for an undisturbed rest and sleep at night thus conserving energy for the acquisition of food during the daylight hours made a stronger race and made the fire-users the dominant race.

Knowledge of the utility of fire is a SOCIAL HERITAGE, and is inseparably interwoven with every phase of human progress. No civilization is possible without fire. No metals, no engines, no electrical devises, no telegraphs or telephones, no mills, mines or factories are possible without a knowledge of the uses of fire.

If one individual throughout the ages had collected one cent from each individual who benefited from a knowledge of the utility of fire (as we today, through patents, set aside a sum for great inventors) that individual would today be the economic master of the world.

During the age of middle savagery the primitive sun dance took on a religious character, out of which some authors*) claim the decorative idea evolved. Primitive clothing was a development of this idea.

It was during the age of middle savagery that the rudiments of most of our institutions took form. Primitive groups developed into gentes and tribes, the group marriage taking on definite character. This age ended with the discovery of pottery making. Its duration in years was much less than that of lower savagery.

*) Tyndall in his book, "Heat a Mode of Motion" has an excellent discussion on the probable methods by which fire was first produced. The student is also referred to C. W. Garrett's "Fire, from Holocaust to Beneficence."

) Professor J. Howard Moore's little book, "The Law of Biogenesis," is a veritable mine of information concerning the instincts of savagery which may be observed in growing children. In addition to naming and explaining such instincts as the love of fire, the love of water, the fear of the dark, the gang instinct, the combative instinct, the throwing instinct etc., he also traces the workings of the biogenetic law in the mental world as well.

)Note here the material external origin of ideas. Ideas do not spring ready made out of the ether but are the result of adaptability to the impressions caused by changes in his environment. All of the ideas which men have, or had, had their origin in material environment. Thus out of a cave, and having experienced its comfort, the IDEA of building an artificial cave or shelter would naturally be forced into the savage brain.

SPARKS.

A S. of Christopher Ill., says he is on the job for defense of comrades Prevey, Baker and Burke.

Comrades of Molio Ill., are asking for Prevey dates. Many Ohio Locals are arranging for meeting for her.

Akron held a good Prevey defense meeting Sunday, April 11th.

Comrade L. W. of Weston, W. Va. has promised a very substantial sum for the Prevey, Baker, Burke defense. He has collected it from among fellow workers.

One Hundred Strangling America leaflets go to comrade Morgan od Moline. Have you distributed a hundred yet? Better order now.

Among many orders for leaflets Nos. 1. and 2. is that od Local Cincinnati for 500 Soviet Labor Laws.

Local Portsmouth orders 200 each of these leaflets. Also calls for a Prevey date.

L. A. C. of Akron casually remits for 11 subscriptions. He sure has gotten the boosting habit.

Comrade Gregory sends us 6 subs. from Cincinnati and tells us how he helps to keep up the work. Accepting pamphlets for premiums, he distributes these among the workers. This leads to more subs. and they in turn mean more distribution of pamphlets. Thus the education of the workers continues. Good scheme.

Remember—with over $7.50 worth of subscriptions sent us we will give $1.50 worth of literature—your choice. Can you do better?

Comrade Thomas of Akron falls in line with a bunch of 6 subscriptions. All of which proves that it can be done — doesn't it?

Another reaper of six comrade A. W. W. of Massilon. And again we say it's proof that it can be done. Better get a subscription blank, comrade and do it too.

We note a handful of cards from comrade Blank among the weeks sub. receipts. This is not something new. We comment upon it because it happens so often—that's all.

And here are four cards from J. B. A. of Lock 4 Pa. He's another who has the sub. getting habit.

Two subscriptions and $1.00 for the cartoon fund is received from comrade Tragesser of Akron. One little boost deserves another apparently.

Comrade Reed of Providence R. I. remits for two subs. Just a proof that we are stretching out into new territory.

Comrade usually deel grateful if we keep their names on the list for a week or two after the expiration of their subsciptions. But they take a chance by not renewing at once. When you get a renewal slip better renew at once and be sure of getting all issues.

Comrade Scott of Lawndale, remits for two new ones. There's a lot of satisfaction in getting even one sub for The Toiler. Better grab off all the little pleasures there are running around lose, comrades. Getting subs for The Toiler is one that's available to all.

But when one grabs off a bunch of half a dozen we imagine that the booster feels so good that it keeps him awake nights. However that may be, comrade Hilkins of Toledo does that. At last reports he was exceptionally happy.

Another hundred copies of Soviet Labor Laws go to comrade Blodgett of So Bend. Just shows how they are going Are any going to you?

A big order of pamphlets goes to comrade Howell of Mineral Wells Texas. That's a long way but it proves how far away The Toiler reaches. Comrade Howell is busy in the work of literature distribution.

A comrade from Tacoma Wash., writes: I send every copy of The Toiler to "Freiheit", Berlin, Germany". Suppose the conservatives of Germany would denounce him as an "American bolshevik attempting to undermine our country and institutions".

Four is the number of subscriptions sent us last week by comrade Cole of Jackson Mich.

Comrade Meads remits for 4 subs from various parts of the U. S.

Seven at a clip is what comrade Lennox of Sidney sends us. As a premium he asks for Lenin the Man.

Comrade Jenkins of Weirton, W. Va remits for two subscriptions and leaflets.

Comrade Litten of Flushing takes the prize this ewek for the number of subs sent in. His list totals fifteen. That ought to make others feel that life still holds some hope, eh?

Free Books and Pamphlets

Beginning April 1st the subscription price of The Toiler advances to $1.50 per year, 6 months 75c. The advancing costs of publication will no longer permit us to publish at the old rate of $1.00 per year.

In this connection we wish to urge every Toiler booster to strive the harder for subscriptions. The field is unlimited and at the new rate which is not at all high comparatively, there should be no slackening up in the number of subscriptions received. On the contrary, there should now be a greater effort on the part of Toiler readers to help its circulation grow. No weekly periodical gives its readers a higher grade publication than The Toiler and with the hearty support of its readers it will continue to become a better paper.

Our offer of $1.50 worth of literature with every purchase of $5.00 worth of subscription cards has enabled many comrades to obtain good books and pamphlets free. We will continue this offer with only one change. Instead of receiving $1.50 worth of literature for $5.00 worth of cards we will now give the same amount of literature free with every $7.50 worth of subscription cards.

COMMUNIST SATURDAY - MAY 1st. Work for Communism!

THE SOCIAL REVOLUTION IN GERMANY.

By Linn A. E. Gale.

The New York World on January 1, 1919, declared editorially that "a Bolshevik Germany means a Bolshevik Europe."

At that time German soldiers returning from the eastern front were bringing copies of the proclamation issued by the Soviet government of Russia that said: "The Socialist union of Russia, Austria and Germany must be established on the ruins of militarism, imperialism and economic slavery."

Commenting on the situation Louis C. Fraina, then editor of the Revolutionary Age, and now international secretary of the American Communist Party, wrote: "The general European, the World Revolution, depends upon the completion of the Proletarian Revolution in Germany; but equally the Proletarian Revolution in Germany depends upon the General Revolution."

Nobody appreciates these facts and fears a Soviet Republic in Germany more than the great capitalist nations of the world. Constantly they have shuddered at the thot of a Bolshevist regime in Berlin and yet they have hesitated to do the very things that might have delayed Bolshevism there for considerable time. They have stood between the devil and the deep sea—between their fears, on the one hand, of a Bolshevist Germany, and their fears, on the other hand, of a reaction to kaiserism and the return to power of the junkers. Seesawing back and forth, afraid of both contingents, they have concluded that it was better to frankly support or at least tolerate the old military party than to do anything which hastens Soviet rule. So in the recent coup when the Hindenburg gang was in the ascendency and the restoration of monarchy was not unlikely, the Allies kept hands off and promised not to interfere unless the situation could not be controlled within the country. It was plain where their sympathies were. In spite of their hatred for the kaiser and his party — a hatred not based on principle, but based on commercial rivalry and jealousy—they preferred a resumption of kaiserism to the adoption of Communism.

This very treachery and stupidity on the part of Allied capitalism, will produce the precise consummation that it so fears and shrinks from.

Repression and tyranny in Germany practiced by the fake Socialist government of Ebert, Scheidemann and approved and even urged by the Allied governments, are driving Germany direct to Soviets. Moderation and prudence would have delayed the Social Revolution in Germany. But blind rage and terrorism have hastened it as nothing else could. This present revolution may or may not be successful. But the masses of Germany have been convinced by bitter experience and brutal oppression that Soviets are their salvation and that a capitalistic republic is as bad as or worse than the old regime of the kaiser. And if this revolution does not succeed, there will be another one that will succeed.

"Democracy has had its chance in Germany and lost it", says Maximilian Harden, and he is right. Capitalistic diplomacy made a mess of the situation and only stirred the German proletariat to deeper depths of revolutionary feeling. The people, disillusioned and awakened, will now have Communism or nothing. They want no more either of monarchism or of capitalist "democracy."

Harden well says, "The outside world must prepare itself to deal with a modified Soviet government in Germany. Factory Soviets are going to dictate the policy of the government thru their central committee... For a year this socalled democratic government had its own vay but did ont know how to satisfy the people.... The government had the task of removing every sign of the old autocratic rule which had become detestable to the German people and to make then realize a new era. What did it do? It maintained the country in a state of armed siege on the one side, flattering the bourgeoisie that the old capitalism would continue, deceiving the workmen with the idea that the socialization of industries was a meoe matter of time... Then came the affair of January 13, when the government shot up the demonstration before the Reichstag. Since then the workmen have been restive..."

The present revolution soon followed. Whatever may be the immediate outcome it is a well-planned, wisely-directed revolution. The workers know what they are doing. The Spartacans of Germany have learned by experience, also not a little by observing that master mind, Lenin, vhose cool-headedness and far vision have baffled and beaten the imperialists of the whole world. The German revolutionists, 100,000 in numbers, seised Essen, the home of the mammoth Krupp arms plant, and the very heart of Prussian militarism. Next they took possession of the cities of Duseldorf where food and clothing are produced, and Kiel, where ships are manufactured. Unless there is a sudden reaction, it will not be many days, judging from conditions at this writing, before all Germany will be under the red flag of International Communism.

A loan of money to the Ebert government to enable it to buy sufficient supplies from other countries, would have tided it over a little longer, altho it could not have prevented the eventual uprising that was certain. But the Allies were too vacillating in their policy and too fearful of helping the defeated foe, to extend the needed help. They could not see that the German people, lacking raw materials, could not barter goods for goods and must either get a loan with which to buy those goods or else go to pieces. They were too short-sighted to realize that the more they "punished" Germany by withholding help and keeping her in a state of paralysis and privation, the more fuel they were adding to the flames of Bolshevism within her borders.

It is so thruout the world. It is characteristic of a privileged class that when it gains a certain modicum of power, it begins to lose all sense of reason and to imagine that it can, in street vernavular, "get away with anything." Judgment no longer restrains it. Yielding to unlimited greed and avarice, it spoils its own game and deprives itself of even what it already possesses. Like the dog in Aesop's fables, who dropped the piece of meat from his mouth to grab for the reflected piece in the water, plutocracy loses what it now has in a foolish effort to snatch still more from the masses.

American capitalism is playing with matches and dynamite when it denies radicals the use of constitutional methods and will not even seat Socialist officials who have been legally elected. The inevitable result will be resort to direct action and possibly to bloody revolution.

Even as America will be by the White Terror, so Germany is already being scourged into unadulterated Bolshevism by the unmitigated severity of its peace terms and the unbridled ferocity of its general policy. Whether the Spartacans come into power right now or a little later is not the question. The big fact is that they are going to rule Germany and that it is now too late to stem the tide of public sentiment. The masses are aroused. Soviet Germany is a certainty.

Calmly and complacently, we Communists watch the suicidal folly of the capitalist class of all countries.

We need only prepare to establish the New Order. The capitalists themselves are tearing down the old one as rapidly as we could wish.

Three little stingy hours.

THEY WERE "WILLING"(?)

By Linn A. E. Gale.

Paul Wallace Hanna, writing for the Federated Press, calls attention to the famous remark of President Wilson in June 1917 of the Selective Draft Law: "This is in no sense a conscription of the unwilling". Mr. Hanna adds, "And now comes Senator Fall and the Associated Press declaring 'Thirty thousand Americans crossed into Mexico to evade the Draft Law'".

Oh, yes, they were willing. So "willing" that 30,000 of them left the country and that many of those who remained in the country went to jail and suffered the horrors of the inquisition rather than go to Europe and cut out the gute of their fellow men. So "willing" that all thru the west and southwest of the U. S. thousands of bands of "slackers" organized to resist being dragged into camp, establishing retreats in caves, forests and various isolated places So "willing" that many of them had to be beaten, bayonetted and even shot before they would consent to participation in the boasted war for democracy. And so "willing" that thousands of those who took their medicine and went to Flanders and were lucky enuf to come back alive, declare that all hel could not drive them into another such bloody farce.

Senator Fall has been making some interesting "discoveries" lately, among them being this fact that so many conscientious objectors went to Mexico and another being the fact that the Communist Party of Mexico believes in Communism and is therefore opposed to any more capitalist wars.

If Senator Fall continues to manifest the same superior intelligence, he will probably "discover" some of these days that it wouldn't be a very healthy thing for him and his co-agents of Wall Street to try to send the boys of the U. S. out on another such errand of suffering and slaughter.

The British Labor Movement.

BY FELIX MORLEY

Staff Writer — The Federated Press

Article 4—The Labor Press

LONDON—A favorite saying in the navy is that the fighting power and general efficiency of any squadron must be calculated on the speed, armament and other characteristic of the weakest unit in that squadron; that one up-to-the-minute batteleship does not make the whole fleet weak; that for instance, there is no adventage in possessing a ship capable of steaming thirty miles an hour if it has to stay in line with another whose top-most speed is fifteen miles an hour.

As the navy is one of the encumbrances from which labor suffers in the form of wasted production, indirect taxation, militaristic spirit and lowered standard of living, labor at least should appropriate any idea which may emanate from a "service" for the maintenance of which it pays so dearly. In particular it should realize the truth of the "weakest unit" theory and note how truly it holds in the labor movement. For the weakest unit in the labor movement of every capitalist nation today is undoubtedly the highly important unit of the labor press.

This is clearly recognized in England, and at the present time the entire labor movement is devoting a great deal of time, energy and money to building up a powerful labor press. The cooperation of every element, extremists, moderates, and the various shades of opinion in between, is as marked a characteristic of this effort as it is of every phase of the British Labor Movement. The results of cooperation are already apparent in the increased circulation and freedom from government persecution which is enjoyed by labor papers over here. I asked one of the editors of the Daily Herald whether that powerful organ of labor thought is in anyway hampered by government censorship, denial of second-class mailing privileges, or other more or less subtle efforts to curtail its influence in behalf of social progress.

"They know that if they tried to suppress the Herald now the Triple Alliance would stop every wheel in the country," he replied.

"And what would happen if a bill were introduced in Parliment empowering the Postmaster General to suppress labor newspapers at his discretion, as has been done in America with us?" I inquired.

The reply was a heartly laugh. "Why Lloyd George knows only too well that it was tactics of that sort which made a bloody revolution in Russia inevitable", he said, adding that the same realization of the intention of the workers to maintain the right of free press is held by the government with a respect to papers more directly propagandist in their outlook, usch as the Glasgow "Forward."

Any article on the British Labor Press at the present time must center on the Daily Herald. It is the one daily newspaper of British labor; is already a very vital factor in the labor movement on this side, and is steadly gaining in importance. Remarkable success in getting accurate news from Russia is only one reason why it is so cherished by the British Labor Movement. The special trade union committee of which Arthur Henderson is chairman, appointed last November to assist in developing the paper, stated recently that "during tre trying period of reconstruction through which we are passing our work would appear wellnigh hopeless without the Daily Herald."

It was the great railway strike last fall which really made the Daily Herald. The capitalist press united in characterizing the attitude of the railway men as something little short of anarchy. As the only daily giving a true account of the strikers' case the Herald's fundamental importance to the whole labor movement was recognized everywhere. Its daily circulation leaped to half a million and at city news stands there were throngs every morning asking for "the labor paper." Tho the circulation since then has dropped to a daily average of something over 300,000 is due solely to the fact that the paper's present printing equipment in London can not meet the full demand.

Imagine an honest labor newspaper with a circulation approximating that of the New York Times and reaching every corner of Great Britain, a paper which subscribers to every press association operating in England and in addition is now spending upwards of $25,000 a year on special foreign correspondence, a paper which not only covers the industrial news of Great Britain from the workers standpoint, but which can be relied upon to contain all that is essential of the news printed in other papers,—and you have a good idea of the position already eached by the Herald. And yet it is of comparatively recent origin, founded in March 1912 as a daily, becoming a weekly in September, 1914, (after the outbreak of war), and starting up as a daily again only in March 1919. It should be noted that the Herald would not have been able to resume publication as a daily last year had it not been for the generosity of a small group of wealthy sympathizers who made the paper an unconditional gift of half a million dollars, without any suggestions or strings as to policy attached.

At first glanc the Daily Herald is not impressive to American eyes, following the general English custom of small size and extreme condensation of all but the most important news. There are only five columns to the page and eight pages a day, excepting Monday when the issue is ten pages. The Herald does not appear Sundays at present. This smallness of size is somewhat compensated by the small attention which is paid to advertising, an average of not more than three columns an issue being taken up by trade "ads". About a page is given to topical photographs and other daily features. There is an editorial page of exceptional strength, which carries special articles by men and women prominent in all phases of labor movement. There are also excellent cartoons by Will Dyson, rather spoilt by being compressed into one column width. In common with most English papers the Herald is not a financial success at the present time. It is running at a loss of about $3000 a week.

The plans which have been laid to develop the Daily Herald and insure financial success, promise to make it one of the greatest and most influential newspapersin the world, bar none. They comprise, (1) printing simultaneously in London and Manchester, in the northwest of England with the same general, but different local news, so that the industrial north and Ireland can be readily supplied with a real labor newspaper. It is expected that this will result in the circulation going up to a million copies a day. (2) Enlarging the paper by making it ten or twelve pages daily, and adding a Sunday edition, which could be accomplished when the present strain on the London plant is relieved. (3) Issuing an Evening Daily Herald, with entirely different staff but same general policy as the present paper.

To accomplish these end a great deal of money is necessary, and the way the entire labor movement is rallying to supply this money is typical of the cooperation which is bringing so much success in England. The special committee appointed by trade union officials to develop the paper consists of Arthur Henderson, secretary of the Labor Party; Frank Hodges of the miners, J. H Thomas of the railwaymen, Ernest Bevin of the dockers, W. C. Robinson and Ben Turner of the Textile workers. Local development committees are at work in every section of the country and from the way cash and pledges are rolling in it appears that the desired fund of $500,000 will be at hand by the end of this month. An improtant development contemplated will later give the unions authority to nominate half fo the board of directors of the paper, though there is no question of interfering with the control of policy exercised by George Lansbury as chairman of the editorial board

So far as the daily newspaper field is concerned the Daily Herald is the labor press of Great Britain. At the present time it is far from adequate to the responsibility imposed by this condition a fact which its editors are the first to admit. It must be remembered, however, that any big New York or Chicago paper has a territorial circulation as wide as England, Scotland and Wales combined, and that Great Britain is still a country largely dependent on three cities,—London, Manchester and Glasgow,— for an informative press. When the Daily Herald is printed simultaneously in London and Manchester, with a morning and afternoon edition, and possible further development in Glasgov, a long step will have been taken towards meeting the irsistent demand for a press able to voice the truth about the British Labor Movement.

The Daily Herald is the only daily, but by no means the only paper of British labor There is a strong group of influential labor weeklies which are not only filled with labor news of national and international importance, but also serve to fill in the field of local information which is beyond the scope of the Daily Herald. A good example is the "Labor Leader", at present a four column, twelve page weekly with a circulation of 60,000. This paper it the official journal of the Independent Labor Party and well expresses the intelligence, common sense, and fighting qualities which ahve made this Socialist organization the leading factor in the labor movement. Special articles by such leading characters as Ramsey MacDonald, Margaret Bondfield, Philip Snowden and Mary McArthur have much to do with its popularity.

Weekly papers rather similar to the Labor Leader in apperance, but more violent in tone, are the "Call," the official organ of the British Socialist Party, and the Glasgov "Forward," an independent paper mainly devoted to spreading the cause of industrial unionism. The circulation of the latter is about 40,000; that of the Call something less.

In common with other European countries there is a strong demand in England now for building up a powerful and comprehensive international Labor Press Service. This sentiment is being reduced to practical details. The Daily Herald has already unofficially promised to spend $2500 a year in subscribing to such a service. Plans for general British participation have been pretty well orked out. The executive committee of the Trades Union Congress have been asked to consider the recomendation that British Labor's official subscription to an International Labor Press should be not less than $15,000 a year. Here a reilable international labor news service is regarded as a most necessary step and there is much comment over the apparent apathy of American labor towards the project.

miners wives and daughters. The man who gave him this information was sympathetic to the union but the rest of his companion seemed to have no conception of their rights in this world. The great mass of them even of those who were organized had no real conception of the historic and social nature of the class struggle. With most of them it was all a matter of good employers and bad. It all depended on the kind of company one worked for. Still he noticed that among the workers who were inclined to think for themselves that they all sympathized more or less with organized effort but they all cautioned him not to speak of it lest they lose their jobs.

Jack however could not keep still. The philosophy of George and Herman, Rudolph and Collins had ignited his soul and before he knew it he had two hundred and fifty men listening to him while he expounded the philosophy of Karl Marx from the porch of the boarding house. The next morning to his surprise when he was about ot enter the mine the foreman gave him a little envelope and told him that he was wanted at the office. At the office they told him that his services would be dispensed with and he was requested to leave Company property at once.

Some History.

Guffey had but recently returned from Mexico, where he is heavily interested in oil.

Lastly let me add another of my own experiences on matters atrocious.

I spent eighteen months in the Philipine Islands, as a Soldier of the U. S. A. 1899 to 1901. At that time the Philipino was fighting for the right of self government, "self determination." While wearing the uniform of America I saw committed by soldiers of this land of the "brave and home of the free," of boasted just and lofty ideals and democratic institutions of culture, every atrocious crime of which the lowly Mexican is now accused. And further more, I was a party to many of them at the command of my "Superior" officers.

Before undertaking to clean up other people and their premisses it would be well to sweep out our own back yard and sterilize our own putrid hands.

I could relate a hundred reasons why the Mexican people, especially the workingclass, have no love for America and Americans.

The Mexicans know that it was by the support of foreigners, especially the American, capitalistic interests, in exchange for Mexican wealth and privilage, that Diaz was kept on the throne of Mexico for more than thirty years, and thru his reign, the Mexican people were kept in ignorance and poverty: peonage, bound to the Feudal Estates and Foreign Capital and corporate interests. They are still suspicious of those interests and not without cause. But this is not all. American workingmen who have gone into Mexico, seeking to better their condition have snubbed the Mexican workers, even in their own country. They dub them Greaser, Palow, Peon and their attitude tward them is as tho they are of the lower order, and not to be at all considered as a human asset.

Such American workingmen have permitted themselves to become the tools of the capitalists who's sole object is to exploit both the American and Mexican workers at the expense of their ignorance. That ignorance is exploited by the capitalist in the form of race hatreds, and national prejudice as a veilto cover the dork recesses of his profit seeking machinations.

Workers of America: Do not permit youreslves to be used as the tools of exploiters of Mexican resources and Mexican workers. Do not permit yourselves to be led, or driven into the net of the conspirators, the fomenters of wars for pillage and private gain. You have nothing to gain, all to loose. It is you who will furnish the corpses, the blood, and pay the debt in full, while the human vultures, the capitalists and others who are even now your masters and bondsman, will grow more rich and powerful off of your misery and strengthen ten fold their strangel hold on the lives of all the workers of this land.

The writer has spent many years along the Mexican border, on either side, among the Mexican people. They are good people. They are just as good people as the opportunity they have had could make them. The product of their surroundings, environment.

Do you want to murder them and conquer them? Or do you want to assist them to greater opportunities to give them a chance to grow, to develop? I could write volumes of facts, not fancies, on this matter of the Mexican people, their difficulties, their aspirations as well as relate many a human interest story to sustain all that I have said.

There is but one solution of this Mexican Problem. It is the Solution of Labors' Problems everywhere. The Mexican is only seeking in his primitive way to enlarge upon life, by securing a greater and ever greater share of nature's wealth and the products of his own efforts untill the workers shall succeed in securing all, the full fruits of his expended energies. Is this not your aim too, Mr. American Worker? Then why not join hands with the Mexican Worker across the Rio Grande and say to him: By the Eternal Powers of Nature, our interests are the same, our objects and aims are so clearly related that we will not fight each other, but will cooperate, work together jointly to attain the goal of each and all. Industrial Democracy and International Brotherhood.

Long live the Interntional Solidarity of Labor.

Something is Wrong.

— By H. A. Hedden. —

Something is wrong. Some say it is labor unrest, some say it is H. C. L., some call it profiteering. But all agree that something is wrong. If a workingman has a family of two children or more, he has to be helped by the charity board.

Still the surplus taken from the exploitation of labor was greater in 1918 and 1919 than any two previous years. The workers go hungry while the master class roll in wealth.

The reason is that the workers have to go to the master class (The owners of the means of production) for a job. And the workers are given a job only on condition that they agree to produce a large susplus value over and above their own necesities, their food clothing and shelter.

And then I am asked if I love a government which allows the workers to go hungry, while the master class appropriate for their own use the surplus produced by the wage slaves. I say, no. I want to change the government to the workers can own their own job. The workers can never be free as long as they have to ask the master class for permission to use the tools of production. .. ..

When the working class own their own jobs, by owning all the means of production and distribution in common, then, and not till then will they be free and receive the full social value of their toil. By the workers I mean every one who does useful labor either with hand or brain. That includes some portions of the capitalist class. I want them to have all they produce or its equal in value.

Why shouldn't I want a change in the government? I have never met any one who was perfectly satisfied with this government in every way. Everybody wants some change, even president Wilson would like a league of nations. And I want a league of all the workers of the world. It is only by change that we make progress.

Now because I have this idea, and I am going to do my best to give the idea to others, are you going to hang, shoot, or jail me. Or hire the American Legion to mob me? That won't help any. Of course that will get rid of me. But how about the idea. You cant hang, shoot, jail, or mob that. That idea is being taught to the workers by the improved method of production all over the world. The more the method of production is improved, the more hellish the method of distdibution appears.

The present method of production and distribution gives to the workers a very small part of what they produce, less now than ever before in the history of mankind. It is this distribution that is the cause of all distribution which is the cause of all tradition between production and dimodern wars and most of the misery of mankind. And it is this same con stribution that is forcing the workers to understand they must own their jobs in order to be free.

The idea I am trying to teach did not come out of the air, or across the ocean, or originate out of somebody's brain. It developed with the development of the machinery of production. You might kill every man that had that idea now, and modern machinery would force the idea upon the minds of the workingman again.

You ask me why I dont leave this country if I dont like it. But I do like it. I never said I didn't like it. I was born here. My father was born here, and his father was born here, and his father and his father, and on so far back that I do not know where my ancestors came from originally. I love this country. That is why I want to stay here and make it a fit place to live in.

And I am willing to talk it over with you. And if I can not convince you that the present system of starvation, misery, and warfare can be changed for the better, I will not hang, shoot, jail, or mob you. I will wait for modern machinery to change your mind.

By the way, have you noticed, that the American Legion has mobed only members of the working class so far. And they havn't mobbed the workers when they were good and obedient and faithful in their work. And didn't try to tell the truth about the war. They havn't mobbed the war grafters, or the packers, or any of the big profiteers. Newberry and his gang are perfectly safe.

True patriotism according to the master class conception is to love honer and obey your master. If you don't some other man will, and you will be put in jail or mobbed.

CAPITALISM MORTALLY WOUNDED.

WASHINGTON. — A remarkable study of the mortal wound sustained by international capitalism in the world war was written by Karl Radek last winter and printed in the February 7 issue of Die Zukunft.

Radek was at that time the representative in Germany of the Russian Soviet Government. During a fit of its familiar nervousness, the Ebert Government seized Radek and threw him into prison. While in prison Radek wrote a good-natured address "To the German Bourgeoisie." The celebrated German liberal edtior, Maximilian Harden, printed the article in full in his paper.

Radek's evident purpose was to show the German business classes that the Europe, are so near the abysis of bankrupcy that nothing could be gain-bankruptsy that nothing could be gained by a German policy designed to carry favor with London and Paris.

"He who studies the internal economic and political disturbances in the Entente countries," says Radek, "not according to the German press, which has never been as worthless as now, but in the 'Times', the 'Temps' and in the 'New Republican', and the reports of English banks and stock companies, will see the 'Post-Waritis' in these countries also manifest itself in decounrties also manifests itself in de-

"During the present winter this condition will produce social crisis and cause, probably in England and France, a coalition between the right wing of the working class with the left wing of the bourgeoisie—as a transitory stage in the world crisis.

"These conditions will oblige Entente capitalism to abandon its effort to overthrow the revolutionary movement in Central and Eatsern Europe, and be followed by efforts to negotiate with the revolutionary governments, in the hope, naturally, of cutting out the inner core of the revolutionary movement—to persuade or compel the revolutionary governments to adapt themselves to the capitalistic system.

"Far-sighted capitalist elements have already felt their way ahead in this direction. For example, Davison, leader of the Morgan Bankers, is one of the brakemen who stopped the aggressive movement against Russia.

"If the ground tembles under the feet of Entente capitalism more and more violently, then capitalists will soon realize that, just as there were commercial relations for many decades between the old feudalism and its successor, capitalism, so must the capitalists reconcile themselves to the existence of proletarian states. And this reconciliation is only hastened when the proletarian state shows itself aware that the capitalist sharks must be allowed to make their profit—until they are finally strangled by the proletariat of their own countries.

"The leaders of the Russian Republic understand this problem of the relationship betewen the Socialistic State and the capitalistic states, and that it existed even before the first modern Socialist existed—witness Wistenly in the Seventeenth Century. Pending the time when social revolution shall seize all capitalistic states and (that cannot occur at one and the same time), the Socialistic states are compelled to seek a modus vivendi in their foreign relations, for both political and economic reasons.

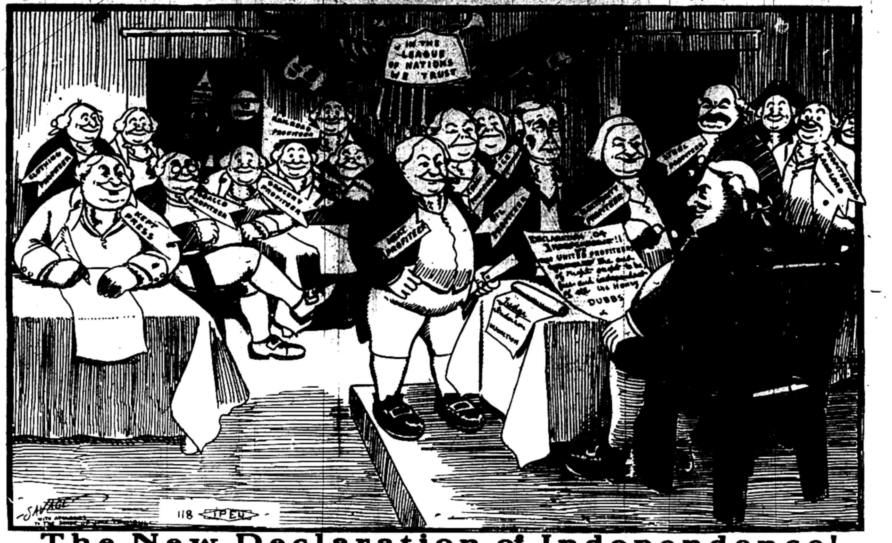
"Now the effect of this social crisis, which mitigates the pressure of world capitalism upon the Socialist State, is that capitalistic production decreases and the capitalistic states are not able to produce these goods the lack of which is also one reason why the revolutionary countries are compelled to seek a modus vivendi with the opposing economic system.

"When one beholds the strange hope of the German bourgeoisie of obtaining a lot of beautiful things from the Entente after the dragon of Bolshevism lies helpless on the ground, it takes one's breath away.

"Why does the German and Austrian bourgeoisie not study the real economic plight of the Entente countries? Why do they not ask themselves at least this question: If the United States and England are so rich in clothing, machinery and other good things, why do they allow Italy, through her shortage of all these blessings, to be driven toward revolution, and the social crisis in Poland and Czecho-Slovakia to exist? That is to say, why do they permit the very countries which were to constitute a sanitary cordon against the Bolshevist plague to grow weaker day by day?"

LONDON—A Communist party which has as its primary aim the establishment of an Irish workers republic, has been formed in Ireland, according to announcement at the London headquarters of the British Communist party. Leon McLoughlin, ex-president of the Socialist party of Ireland, leads the new group, which claims to recognize the need of freeing Ireland from England, but which wishes to establish working conditions with the English Communists.

The Irish Socialist party is working on the policy of obliterating all class distinctions in its fight for freeing the country. Although the party accepts the principles of the Moscow International, it is in realty working on the Sinn Fein basis.



The New Declaration of Independence!

American Capitalism Anxious to Establish "Order" in Mexico.

WASHINGTON—The Carranza Government of Mexico and the Ebert Government of Germany are being rocked in the same boat. Both regimes have tried to straddle between the old capitalist order and the new working class society. That is why they are being cuffed in succession from the right and from the left, and cannot last.

In every headline, news story and cartoon the investing classes of the United States proclaim their ardent support of the revolution against Carranza which began in the American border state of Sonora a fortnight ago. These classes are ready to dismember Mexico or to create such "anarchy" there that foreign (American) armies may plausibly be sent in to restore capitalist order.

This latest Mexican revolution is not a pure and simple capitalist affair, however. The land below the Rio Grande contains a large proportion of workmen and peasants who charge the Carranza regime with having failed to carry out the program of the great revolution which overthrew Porfirio Diaz and Hrerta. The uprising now on is certainly supported to a considerable extent by that disappointed element of native Mexicans.

It has been said at Washington for a long time past that General Alvaro Obregon is the candidate picked by "left wing" Mexicans to succeed Carranza at the July presidential elections. It has further been reported that in case disorders should occur to furnish a pretext then President Carranza would postpone the elections indefinitely, in which event the "left wing" would certainly resort to arms to overthrow the present administration.

With such explosive material to work with, business imperialists in the United States looked upon the Mexican situation as ideal. A single spark, they perceived, would be sufficient to envelope Mexico in the smoke of battle any time such smoke were most needed or likely to cover the long-delayed invasion and conquest by the Unite States.

The different native Mexican factions represented at Washington are so suspicious of each other that a reliable interpretation of the Sonora uprising is hard to obtain. And, until the sympathies and probable policy of the American Government are announced, these factions are slow to express themselves for publication. The important outlines of the struggle, however, they describe freely enough in private.

On behalf of President Carranza it is strongly denied that he feared the result of a general election and is plotting to remain in office by hook or crook. It is conceded that all the promises of the first revolution have not been realized that foreign and native capitalists still have a strong hold on the economic resources of the country, and that the government has dealt more drastically with strikes, for example, than with the corporations which it set out to render harmless. Carranza's friends say of the Sonora revolutionists that they are being used as catspaws by the interventionist party of the United States.

The anti-Carranza Mexicans here declare the Sonora uprising would never have got a start if Carranza had kept his hands off the election machinery through which the people next July might have expressed themselves. While not publicly endorsing this revolt in advance of the balloting, they say it came only when millions of the people were persuaded by Carranza's own acts that the cannon must become the voice of the masses.

As for the danger that foreign imperialists will take full advantage of the new uprising, Carranza's critics remark bitterly that it were as well for Mexico to risk all in another fight for economic freedom as to remain quiet while native and foreign capitalists complete their reconquest of the country, which is already far advanced with the consent of Carranza.

Intervention by the United States would mature more rapidly if this were not a presidential year. Enough strange things have happened since the fighting in Europe stopped to make politicians uncertain whether a fresh war would re-elect the Democrats or damn every public man who shouts to bring it about. Unless the super-government in Wall Street shall decide on immediate action, the prospect is good that politicians will send no American trops across the Rio Grande until after the November election.

Both the old parties look upon the military conquest of Mexico by the United States as "inevitable", but neither one of them is going to let the other have a monopoly this year on that "kept us out of war" slogan. At the very longest, however, Mexico has only another year left of self-determination, as the interventionists see it. After having their say in November the American people are expected to shut up and take orders for another four years. And the principle order will be "On to Mexico!"

How Would You Like This?

LONDON—One hour's ride from here is Letchworth, the model garden town of England, where 12,000 workers live among beautiful surroundings. The town is planned according to the most artistic and modern methods; no houses are more than two stories high, each is surrounded by a garden, and the rear yard is as well kept as the front.

Although there are some 30 industries in Letchworth, there is no smoke, for they are all run by electricity. The stores are confined to two streets—and very soon they are all going to be cooperative stores.

The village was built by the Garden Cities Co., which realizes only 5 per cent on the investment. The plan is to have the town buy itself out, and eventually run completely on the cooperative plan.

The houses are so arranged that no maid service is required. Some of the houses, and appartments for un-married workers, are built near a municipal kitchen, where well-cooked meals are provided at a low rate.

Washington News Letter.

WASHINGTON.—Louis F. Post is ready to resign as Assistant Secretary of Labor rather than retreat from the stand he has taken on the deportation of aliens.

And if the Secretary of Labor and President Wilson give him their support, Post is prepared and anxious to go before any committee of Congress and prove that his handling of the deportation cases has conformed strictly to the law.

The prospect is said to be more usually good that President. Wilson means to side with Post rather than with Attorney General Palmer in the treatment of aliens charged with communist leanings. For such an attitude there is both political and legal justification.

Palmer is more detested by organized labor than any man who has held office at Washington in the past twenty years, not excepting Postmaster General Burleson. The President knows that he cannot clasp hands with Palmer on this issue without making an enormous sacrifice of his political strength.

Legally considered, Post's stand is said to be unassailable. He has not failed to deport any man whose guilt under the law could be shown by the department of justice. He has refused merely to accept denunciation as a substitute for evidence. It is this determined call for evidence that has infuriated Palmer and the white guard terrorists in Congress.

The point is well illusrtated by the present status of the cases pending against Ludwig C. A. K. Martens, representative of the Russian Soviet Goverment. When Martens' case came before the Labor Department Palmer agreed to furnish counsel for the accused with a copy of the Government's brief. Weeks have passed and still Palmer begs for more time to gather evidence against the man for whom he demanded a deportation warrant as long ago as January.

It must be remembered that Martens has been shadowed by Palmer's agents for more than a year; they have copied his speeches, rifled his mails and raided his offices. They declare Martens should be deported, but they ask for more time to find out why!

Against the more obscure aliens whom the Attorney General scooped up in thousands during the past winter, the evidence is similarly incomplete. Great numbers of them have never even read the Communist platform, for technical approval of which they are termed guilty. Many of the others were victims of arrest and search without warrant, after which they were held incommunicado and put through the "third degree" by hostile interpreters in the absence of their own counsel.

By such treatment of an obscure and friendless class of aliens Attorney General Palmer arrived at his celebrated "2,000 perfect cases" for deportation. Acting entirely within the law, Mr. Post has proceeded to examine these cases individually. In this examination he has been guided somewhat by several recent federal court decisions, which set forth that "evidence" procured in violation of a prisoner's constitutional rights is not evidence at all.

Upon those decisions, and upon the wholly incomplete evidence furnished by the Attorney General, Mr. Post is ready to face a Congressional investigation and show that his administration of the law has been scrupulously impartial.

At the Cabinet meeting called last week by President Wilson this whole issue was vigorously debated by the respective heads of the Labor and Justice Departments. Several persons who witnessed the encounter came away with a distinct impression that Mr. Palmer has very much over-reached himself by carrying his personal political campaign against radicals to the point of an open attack upon the Department of Labor.

It has come to the Presidential ear that middle class liberals and avowed Socialists are not the only classes embittered by the ultra-Prussianism of the Attorney General. The American Federation of Labor has never been more solidly arrayed on one side of any issue than it is today in its hostility toward the man who twice within six months has termed the strike a felony and striven to poison the public mind with belief that every move by labor to obtain higher wages is a plot against religion and the flag.

Thanks to the Attorney General, the American Federation of Labor is obliged to join hands with the vanguard of social and economic pioneers who foresaw the rape of political freedom that would follow the war, and those courageous warnings have made them the target for reactionary fire these many months past. If Mr. Palmer cannot make the President his ally in this crisis then he must go it alone to certain disaster.

Ask Wilson.

"Of the 260 men in my company when we landed in Russia, only 80 returned. The others were either killed or froze to death."

This is the statement of Captain H. H. Mead, Detroit, recently returned from Russia.

"We were sent overseas to do duty in France," he said. "But after a stay of several months in England, we were sent aboard a transport bound for Russia.

..."We don't know how we happened to go there nor why we were sent."

NEW YORK—"The victory of the Red Army of Russia means a social revolution and a soviet Japan, just as the Japanese victory in 1904 brought the Russian constitution and the revolution of 1905", is one of the remarkable statements contained in a public protest issued here against the Japanese occupation of Vladivostok, by Japanese Socialists in America.

NORTHHAMPTON, England— The power of the Labor Party has increased by nearly 100 per cent in this district, judging from the poll at the by—election just held here. Miss Margaret Bonfield, prominent Labor party candidate, rolled up 13,279 votes against Minister of Food Charles A. McCurdy, who won with poll of 18,010. McCurdy was strongly supported by the coalition-liberal forces.

Miss Bondfield is well known in the United States as well as England for her activities in the Labor movement. She was a member of the British delegation to the International Labor Congress in Washington in the full of 1919.

Three Stingy Little Hours.

SKYGAC.

"For Christ's Sake, Advertise," seems to be the belief of the Holy Name Society of Detroit. "Has Detroit room for Christ?" asks the society in full page advertisement in the "Free Press", and then again, "Is Detroit Too Busy Buying and Selling to Honor Christ?" followed by the instructions:

"DON'T BUY! DON'T SELL! 12 TO 3, GOOD FRIDAY."

Believe you me, folks, if I took the religion of Jesus Christ seriously, I would not be so stingy with the time allotted for His worship. As it is I cannot believe that those who DO profess a belief in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, really, truly, way—down—intheir—innermost consciousnesses, actually do believe it.

The little time that we are here in this vale of tears is so tinily small just a speck upon the boundless ocean of time and time and a half and time when time shall be no more, that if one really did believe the stories of the pulpit-pounding sky pilots, we would waste not a moment in buying and selling and other diversifications of the world, the flesh and the devil, but would spend all our time grovelling in the dust in an effort to prepare ourselves for the awfulness of an endless eternity. When professing christians ask for only three short hours from business to ponder upon the tragedy of the story of Calvary's Hill, it is evident to the thinking mind that business occupies more of men's minds than ghost worship, no matter in what form it may appear.

The same advertisement informs us that "The Gospel of Christ has a solution for every problem," which is a mere assertion not capable of being proven. There is the problem of war between the nations, and the biblical injunction, "Thou Shalt Not Kill". We have just emerged from the bloodiest debacle the civilized world has ever known, and all of the nations participating therin, with the sole exception of Japan, profess a belief in the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

It was a war of Cristian Nations, a sort of family scrap in God's great household. Remember that the butchery and the slaughter was far greater than in any or all previous wars. The very same persons who so loudly proclaimed their belief in the Gospel of Christ, turned their so-called houses of worship into recruiting halls, and did all in their power to further the slaughter.

The British Labor Movement.

ARTICLE 5.

Workingclass Education

LONDON—At the present time two campaigns are endorsed by the British Labor Movement with respect to improved working-class educational standards. One is for democratization of education in general with the total elimination of illiteracy as its first objective, and the ultimate aim that lack of money or social standing shall not prevent any boy or girl from receiving university traning, if he or she desired to pursue studies to far.

The other campaign, directed at the immediate necessity rather than the future ideal, is the one now receiving the most omphasis. It is the work which is being done by correspondence classes and trade union schools and colleges to train men and women of the present generation for executive position in the labor movement of today.

Of the organizations now engaged in training their students to be more efficient workers in the labor movement the Labor College at London, Ruskin College at Oxford, and the Workers' Educational Association, which penetrates all secticns of the country, are easily the most important. There are fundamental differences between each of the three but they are identical in their aim of making cheap and uncontrolled educational facilities available to the adult working class.

Ruskin College, the oldest of the three mentioned, was founded in 1899 for the purpose of providing education in the social sciences for working-class students and it is interesting that the establishment funds were originally provided by two Americans, Mr. and Mrs. Walker Vrooman. From the beginning Ruskin College has maintained an absolute independence of outside control which makes it a landmark in the history of education. Courses are chosen and methods of tuition regulated by the discretion of the faculty alone. The college is a successful experiment in the field of academic freedom. But because of this stoutly maintained independence Ruskin College is subjected to a fire of hostile criticism from two quarters. Those who believe that education and educators should be under the control of capitalist boards of trustees regard it as a dangerous tool of revolution, while those who are wholehearted revolutionists continually criticize Ruskin as not sufficiently class-conscious in its teaching.

The latter argument is never advanced against the Labor College in London, formerly known as the Central Labor College. This institution was established in 1909 by groups formerly affiliated with Ruskin College which had come to believe that the latter had become too academic and ''neutral''. Founded expressly to fill the need of an educational institution teaching nothing but revolutionary Socialism the Labor College has gone steadily ahead on this deal. It is 100 per cent class-conscious in inspiration and teaching and it holds as consistently as do the I. W. W. to the first clause of its constitution, which reads:—''the college to be based upon the recognition of the antagonism of interest between capital and labor.''

In spite of this gulf between the procedure of the two colleges they are both integral parts of the labor movement and each derivos its financial support at the present time from trade union contributions. On the governing council of Ruskin College are found officers of the Weavers' Union, the Northumberland Miners, the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, the Cooperative Union, and the General Federation of Trade Unions. The Labor College is owned and controlled entirely by two radical and very powerful unions — the South Wales' Miners' Federation and the National Union of Railwaymen. The general opinion in the labor movement is that in spite of the sharp differences in the two institutions there is room and to spare for both; that the Labor College graduates do invaluable work in stimulation and strenthening the industrial side of the labor movement in preparation for the advent of the Socialist state, and that the Ruskin College graduates are not less valuable as educated men and women fitted for constructive leadership in general service under that state.

As might be expected the curriculum of Ruskin College is much broader than that of the Labor College, which pays little attention to anything but straight Marxian Socialism and its offshoots. Marx is in no way minimized at the former institution, but his teachings are there regarded as a phase rather than the center of economic and industrial history. At the Labor College everything is subordinated to turning effective propagandists. Ruskin is as careful that its graduates should remain in the labor movement, but aims to fit every student for the full realization of his possibilities rather than to make him merely an agitator. In bringing about the overthrow of Capitalism the Labor College will be the more effective of the two. In insuring that Socialism, once established, is maintained in England Ruskin will do the best work.

At both institutions the number of students in residence is no criterion of influence. Each college has about thirty boarders, mostly maintained on scholarshops by the supporting trade unions. The Labor College also has about sixty day students and plans to open a dormitory for women boarders. Ruskin has recetly opened its Womens' Hotel, and counting the new women trade unionist students, has thereby increased its student roll to forty. The full-time course at each college takes two years.

A large part of the influence of both institutions comes from the correspondence classes conducted by the college faculties with groups of workers in various sections of the country for negligible fees. Over 11,000 men and women have taken advantage of the correspondence classes offered by Ruskin as against the 600 odd graduates of the college. The Labor College has a large number of correspondence classes in operation and in addition assists in the setting up of local labor classes in which its graduates frequently serve as instructors. There are now about 300 of these classes in different parts of Great Britain (mostly in South Wales) with an average membership of thirty to a class. These local classes are endorsed and supported by the local unions of the railwaymen and the Walsh miners in the same manner as the parent Labor College is backed by the national unions. Important work has also been done by the governing council of Ruskin College by summoning conferences at which special industrial problems are discussed from the working class viewpoint. Lectures are given frequently at both colleges by leaders in various phases of the labor movement.

Also of very great importance in British working class education is the organization known as the Workers' Educational Assotiation (W. E. A.) founded by a small group of trades unionists and cooperators in 1903. The W. E. A. consists of about 2500 small groups of workers affiliated into 200 branches. It is under the governance of joint committees of labor men and representatives of the faculties of different English and Scotch universities and through correspondence and tutorial classes has to some extent thrown open the educational resources of Great Britain to the working classes. A striking feature of the W. E. A. is that the subjects on which instruction is given are those subjects which the working class members decide for themselves they want to study, — not on those subjects which educational authorities think the workers ought to study.

The result of this organization has been the formation of adult classes all over England. There are about 1.00 members of the W. E. A., all of them from the working class. While the Association has no official connection with the Labor Movement it is serving not only to educate but to quicken the social consciousness of the working class. The W. E. A. backed by the labor movement, is at present urging state adoption of an advanced educational program of which the first resolution is ''that the broad principle of free education through all its stages, including that of the University, be adopted'', and including a demand that labor shall have direct representation on all educational governing bodies.

The importance of working class education is now generally recognized by the British Labor Movement, and big developments in this line may be looked for during the next few years. There has been a great revival since the war, — a Scottish Labor College on the lines of the London Labor College has been established in Glascow and others are in contemplation, as soon as finances permit. In addition, so great is the influence of labor in the British government at present, it is not unlikely that state aid will in the near future be given students who are financially unable to take up studies at Ruskin or the Labor College in London.

By Tom. Clifford.

The judge who presided at the trial of Comrade Benjamin Gitlow just couldn't forbear expressing his thanks to the jury in returning a verdict of guilty. He has probably warmed the ''bench'' so long as to be incapable of seeing any other side to a proposition than that which will safeguard the interests and perpetuate the rule of those on whom he is dependent for his job. From his viewpoint the institutions erected by the bourgeoisie are the final word in civilization and no opposition thereto is to be countciety and propose a change in the inenanced. Anyone who has the temerity to question the present status of soterests of the common weal is adjudged a dangerous character and promptly consigned to a penal institution. He knows nothing but the law, and his mental obliquity makes him a stranger to ''horse sense.'' No thinking man has any respect for a judge these days, for they know he is on the bench to interpret the law in conformity with ruling class interests. Being either a fool or knave, it is impossible for him to administer real justice. One may charitably excuse the stupidity of the jury, but only contempt can be expressed for a man who poses as an intellectual and manifests all the characteristics of an ignoramus. This particular judge runs true to form in his fulsome laudation of the assininity displayed by the twelve boneheads who decided Comrade Gitlow was guilty—of idealism. The courts of today are a screaming force. Don't believe it? Ask any lawyer who dares express an honest opinion.

The Y. W. C. A. convention, which convened in Cleveland last week gets all ''het up'' over a pamphlet issued by big business entitled ''Will the Y. W. C. A. Co-operate or Will It Antagonize?'' It appears that the convention had under consideration an industrial program which contains demands obnoxious to the ''plutes'' and the organization is warned that favorable action on the same will be followed by the withdrawal of the financial support hitherto so generously given. Well, well. Another sign of the breaking up of the old order. Here is an organization created by the bourgeoisie for the express purpose of drawing a red herring across the path of the working class — by diverting their minds from the consideration of material problams to the contemplation of the joys coming to them in the ''sweet after while''—evidencing a disposition to refuse to obey orders. Of course it is rank ingratitude, but prolongation of its existence seems to make the new departure a necessity. The bourgeoisie are utterly unable to grasp the fact that in the evolution of society nothing stays ''put.'' The Y. W. C. A. finds itself in the midst of revolutionary forces that are making for a change in the social structure, and it must [illegible] them or sink into oblivion. The bourgeoisie are having rough sailing these days. The storm signals are becoming more and more numerous, presaging an ultimate social tempest that will rock the capitalist State to its very foundations. The Y. W. C. A. is simply noting the signals and is running to cover. Safety first. The industrial program was adopted, and the first vice president, a daughter of old Jay Gould, of Wall Street fame some years ago, promptly resigned, thus displaying loyalty to her class.

And now comes Henry Chamberlin, director of the new Chicago Crime Commission, and deposes that criminals are using ''business efficiency'' methods in the practice of their profession, in which they are aided by criminal lawyers and crooked politicians, and practically admits there is no remedy. How marvellously perfect is the capitalist system!

The news has filtered out of Washington that the U. S. Government has served notice on its Allies that if an immediate concerted movement is not made to open up trade with Russia it will act independently. Getting hungry for trade, eh! The bourgeoise of America must have markets for their surplus in the near future if they are to avoid an unpleasantness that they dread. Perhaps they have waited too long. Our ''noble ally,'' England, has not been so busy suppressing the Irish rebellion that she couldn't spare the time to pre-empt the Russian trade. She didn't wait for the consent of her comrades in arms, but followed her usual policy of getting while the getting was good. When it comes to securing trade the English bourgeois is ''all to the mustard.''

A resolution has been introduced in the lower House of Congress to impeach Louis Post, Secretary of Labor, the outgrowth of a scrap between the Departments of Justice and Labor. Everybody seems to be wearing their fighting clothes these days. Even the politicians are unable to work in harmony. The Presidential candidates are anything but exemplars of the Golden Rule. They are accusing each other of duplicity and lavish use of money. The hopeful sign is that the great mass of the people are paying no attention to them notwithstanding the columns of advertising they are getting in the newrpapers. And, best of all, the workers are evidencing their discontent through the only avenue available—the strike.

Who Are The Criminals?

— By Perle Doe —

Nineteen hundred years ago an agitator was nailed to a cross until he was dead because he preached doctrines that were ''dangerous''. He was declared to be an ''undesirable'', and the courts adjudged him a criminal. Who committed the crime? Was judges who convicted the Christ to it Jesus? or was it the lawmakers and capital punishment?

Three hundred years ago Galileo was sentenced to life imprisonment for saying that the earth moved round the sun. Who were the criminals? Galileo? or the lawmakers and judges who condemned this great scientist and teacher to prison?

In 1692, at Salem Massachusetts, a dozen or so poor old women were swung upon the gallows, convicted by the courts of witchcraft. Who committed the crime? Did the lawmakers and the prosecutors and the judges who sent those women to their death commit a crime?

Up to 1860 in the South the ruling class declared it a crime to teach slaves to read and write. Who were the criminals? The men and women who defied that law? or the lawmakers and judges who solemnly decreed education to be a felony?

Today Eugene Debs lies in jail for opposing war. Roger Baldwin has suffered the prison cell for refusing to be a conscript. Who are the criminals? Is it the men and women who today lie wretched behind the grated door for their conscience' sake? or is it the law makers, and the prosecutors, and the judges, who declare such men as Debs and Baldwin to be felons? Who brand such women as Kate O'Hare and Rose Pastor Stokes as criminals?

Is not a government that commits such acts a criminal government? Is not every government official responsible for such acts a criminal?

Not Jesus, but Pilate was the real criminal. [illegible] trying to suppress a [illegible] truth. It was the southern slave owners, forbidding education to the black man, who had the criminal intent. Eugene Debs, and Roger Baldwin, and Rose Stokes are not criminals. It is the lawmakers, trying to out law new ideas, it is the judges, trying to shield a criminal robber class by putting honest men in jail, they are the real culprits.

TWO VIEWS.

By Scott Nearing.

Soviet Russia is under the ban. The American Eagle is screaming her note of triumph to the clouds. All is ended, according to the papers, and sovietism is cast forever into the outer darkness!

Just a moment, please, before the decree is made irrevocable. Note this dispatch from the correspondent of The Manchester Guardian in which he describes the work that the soviet government is doing for its children—nursing mothers are the object of special care; they are still assisted as the precious child grows older; then there are children's palaces with facilities for recreation and education; then there are the reorganized schools and the colleges and universities, all designed to prepare the Russian child for future usefulness. All of these measures Russia has adopted in the two years following the revolution, and she has done them despite the war, despite the blockade, despite the immanence of destruction. In her darkest hour, Russia was busy caring for her children.

Now for the capitalist nations that have been seeking to blot Russia out of existence—one of the first acts in Great Britain and France, after war assumed serious proportions, was to let down on the work of education. In the United States, during the years from 1915 to 1918, when the cost of living came near to doubling, teachers' salaries according to an estimate recently published by the United States 16 per cent. With this increase, their commissioner of education, rose about average salary was $630.64, making their average monthly salary about $53.

These figures lead to some interesting reflections on the relative rewards given to teachers and to those employed in certain other lines of activity. The railroad wage commission, in its recommendations for wage increases to the 16 lowest paid branches of the service, suggested wages of less than $760 per year for only two classes of employes—''messengers and attendants'' and ''section men.'' In New York city, where teachers salaries are comparatively high, the elementary school teachers receive practically the same wages as butchers, chauffeurs, clerks, waiters, etc. few of whom require anything like the period of preparation for thier work that is demanded of teachers.

A recent report shows that in the territory centering about Cleveland and Chicago, head bakers receive $363 more per year than teachers; blacksmiths receive $890 more, and machinist $1,138 more. Equal discrepancies appear if the salaries of teachers are compared with the incomes received by those who are engaged in other professions. Insofar as a financial return can serve as a deterrent or as a stimulus to enter a profession, the United States is doing everything possible to discourage young men and women of ability from entering the teaching profession.

Special provisions for expectant mothers? Maternity insurance? Children's palaces? They exist here only in the most rudimentary form.

Soviet Russia rewards those who preduce children. Capitalist America rewards those who produce wealth. In the long years that are ahead—in the estimation of the future—which system will stand highest—the one that produced steel rails and textiles, or the one that produced men?

Two views of life are contending for supremacy in the world — one places the emphasis on profit; the other on service. In one view it is property that is sacred, in the other it is humanity.

Never yet have men drawn blood from stones.

"The Mediumship of Farmer Riley".

By SYDNEY FLOWER, LL. D.

This is a book of sixty large magazine pages, in which is related in detail the observations of the author during a two weeks' stay at the home of the medium, James Wesley Riley, better known as "Farmer Riley," near Marcellus, Mich. If you have ever asked youreslf the question, "Does man live beyond the grave?" a perusal of this book may perhaps assist you in the formulation of an intelligent answer. The book is as interesting as a romance. In his investigations Mr. Flower rigidly adheres to a program which absolutely precludes all possibility of physical agency in the production of the manifestations.

Chapt. XXVIII.

The Home of the Spirit.

Jack cashed his check and paid his bill at the boarding house after which he left the mining town of Mullen and made his way in the direction of Couer D' Alane Lake, where he knew that Collins and Rudolph awaited him. The distance before him was about sixty five miles down the river and he decided to walk it and study the country at first hand. It was in reality a new world to him. It was the books made real.

The trail over which he travelled ran along the mountain side; it was not a road; wheeled vehicles could not pass over it. It was a short cut through the mountains, used by the prospectors to get to their claims. These men hauled their provisions to their little mines real or imaginary, on their backs or on the backs of horses, mules or burros. This mode of transportation neded but a narrow trail and such it was. It went up and down and in and out among the rocks and ledges, down thru wooded ravines and up over barren ridges and at this time of the year alternately thru banks of snow and dark evergreen forests. It was a region of the profoundest silence, hardly the chirp of a bird broke the stillness. The boy had a feeling that he walked in an unmeasured immensity filled with grandeur and beuty.

At every turn of the trail he met with things of which he had read in books. Some of these he recognized at sight and they helped his mind to understand others of which the books had not spoken. Literally he roamed thru the pages of the book of eternity, a book not written by men but traced by the fingers of Truth upon the stratified rocks of the earth's crust. It was as if Pluto in his restless moments had raised these strata from the deep, in order that men might see and read the wondrous story of this earth's pre-human ages, when pterodactyl cleaved the air and horrid monsters crawled in steaming swamps.

He walked as in a trance, forgettink everything for the time being but the wonders which obtruded themselves upon his sight. Occassionally he wished that George and Herman, Collins and Rudolph could be with him, he thought that they would be as enraptured as he. In this he was mistaken. This was the home of his spirit not theirs. These mountains, crags, rocks, ridges, ledges, ravines, woods, and all they contained were food to the soul of the naturalist; they were merely interesting to his friends whose souls fed on social problems and phenomena. Even as the social phenomena which he had observed had interested him but they had never called him in a way that these natural phenomena called him.

It had snowed the night before he had left Mullen and in these windless mountains the snow piles itself up on every twig and branch to a considerable height causes all nature to appear like sculptured down. The mountains and woods were clothed in an almost ethoral beauty giving to the boy's mind asthetic as well as scientific food. No wonder then that after he was a mile on his way he forgot the miners at Mullen the stories of strikes and bullpens, of gunmen and hired thugs, of the lewd viciousness of bar keepers and the dwellers of the redlight. These belonged to a strange world as far as he was concerned. Industrial life was to him an alien world. He could make himself at home in it when necessary. In a way that a Chinaman may feel at home in America; but given the opportunity the Chinaman will go back to China and the Americans goes back to America and the spirit of back to America and the spirit of homing thrill when he buried himself in the vastness of the Couer D'Alane. He was the natural, it would be better to say the nature loving instead of the industrial type.

The warm winds from the Pacific ocean came up the valley and slowly but steadily melted the snows. It was as if monstrous invisible hands slowly but steadily rolled back the vast white blanket from the depths of the canyon up the mountainside. Slowly but steadily the stately evergreens shed their silvery down and stod out in wondrous beauty against their alabaster environment. Here and there on the mountain side hung great white banks of fog like titanic ghosts endeavoring to embrace the mountains. The sky was over cast with the soft grey film of clouds thru which the sun occassionally shot a beam of golden light illumining these great ramparts of nature which divide the continent, georgraphically as well as climatically.

The trail over which he passed ran along the river sometimes very near it and then again up over ridges which took him a couple of hours to climb. Ever and anon he would pass a deserted cabin near which would be found a tunnel or shaft more or less caved in and dilapidated. These were monuments to the lost hopes of the prospectors; that race of mining pioneers who spend their all in delving after every little mineral trace in the hope of finding a mine which will lift them out of the ranks of common men and enthrone them in the seats of the mighty. On several occassions he turned from his trail and wandered into these tunnels not in the hope of finding what the prospectors might have over looked in the way of minerals; but rather to find out in what particular formation these men hoped to discover mines. In what particular rocks men so persistently sought their fortunes and lost their substance. While on this strail for the time being he lost all idea of seeking a job or getting an education in school. He was in school now and Nature, the master of masters, was teaching him some of his most wonderful secrets.

At six thirty in the morning he had started and now it was late in the afternoon upon a long mountain slope. He was at least six thousand feet above the valley as he stood on the crest of the ridge, of the last back bone. It was a steep descent the trail continually doubling upon itself in such a way that one had to travel five miles for two. On this the snow was deep but the trail had been broken by a company of prospectors who had preceeded him. He felt slightly tired and not a little hungry for he had eaten no lunch and he had not stopped to calculate how much farther it would be to the next town. He sat down by the side of the trail on a fallen log and used about twenty minutes to note what he had seen in a little book which he kept in his pocket for that purpose. It was while engaged in this work that he noticed a crackling of dry twigs and a swaying of brush and then to his surprise right in the trail not more than a hundred and fifty feet from him stood a magnificant bul elk. It was the first elk he had ever seen. He sat motionless noting its every movement until it left the trail and dissaperared into the woods. Forgetting that he was hungry and far from the nearest human habitation he now left the trail and followed the monarch of the wild, wishing that he was the possessor of a camera and under his breath telling the auburned haired girl who was nearly two thousand miles away all that he might learn about the habits of this noble beast.

He noticed that the elk made its way against the wind and at the same time down the slope. It was evidently anxious to get out of the deep snow and into the open timber. It did not go very fast as it had to wade well up to its knees and Jack plunged thru the soft snow almost up to his hips. Occassionally the big bull would stop, sniff the air as if it scented danger. It would even double on its tracks and walk back up the slope a distance of a hundred feet or more and then resume its downward course. Jack was in hopes that this beast would join a herd somewhere in the woods below but when he reach the snowline and the open woods there was no way of tracking the elk and what was more night overtook him. It now occurred to him that he had lost the trail even if he should climb the mountain again he was not sure that he could find it as he would not be able to follow his own track in the dark. He realized that he was lost. There was nothing to do but camp for the night.

He found a place between two fallen trees which he could cover over with bark and make himself a hut. He broke off a lot of fur boughs and arranged them in the form of a bed under this bark shed. He now gathered a pile of wood and bark in front of his rudely constructed shelter whose side walls were fallen logs and started a fire of bark and pitchwood and settled down for the night. He was quite oblivious of the fact that he had had no material supper and that he was not likely to have breakfast the next morning. By the light of the fire he wrote in his note book an imaginary letter to the girl in far off Dakota. It was for him an unusual effort and he composed it slowly and methodically in a way that he would not have written to her if he had considered this to be a real letter.

''My Dear Miss Anderson'', he began, ''we have only met twice,—you don't even know my name and I only know your father's name. So you see it is not really proper for me to write to you or for you to write to me. Be that as it may—if you were in my position tonight you would want to write to some one and naturally you would write to the one of whom you thought most frequently. You would doubtlessly write just what you would feel and if we always did that we would always write wonderful letters. We often feel wonderful things but we don't write them and we don't say them because we believe we are the only ones who feel such emotions. And because we think we are alone in out feelings it is so hard to become acquainted with each other. So in this letter which you will never see I'm going to throw off the brakes and let 'er slide.

First I must tell you where I am and how I came to be here (no I'm not in prison) I am lost. Not lost in the religious sense I hope altho I'm near a fire of my own kindling. I am lost in the woods. It sounds romantic does it not? How did it happen? I shall tell you. I have been at work in the mines for a while and decided to go back to the little cabin by the lake and spend the rest of the winter with my friends. With this in mind I undertook a sixty mile journey on foot. It is a wonderful walk thru a wonderful land. Ever since morning my mind has drunk from a perpetual fountain of wonders which I shall not stop to describe for I have neither time, light, or material with which to write a book. Besides no words of mine could do justice to the undefiled work of nature. I could only wish that you were with me and could have seen what I have seen then I know you would feel as I feel as I lie upon this bed of fir boughs between two fallen trees covered over with a roof of cedar bark and by a pitch wood fire.

How did I get lost? It is very simple I was sitting on a log writing down something about a peculiar ledge of rock when a big elk crossed the trail just ahead of me. Of course I was curious where he was going and what he would do, so I followed him. I noticed that he was going against the niwd. I suppose that enales him to dectect his enemines and I also noticed that he stopped several times and looked back He may have been aware that something followed him. It also may be due to his wild instinct of self preservation These animals know their enemies and the ways of their enemies. I followed him until darkness overtook me and so here I am.

O yes, I 'll find my way out. This letter will not be found amongst my bones. I know that I am on the west side of the mountains and I also know that every rivulet flows into a creek and every creek flows into a river and APPEAL FOR MEDICAL SUPPLIES FOR RUSSIA.

In every country directly touched by the war, hunger, deprivation, and disease have demanded, and are still demanding their terrible toll. Tuberculosis and syphilis, typhoid and small pox, influenza and a host of other diseases that are the direct outcome of malnutrition and actual stavation have decimated the populations of the earth.

Of all the nations none have suffered more from the ravages of disease than Russia. Under the regime of the Czar there was practically no public sanitation. Public welfare and public health were ignored. The attention of every part of this most corrupt of all governmental machines was concentrated upon its police and military organizations. There had never been an organized effort to combat the unclean and unhealthy living conditions of the great masses. The public at large was suffered to remain in ignorance of the most elementary rules of sanitation.

The war served to aggravate already unbearable conditions. It broke down the weak industrial and commercial structure and added hunger and want to the sufferings of the nation. When the March revolution came, and the soldiers broke their ranks and by one common impulse moved homeward, they carried with them the diseases with which the Russian Army was afflicted. Tuberculosis, syphilis, typhus and cholera raged everywhere. The spirit of hunger went stalking through the land, and its path was strewn with the bodies of sick and starving children. Medicines were scarce and so high in price that only the wealthy could afford the luxury of medical care. During the first months of the Bolshevist regime matters went from bad to worse. The physicians, in a body, belonging as they did to the bourgeois sabotaged the revolution by refusing to attend to the sick, the disabled and the invalid The few who remained at their posts, were hampered on every hand by the entire lack of medicines.

In the face of these seemingly insurmountable difficulties, in the midst of a period of industrial reconstruction such as the world has never seen, in spite of a blody struggle against usurpers and invaders on every side, the Russian Soviet Republic has built up a system of health control and public welfare that may well serve as an example to the progressive and democratic governments of Europe and America.

Before this new System of medical relief could be put into effect, however, the peculiarites of the old class society had to be destroyed. There were for instance, the difference in price for medical attention, the great variety in the character of hospitals and clinics for the rich and the poor, there was the gamble in medicine for speculation. Above all, the abysmal ignorance of the people of the simplest health measures; The crowded quarters of the poor, overworked, underfed masses, and the lack of physicians and ses, and the lack of physicians and nurses Against all of these, Soviet Russia through its public health and public welfare agencies waged relentless welfare. All apparatus for the care and treatment of the sick. Maimed, invalid and deformed were immediately placed under the control of the Soviet Department of Health. They imposed upon those who were economically independent by virtue of the social position and wealth the duty of helping the poor, not as an act of charity, but as a right that they owed to those who produced the comforts they were enjoying. An inventory of the entire medical resources of the country was made and the scanty supplies distributed to the numerous medical centers established in every corner of the land. Physicians have been placed under the direct control of the government and are assigned to their patients as they apply to the health center for medical assistance. As the number of physicians is entirely inadequate to care for the enormous number of sick and suffering large bodies of intelligent men and women have been trained to act as assistants under the direction of the physicians in charge of the cases, rendering valuable assistance, and materially increasing the efficiency of the medical staff.

Equally, even more important than this medical service is the campaign of disease prevention that has been carried on. Lectures on public and personal sanitation are held everywhere. Tons of literature, treating these questions in simple language have been distributed. In the cities the sanitary inspection of the houses has been introduced. Epidemics have been checked by the rigorous fumigation of houses where cases of illness occured. Vaccination was made compulsory—an accomplishment that only those who knew the superstitious nature of the uneducated Russian can fully appreciate. For the first time strong efforts are made to increase sanitation. The streets of Petrograd are thoroughly clean. The drinking-water is being filtered. Baths, washhouses, disinfecting stations have been established.

Military, naval and transport medical services have all been placed under the control of the Commissariat which has been greatly aided thereby in its struggle against epidemics. In addition to sections for the study of different branches of medicine, dentistry, radiography, etc., a special educational and publishing section has been instituted, which has organized at Moskow a museum of social hygiene, and has published popular booklets on points of hygiene and sanitation in millions of copies. A Central Library of Medicine, containing more than 30.000 volumes, has been open at Moskow since May. The Commissariat has convoked two conventions of bacteriologist and epidemiologists, two conventions of local sanitary sections, one pharmaceutical conference, one dental conference, and one conference for the study of school hygiene. It is intended that a Central Institute of Health will be the supreme controlling and scientific authority of the Soviet Republic in the domain of hygiene, epidemiology and bacteriology.

Never before have the working people participated so wholeheartedly and so enthusiastically in the reconstruction of their life as they do now. Whatever the hospital person require is supplied for them by the Trade Unions to which all workers must belong. At the meeting of these, the chief of the hospital is chosen and all orders and demands filled. There is a sub-department of the Health-Commissariat where the doctors come together and discuss the various health problems. Special committees of the Trade Unions decide upon the different sanitary rules and regulations. The whole structure is like a pyramid, broad at the base and tapering to an apex: it extends from the Commissariat to the health departments of the village soviets; it controls all available medical apparatus controls hospitals and takes care of all bathhouses and sanitoriums: has its own laboratories and apothecaries, and controls all medical and pharmactic personel of the Workers' State. The whole system is characterized by unique coherence. A spirit of fairness, justice and kindliness pervades the entire structure. The Commissariat hopes to give medical attention to all comrades of the Republic. It is moreover impossible to speculate in health products and health-service.

Prostitution, that scourge of modern society, has met in the Russian government its first effective combatant. In other countries, prostitution is regarded as a crime; the war against prostitution consequently is conducted by the police. Everywhere the result is the same. In spite of segregation and suppression, in spite of workhouse sentences and nightcourts, in spite of persecution and agitation, prostitution has grown, and sexual diseases have spread. Russia alone has found the only effective method of combating this social evil by removing the source that stimulates its growth Prostitution can and will flourish only so long as favorable economic conditions last In Soviet Russia, prostitution means starvation, for only those who are engaged in socially useful occupations are entitled to food.

But nothing that Soviet Russia can do, can save the country from the horrible effects of the Allied blockade. It is a horrible thing to see so many millions of hungry people, children dying from the lack of milk and medical suplies. New diseases are making their appearance, diseases before which the most competent physicians stand helpless, because the only things that can cure them, nourishing food, cannot be procured. Russia is being slowly starved out by its foreign foes. The supply of medicines is practically exhausted, Iodine, disinfectants, quinine, codliver oil, anasthetics to alleviate the sufferings of the soldiers at the front and of the surgical patients at home, all of them are needed and needed at once.

Send Medicine to Russia.

So long as the Allied blockade remains in force it will be impossible for the Russian government, through its accredited representatives, to buy these sorely needed drugs in the foreign markets. Russia is helpless. It appeals to you, you of the American working-class, to you who like they are fighting capitalistic oppression and capitalistic exploitation, to you whose future as workers is inextricably wrapped up in the fate of the Russian worker, to help save Russia. Save them from starvation by inducing our government to give up its murderous blockade. Save them from disease by sending drugs and medicines to Russia.

How you can help.

A number of sympathizers with the cause of Soviet Russia have recently organized the "Soviet Russia Medical Relief Committee." This organization will function as a Red Cross for the Russian people. It through this appeals to every labor union, to every workers benefit organization and to working class political organizations to join hands in raising an enormous fund that will buy for the unfortunate, suffering people the sorely needed medicines they themselves cannot procure. Ways and means of sending these drugs to Russia have already been found. The health and the virility of the Russian people depends upon your willingness to help.

The proletarian revolution in Russia has aroused a frenzy of devotion in the hearts of the class-conscious proletariat all over the world. Everywhere its glorious example has inspired the working class with new hope and new zeal. Its splended spirit, its unfailing, unflagging devotion to the cause, of the world movement of the working-class have been our hope and consolation in the days of the darkest reaction. Up to this time the Russian Revolution has only given—given with full hands and with a willing heart the only thing it had to give—hope and encouragement to the workers of the world.

The time has come when we can repay, in, oh, so small a measure, the service they have rendered to us. We have here the priceless opportunity of expressing in a more tangible form of admiration and the devotion our lips and pens have been expressing. We will send to Russia a message of cheer and good will that will say to her, to her starving children, to her sick in the hospitals, to her workers in the factories, to the men and the women who are giving their life blood in her defense, to all who love and who live in the Russian revolution:

An Enemy of Mankind.

Ignorance is the enemy of mankind. To remain ignorant is to make one's self an enemy of all men and women. Knowledge gives power and without knowledge, the working-class can never gain nor retain power. To remain ignorant is to remain a slave to other's will and opinions. The workers must learn to view the world from the standpoint of the useful producer. They must supplant their master-class teachings with the teachings of Science interpreted from the proletarian viewpoint. Workers who refuse to read the literature of the proletarian revolution that is now sweeping capitalism from the face of the earth are a loadstone about the neck of Labor.

The literature listed below will educate you in the CLASS STRUGGLE without a knowledge of which you can never assist your fellow workers to win and hold the world. ALL POWER TO THE WORKERS—but it must come thru knowledge.

In spite of Skygac's prickly jabs at the false teachings of the Church, he is getting a lot of compliments these days. Folks like his boiled down truths so tersely expressed.

MILWAUKEE—There are 1.200 undernourished school children in Milwaukee, said Dr. John P. Koehler, Milwaukee health department, in his address before the opening session of the Wisconsin health congress.

"We have found that the main reason for their critical condition is that their parents are unable to buy enough food," he said.

Three Stingy Little Hours

The slogan of the Kaiser's forces was "Gott mit uns" and early in the war Billy Buncombe Sunday drafted Christ as the Commander in chief of the American forces. Hatreds were deliberately cultivated which will take generations to overcome. There, is one problem the Gospel of Christ did NOT solve. Other problems can be named by the score.

The same paper that carried the "Don't buy—Don't sell" advertisement carried an advertisement paid for by the Michigan "Wood—for—President League" which said "What is America's Greatest Need" and answered their self-asked question by saying, "A Great Administrator" and of course then proceeded to attempt to prove that he of the "ship—or—shoot—radicals" fame was the GREAT administrator. The point I want to make is that the Holy Name Society tells us in twenty four point type, that America Needs Christ, and the Michigan Political League just mentioned tells us that America Needs him of the "ship—or—shoot" fame. Now it is not reasonable to suppose that any one would claim that Christ was Wood, altho there are many trying to tell us that Wood is a modern twentieth century Christ, but I can only infer that neither of the advertiser knew what it is that America needs!

The Communist Service leaflet number 4 contains an address by the President of Community Service, which, tells of another unsolved problem. I quote from page 2.

"Man is by nature an outdoor animal, a hunter, a fighter and a fisherman. The machine has locked him up in factories and tenement houses, where he sickens and dies not from physical disease alone but also from homesickness.

In ancient times a remedy for the evil of industrialism—though not then aggravated by machinery, was, FOR THE UPPER CLASSES, found in slavery. The rulers reserved to themselves the ancient and instinctive pursuits of war, of hunting and OF GOVERNMENT. Industrial work was relegated to the slaves. Out of this form of civilization, with all its evils, came wonderful discoveries in art, in music and in science; and life, FOR THE RULING CLASS, reached a higher level than would have been possible without the advance of the industrial arts.

OUR PROBLEM, ever since has been to conserve these benefits and at the same time to ABOLISH THE INSTITUTION that first made them possible. THAT PROBLEM HAS NOT YET BEEN SOLVED. SLAVERY HAS NOT BEEN ABOLISHED."

The caps in the above quotation are mine but the wording is in the Community Service book (published at National Headquarters of Community Service, One Madison Ave New York City.

It seems Big Business, hiding behind the Holy Name Society knows that there are many unsolved problems and problems which the Gospel of Christ has not, does not, and can not solve. In the "Don't Buy—Don't Sell" advertisement they admit the truth of the above. They say "Unrest is in the air. The popular mind is feverish and uneasy. Sudden gusts of passion and resentment sweep over the multitude. Bolshevism;—Socialism in a hurry—is knocking at our door. Every street corner is vocal with remedies, The Gospel of Christ has a solution for every problem."

What solution has the Gospel of Christ for this problem? We find it in Ephesians VI verses 5&6 "Servants be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart as unto Christ: not with eye service as menpleasers but as the servants of Christ doing the will of God from the heart."

This is a fine solution from the viewpoint of the master-class but to an awakened slave it is only another link in the cunningly wrought chain designed with but one aim; that aim being to hold the slave in his slavery. In the language of the common people, it is a solution which does not "solute".

Abe Herschin put it in rhyme.

And' we're also some shy on accepting the lie
Of the preacher, that if we behave,
We'll get pie in the sky, by and by, when we die,
Which is sure swell "reward" for a slave.

Now that guff is all bunk, theological junk,
Not worthy the brain of a cow;
It's a mere mental drunk for a nut made of punk,
MEN want what they want here and now!"

The master-class does not believe in the Gospel of Christ for themselves but for their dupes; their slaves. If they really believed, believe you me they would give more than a stingy three little hours out of all eternity to their ghost worship. But when they use full page advertisements in the daily press to spread their "opium for the poor" it may be read as the last gasp of a dying creed.

The Black Sheep.

I know that all rivers in this part of the country flow into Lake Couer D'Alane upon the shores of which is the cabin of my friends. I really wish you had been with me today and could have seen and enjoyed it all. It is a wonderful world in which we live, full of wealth which money cannot buy; but which all may have simply for loving it. True you cannot eat it in the physical sense of that word; but then it is written "Man shall not live by bread alone." Food for the mind is not a market value. Often it consists of things which can neither be bought nor sold and yet their possession enriches one with a wealth that cannot tarnish.

What a contrast there is between the great wilds and prison bars. It is better to be alone in the woods than broke among ones fellow men.

Sincerely and thankfully,

Jack Thurston.

He closed his book and put it in his pocket and being tired with the days travel he fell asleep and knew no more until he was awakened by the cold in the small hours of the morning.

Grand Jury Indicts Baker and Cannon

Kansas City, Apr. 28th.

The Federal Grand Jury returned indictments here today against J. P. Cannon, editor of the Workers' World, and Charles Baker, National Organizer of the Communist Labor Party charging them with a violation of the Lever Act during the coal strike last November. Bail in each case was set at $15.000.00 which was furnished by both defendants.

Cannon and Baker are charged specifically with "conspiring to obstruct, hinder and delay the production of bituminous coal" by speeches made in support of the cause of the miners in the Kansas coal fields and by the publication of articles in the Workers' World which, it is claimed, were calculated to "inflame the minds of the miners against their officials" and encourage them to disregard the order to return to work before a settlement of their demands was made.

The Workers' World, which had gained a large circulation and strong influence in the Kansas mining district was suppressed with the arrest of Cannon and Baker last December. The present remarkable stand of the Kansas miners in opposition to the Allen Industrial Court Bill is partly attributed, by the corporation press, to the effects of the communist propaganda carried on amongst them by the two men indicted.

Enthusiastic Defense Meetings

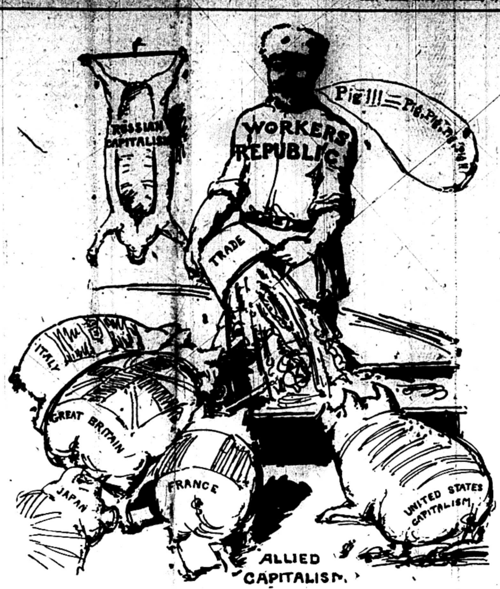
Three Political Prisoners' Defense meetings held by comrade Marguerite Prevey in Belmont County on the 24th and 25th of April proved very successful according to reports from there. Mrs. Prevey, who has been conducting meetings for the purpose of raising funds in the interest of the Prevey Baker and Burke Defense, has had phenomenal success with all her meetings which began at Akron on April 4th.

The meeting at Toledo on the 18th at the Labor Temple was splendid. This was the first meeting which Toledo Socialist have held for some time and it proved that they have lost none of their "pep" notwithstanding. The collection amounted to $130.00.

Enthusiasm of a high degree marked the Bellaire meeting writes comrade Stidd. Many people, new attendants at socialist meetings were present. Belmont County Locals are very active in the work of education among the miners and workers generally.

A meeting at Youngstown was held on May 2nd. Two meetings at Portsmouth will be held on the 9th of May. The Strand Theatre has been rented for these occassionsand they are certain to prove equally successful with previous meetings. Other meetings in Ohio are being arranged and also some in Illinois.

All Ohio Locals are urged to make arrangements for meetings for comrade Prevey.



Slopping the Hogs!

Palmer's Sun is Setting

The Wilson administration seems particularly unfortunate in the selection of the heads of government departments. By some ironic fate the administration that has held up before the people the ideals of democracy and has led the nation thru a war for them has placed as the heads of powerful government departments two of the most savage and Prussian—like officials that ever sat in the seats of the mighty. We refer to Attorney General Palmer and Mr Burlison of the post office department. The administration that has boasted so highly of its accomplishments in the field of applied democracy on a world scale has been a significant failure in bringing democracy to the folks at home.

The trials of the alleged Communists at Boston last week before Judge George W Anderson of the United States District Court were a revelation of the Prussian methods of Palmer and the Department of Justice in their nation wide raids of the past 4 months followed by the deportations of aliens So incensed was Judge Anderson at the unlawful and savage activities of Palmer's agents as revealed in the trial at Boston that he repeatedly excoriated the Department for its illegal and cruel persecutions.

"I can hardly sit on the bench and restrain my indignation at the tyrannous methods of the Department of Justice" exclaimed Judge Anderson after heading testimony in the trials "More lawless proceedings are hard to conceive."

The first move in the trial was for Judge Anderson to grant habeas corpus writs for the 13 Communists ordered deported, thus bringing them under the custody of the court.

He then granted them bail of $500, the amount fixed by the Department of Labor having been from $5.000 to $10.000.

"Hang First—Try Later"

"This case seems to have been conducted under the modern theory of statesmanship—hang first and try afterwards," said the court in commenting on one of the cases in which one man was held 15 days before a warrant was obtained.

"I wish you would show me one case in which the Department of Justice has the authority to arrest and hold men for two weeks without warrant.

"A more lawless proceeding is hard to conceive. What we need is the Americanization of those who carry on such proceedings."

A careful examination of Palmer's evidence in his so-called "perfect cases" revealed substantially the following matter and procedure:

Exhibit A. Telegraphic warrant for arrest of John Smith.

Exhibit B. Warrant received by mail for arrest of John Smith.

Exhibit C. Copy of Communist Party constitution. Question: Where did you get this paper? Answer: I picked it up in the street.

Decision: An order for immediate deportation.

In some cases prisoners have said (according to Palmer's own "perfect cases") that the so-called incriminating literature used against them came to them through the mails in Department of Justice stationery! Others explained that the literature was given them by friends or acquaintances. The record does not show, in many instances, that the Department of Justice made any effort to establish the criminality of the original distributors.

The excoriation of the Palmer Prussians by Judge Anderson marks the first gleam of reason that has been able to shoot thru the fog of crass ignorance, fear and class hatred that has been cultivated in America since she becan the game of creating multitudes of millionaires under the guise of war for democracy. The pendulum is swinging the other way now, the public mind is returning to some semblance of sanity, the victims are beginning to question in no soft voiced interrogations where this governmental repression will end?

The three loud mouthed apostles of democracy, Wilson, Palmer and Burlison are scheduled to receive the repudiation which they so justly deserve.

The Class War in Oregon

Casualties Jan. 1—Apr. 19—1920.

Claude Hurst; sec. Local Portland, C. L. P., sentenced Apr. 16th to two years in the staste penitentiary.

Fred. W. Fry; member of Local Portland C. L. P., sentenced to two years in the state pententiary on Apr. 16th and paroled.

Joseph Laundry; secretary of the Workers, Soldiers and Sailors Council and member of the C. L. P. and the I. W. W., was sentenced today Apr. 19th to two years in the state penitentiary.

Note: This does not include the numerous vagrancy charges handed 90 days etc. where membership was doubtful; nor does it cover the many aliens held here for deportation on which no returns have yet been made.

Palmer and his pals did not neglect us here in Oregon, indeed they started bright and early here. On the evening of Nov. 11th 1919 a raid took place on the hall of the Worker's, Soldiers and Sailor's Council. Fifty-eight were arrested out of which number twenty-six alleged I. W. W. were held to answer charges of having violated the Oregon Criminal Syndicalism law—better known as The Oregon Comical Sillyism law. All of these are still awaiting trial save for Josepr Laundy who has been tried and "convicted," and who was sentenced today.

On Jan. 2nd the hall of the Communist Labor Party was raided as well as the homes of all who were suspected as being members. A total of some 25 or 30 were made out of which six were indicted for Comical Sillyism and about a dozen received deportation warrants. Of those held for deportation one took sick and was taken to a hospital. Frank Cusak, the patient, did not choose to go out the regular way, i. e. through the door, and so he just walked out through a hole in the wall, known as a window, and—"escaped". It is only recently that the bail of these have been lowered so as to make it possible to get the most of them out. Victor Saulit (delegate to Ntl. Convention) and his wife Julia Saulit are still held on $10,000 bail.

The "trial" of Hurst, Fry and myself was a one-sided farce inasmuch as we had to take an attorney whose name appears in Wilson's "New Freedom" —No others seemed to want anything to do with us. This attorney specialized of the prosecution and instead he try to refute any of the accusations our "peers" he absolutely forgot to to. In his "argument," to the jury of when there was something to object made himself conspicuous by his silence knew that he could not keep out and on objecting to everything which he brought in Tennyson's poems and other poems from which he read to our "peers" — as if Tennyson's poems had anything to do with the Class Struggle. In short he sabotaged on us all the way through. His presence constituted a barrier so we could not defend ourselves.

"Guilty" said the jury of our peers, and our bail went up to $1,000.—A date for the sentence was set, and which was later postponed until April 16th. I shall here quoted some of the language of the Court.

"I coudl not face the picture of my father who died in service, or again clasp the hands of my two brothers who are wearing the uniform of the United States if I did less," declared Robert G. Morrow as the passed sentences.

"The defendant Oster is not entitled to any consideration from this Court. From circumstances surrounding his life and education, he apparently went into this organization understanding just exactly what he was doing, knowing that it advocated the destruction of property, the taking of life and the overthrow of our public institutions.

"If the opportunity was offered Oster, Russia would have nothing on the United States in terrorism and crime. Unfortunately he has brains which are of material assistance in his disloyal work. (This kind of "Americanism" would make an American of 1776 homesick for a penitentiary.)

"Oster boasts of his connections with the party. He sat on the witness stand and, disregarding the record as he must have known it, stigmatized as 'piracy' the action of the United States in sending troops to Russia to protect the interests of ourselves and allies in Siberia."

Throughout the trial I wondered if the Americanism of 1776 had actually become the criminal syndicalism of today. If this be true,—and I think it is—the prosecution can not glory any more then I in my conviction.

Put for the present all the brains in jails, and let the lowest scum that cringes, crawls and "stools" continue still, to propagate their hellish kin! Exalted ignorance never can prevail,—nor can it, even for a moment, turn back the clock of evolution so as to retard the onrush of the blazing dawn of Industrial Democracy—of "Mans humanity to man".

In the occupation of Archangel the Bolsheviki took posession of the correspondence of the former Russian government, from which it is clear that the government made unheard of exertions in order to obtain the support of England, but in vain.

Among others, there was found a telegram from General Miller to Sazonov, in which it was stated that Bolshevik propaganda and the many losses of the population had awakened feelings of hopelessness as well as the view that it was idle to struggle longer. The alteration in the attitude of the troops came clear on February 8, when three regiments passed over to the Reds.

Lenin On Tactics

LONDON.—The advice of Nicolai Lenin to The English Labor movement on the question of joining the Third International has just been published here in the London Daily Herald by George Lansbury, its editor. Lansbury, whose recent trip to Russia has made a profound impression on all classes in England, talked over British labor problems at length with Lenin.

Lansbury describes as a misconception the prevalent belief that subscribing to the Third International would mean the abandonment of the trade union movement, and cooperative, municipal and parliamentary work. Lenin said very definitely on this point:

"All Socialists and Communists should take the lead in trade union, municipal, cooperative and parliamentary life, and thus use every means in their power to obtain the triumph of the cause."

The Labor and Socialist movements of Great Britain and the rest of the world are followed very closely in Moscow by means of newspapers, said Lansbury. Lenin declares that the method of destroying the capitalist system must vary in every country, but that there is no means of avoiding a violent revolution, no matter how well developed the educational and evolutionary movements are.

Declaring that the division which exists between the various labor groups in England on the question of tactics is more apparent than real, Lansbury decries the "labels of illusion".

"I am convinced that if people generally understood that Bolshevik means most, and soviet means council, and that commissar only means an executive officer, much foolish opposition to the Russian revolution would have been saved," he asserted. "There is no reason to attach more violence to those words than to any other words in the Socialist vocabulary."

MILWAUKEE—"The authorities at Alcatraz have been releasing military prisoners convicted of criminal and degenerate acts, yet they still hold five political prisoners who have committed no crime of any sort."

This statement was made here by Leroy Horlacher, war objector, on his way to his home in Philadelphia.

Horlacher served with Carl Haessler, Milwaukee draft objector, both in Leavenworth and in Alcatraz. They travelled to the latter place together after the famous Wire City. Weekly episode in which political prisoners in Leavenworth succeeded in publishing a radical magazine under the very eyes of the authorities.

"Carl Haessler holds the universal respect and confidence of his fellow prisoners," said Horlacher. "He is a man whom the authorities cannot cow, whose spirit they cannot break."

Horlacher stated that Carl Haessler is due for release on Sept. 17, 1920.

Refuse to Convict Dolson

Disagreement after deliberation of 76 hours in the case of James H. Dolson, charged with violation of the state Criminal Syndicalism law of California was the outcome of the trial of Dolson which was concluded at San Francisco last week.

The trial of comrade Dolson, which is but one of several members and officials of the Communist Labor Party of that state, consumed five full weeks. It contained many unusual features of such trials, one of especial moment being that comrade Dolson conducted his own case entirely. The length of time consumed in the trial and time which the jury occupied in considering its verdict are the longest on record of such cases tried in California courts.

That comrade Dolson conducted his case in a masterly manner may be taken for granted judging by the results of the Jury's deliberations, six jurymen stoutly holding out for acquittal. A retrial of the case is set for June 1st at which time it may be dismissed. All other California cases of the Communist Labor Party have been Comrade Person of Rockford, Illinois, one of several Communist Labor Party members charged with violation of state Criminal Suydicalism laws was acquitted there last week.

It has been later learned that 5 in all C. L. P. cases at Rockford were aquitted.

A CORRECTION.

In your last issue, column one, page two, you credit the Catholic Holy Name Society with the definition of Bolshevism as Socialism in a hurry. This is incorrect. The definition emanates from the clever pen of Israel Zangwell. It is he who characterized Bolshevism as Socialism in a hurry and Socialism while you wait, also as Socialism applied in practice. Honor to whom honor is due.

The British Labor Movement.

— By Felix Morley. —

Final Article—Agricultural Unionism

LONDON.—One of the outstanding and most significant features of the British Labor Movement today is the vigor and unanimity with which agricultural laborers are now lining up side by side with the indutsrial proletariat. Close to 400,000, ar nearly fifty per cent of all the rural workers in Great Britain are now organized in the trade unions working in their behalf, a membership figure aproximately double that of a year ago. At the end of 1917 only about 100,000 agricultural laborers were organized.

No less striking than increase of membership, and to a growing extent bound up with it, is the birth of Socialistic spirit among the farm hands. A few years, and even months ago, all that the downtrodden agricultural workers of Great Britain thought about was an increase of wages which would enable them to sustain their families on a standard of moderate comfort and decency. Today communistic sentiment is a real factor and spreading rapidly. Particularly in Scotland the demand for nationalization of the land is too strong to be longer ignored by the government.

To understand this situation it is necessary to appreciate the present land system in Great Britain, a land system which is more medieval and intolerable than that of any other civilized state. It is fact, the recognition of which is by no means confined to labor circles, that the position of the English agricultural laborer today is in one vital respect worse than it was during the reign of William the Conqueror, over eight hundred years ago. In the year 1085 less than ten per cent. of the English agricultural population were completely divorced from land tenure. Today, at a moderate estimate, half of this same population are landless laborers not only with no chance whatever of achiving land ownership, but even without any hope of advancing from an economic and social position which is closely akin to that of the feudal serf. And while it is most marked in the case of the agricultural laborer the injustice of the English land system does not even end with him. A great majority of the so-called farmers, who employ this labor, are only tenant farmers subject to the autocratic control of a tiny minority of landowners who exact tribute from every tenant and rarely interest themselves in practical farming.

A few figures will make the situation clearer. There are at the present time something over 600,000 agricultural laborers of various types in England and Wales. There are something under 300,000 farmers and live-stock raisers, almost all of them tenants on other peoples' property. There are about 15,000 large landowners who in the aggregate own eighty per cent of all the land in England and Wales, exact heavy rents from those who till it and give hunting and shooting parties for their friends in return. That, in a nutshell, is the reason of the present agricultural unrets in Great Britain and the reason why ''Hodge'', as the farm laborer is called is now joining in with the labor movement in tens of thousands. Less than two per cent. of those who make their living off the land own eighty per cent. of that land and in spite of possesing give little or no service in return.

The first phase of the farm labor movement in England began in 1833 and is now ending. It was the phase, familiar in all industrial history, in which the serf class in its blind struggle for something more than a bare subsistence found itself opposed by an alliance of the middle and upper classes. In this case it was the struggle of the unaided farm laborer against an all-powerful combination of tenant farmers and landlords. The second phase promises to be very much shorter than the first and may end in the nationalization of the land in Great Britain. It will be characterized by a fighting alliance of the tenant farmers and their laborers on the one side as oppesed to the parasitic landlord class on the other. This alliance is already in working operation in Scotland and is beginning to be formed in parts of England. Its watchword everywhere is ''nationalize the land.''

While the first agricultural laborers' union was launched in England in 1833 it was many years before organization began to make tangible headway. The chief reason for initial delays was the prompt action of the government, composed largely of ''land gentry,'' in launching methods of terrorism against a movement in which they rightly say contain elements of danger to their comfortable position. It is interesting to note that the methods used in England then were very closely akin to those which seem to be popular in another great English speaking Democracy today.

The cause of the founding of the union was a warning by the farmers that the current wages of seven shillings ($1.75) a week would shortly be reduced to six shillings ($1.50). The action of the government was to throw the six ''evil-disposed'' officers of this labor fledgling into jail and shortly afterwards to deport them to Australia.

There is not space here to discuss the long, up and down struggle for organization which characterized the history of English agricultural labor from 1833 until the late war. In the main these efforts were unsuccessful; at best the farm worker was difficult to organize, an isolated individual, unable to join his fellows in association as easily as the city worker. Add to this the fact that the ambitious among the agricultural workers migrated to industrial centers, that those who remained were hampered by the lethargy of ingorance, and that oppression of every sort was brought to bear upon the agricultural unions, and it is not surprising that August 1914 found the farm workers in a social position as debased as ever and drawing an average wage in England and Walls of just sixteen shillings ($4.00) a week.

Two factors have changed this situation almost overnight and account for the strong position of the agricultural today. The first of these is the entrance of the Workers' Union, the most powerful organization in England catering only to unskilled and casual labor, into the field of agricultural organization. The second factor is found in the passage of the Wheat Production Act, forced through parliament largely by virtue of German U-boat pressure in August 1917.

When the English agricultural laborer built up his own union he would start with an organization of a dozen or so members and a capital of a few dollars. Growth was slow and the first effort to ameliorate conditions brought pressure from the farmers and landlords, generally resulting in collapse. When the Workers' Union organized a special branch for agricultural labor it started with a membership of a quarter of a million and a bank account of several hundred thousand dollars. Merely by filling out his membership card in the Workers' Union the farmworker found himself linked up with the industrial strength of organized urban labor. This one step brought his ultimate emancipation nearer than eighty years of effort at independent organization had done.

One of the reasons which led the Workers' Union to organize the farm laborers, as told me by George Dallas in charge of the agricultural organization work, was the problem of having discontented or striking farm workers come to the cities and undercut the unskilled labor there. The reverse of this was also true; time and again where agricultural laborers would attempt a strike against an unfair landlord or farmer the latter would bring in unemployed from the cities to defeat the move. By successfully invading the agricultural field the Workers' Union has effectively protected both its rural and city members from scabbing of this sort, and tremendously strengtened the industrial power of both units. It is note-worthy that the industrial organizers of the Workers' Union have been phenominally successful in lining up the farmhands as union members.

The importance to the movement of the other factor of success the Wheat Production Act, is found in its clause setting up representative committees throughout the country for the consideration of production, wages and other agricultural problems. On these committees the farm workers have an equal representation with the farmers, which meant in the first place a governmental endorsement of the agricultural workers' union as the only bodies able to elect farm laborers' representatives. Beyond this, however the power which they exert on these committes have taught the farm laborers and farmers to cooperate and to look forward to the time when agriculture will be a socialized industry free from land-lord control.

At every recent conference of farm laborers, delegates from every county in England have recorded the opinion that ''no adequate solution of the rural problem is possible so long as the land is privately owned.'' In addition a minimum wage, ''adequate to promote efficiency'' has been established throughout England and Wales by the Wheat Production Act. Last spring this minimum was established for adult male farm workers at the ridiculously inadequate figure of thirty shillings a week for six day week of fifty-four hours in summer and fifty hours in winter.

The Workers' Union has achieved the most remarkable success in organizing the agricultural workers, and is of particular interest because of its successful combination of farm and industrial worker. It is not, however, at present numerally the most important of the rural unions. The Agricultural Laborers' Union, successfully reorganized out of previous failures in 1912, is entirely of, by and for the farm workers, and has an enviable record of successes accomplished both by peaceful negotiation and, where negotiations were spurned, by strikes. In the county of Norfolk this union now exerts such power that no farmer will take on a ''hand'' unless the latter can show his union card. The A. L. U. now claims a membership of something over 200,000, and is growing steadily. The agricultural section of the Workers' Union numbers 150,000 and is also increasing.

In spite of a certain amount of rivalry there is a close executive harmony between these two bodies. Both are cooperating on the immediate aim of British agricultural labor — a basic 48 hour week with a minimum wage of fifty shillings, provisions which are likely to be forced through the forthcoming Parliament. Both are urging their members to vote the labor ticket and strengthen their political as well as their industrial position, the results of which propaganda are now seen in every by-election in agricultural districts.

The rapid emancipation of the agricultural workers, and the growing cooperation between him and the farmer against the absentee landlord, is one of the most significant features of the new England which has been born out of the war. The dukes and earls who own a majority of England are being faced with two alternatives—either take up agriculture as a serious business or sell out to those who will, and it is note-worthy that for the most part they are choosing the latter course. Meantime the sentiment for nationalization of the land and communistic ownership is spreading.

One other factor growing out of the rural activity of the Workers' Union deserves stress. It is the close cooperation between agricultural and urban labor which is being developed. Something which, combined with the work of the Co-operative Societies, can be developed so as to eliminate the middleman whenever he operates as a food trust, and which is also paving the way towards an equitable food distribution in the cities, particularly valuable in the time of sudden emergency.

A Subject People

— By Scott Nearing —
Staff Writer, The Federated Press.

Popular sympathy recently aroused over the plight of ''subject peoples'' has gone out to Korea, India, and Ireland. Now comes a report on ''Labor Conditions in Porto Rico'' written by Joseph Marcus (a special agent of the United States Employment Service) which strongly suggests the necessity of adding another to the long list of peoples which are denied ''the right of self-determination.''

The American flag has been flying over the island of Porto Rico for twenty years, yet the percentage of illiteracy is still abnormally high. During the year 1917 and 18 ''only 142,846 children out of a total of 427,666 of school age actually enrolled in the public schools.'' The difficulty, syas Mr. Marcus, ''lies in the bad economic condition'' in which the worker finds himself. ''Porto Rico is an island of wealthy land proprietors and of landless workers.''

''There is a law in Porto Rico prohibiting any single individual from owning more than 500 acres of land ... With the American occupation the price of cane land rose very high — from thirty to three hundred dollars per acre—and this induced many a small holder to sell his land and join the ranks of the laborers.'' Under these circumstances the law limiting land holdings was not enforced and at the present time ''of the best land in Porto Rico 537,193 acres are owned and 229,203 acres are leased by 477 individuals, partnerships, or corporations from the United States Spain France and other countries.''

The total wealth of the island is in the hands of fifteen per cent. of the population. Fourteen per cent. of the wealth is in the hands of native Porto Ricans. Sixty seven percent is owned by Americans.

Four fifths of the people of Porto Rico live in the rural districts. They build their little shacks on land that does not belong to them; they work when work is to be had on the nearest plantation; the men in a pair of trousers, a shirt and a straw hat. ''Throughout the island thousands of children of the ages from one to seven years go naked, in the towns as well as in the rural districts.''

When the laborer is at work he and his family share the following diet:

Breakfast—Black coffe, without milk and quite often without sugar.

Lunch—Rice and beans, or rice and codfish, or codfish and plantins.

Supper—The same as lunch.

This diet holds good while the laborer has steady work but during a large part of the year—five or six months—there is no work. ''How he pulls through the slow season is a mystery to many who are interested in the welfare of the laborer.''

The Porto Rican laborer is a sick man. ''Hook-worm diseas, anemia, etc. are very wide spread.

The low energy value of the diet together with the prevalence of sickness have so undermined the endurance of the Porto Rican laborer that a number of experiments in scientific diet carried on by the employers themselves, resulted in increasing the working capacity of the men from 50 to 100 per cent. Mr. Marcus finds that with an increase in wages which would enable the laborer to purchase some meat and dairy products, the charge of laziness and inefficiency which are frequently lodged against the workers might well be withdrawn.

The investigation upon which Mr. Marcus bases his report about one dollar per day. Laborers in the busy season were paid ninety cents per day; in the slow season seventy cents. The working day is from ten to twelve hours. On the tobacco plantations men's wages during the busy season are from sixty to eighty cents a day and during the dull season from forty to sixty cents a day. Women receive from thirty-five to forty-five cents a day in the busy season and from twenty-five to thirty-five cents a day in the dull season. On the coffee plantations wages are lower. Men receive from fifty to sixty cents per day in the busy season and from thirty-five to forty-five cents per day in the dull season.

Mr. Marcus reports that the needle industry is making considerable headway in Porto Rico. Men's and children's suits are manufactured by women operators who earn from three dollars and fifty cents to five dollars per week. Embroidery manufacturing, lace making and drawn work pay from $1.25 to $4.00 per week. The work is done exclusively by women.

Detailed descriptions are given of living and working conditions in these and other industries. Enough has been said here to indicate very clearly that the American people, having assumed the responsibility for directing the lives of 1,118,012 Porto Ricans, are far behind the standard of ''health and decency'' which civilization prescribes as the minimum below which human beings cannot be expected to live and to work. There are subject peoples in Europe and Asia living under intolerable economic and social situations. There are also peoples in the West Indies subjets of the United States, whose life tragedy has been intensified rather than relieved by the presence of the capitalist imperialists from the North.

PRISONERS DIFFER AS TO AMNESTY.

Comrade A. L. Sugarman, one of our political prisoners confined at Leavenworth, writes The Toiler that he, among others in Leavenworth are in disagreement with the statements regarding amnesty for political prisoners contained in the article recently published in the Toiler ''What Political Prisoners thing of Amnesty,'' written by comrade Wm. Madison Hicks, ''Comrade Hicks was not authorized to speak for the radicals here'' writes Sugerman.

CECH SOCIALISTS WIN.

PRAGUE, April 24.—Returns from elections in Cecho-Slovakia indicate the new national assembly will have 120 Socialist members out of a total of 300. The Clericals, Agrarians and National Democrats form the reactionary block with approximately ninety-three votes. The party affiliations of the remainder of the members are scattered.

[illegible]

Jim Larkin of the working class is on trial in New York City for being partly responsible for the Left Wing Program, which has to do with the same class-principles enunciated by the Third International. Jim Larkin is Irish and has an ''A—No. 1'' labor record in Ireland. But that is not what we are going to talk about.

Jim Larkin is on trial in New York City and he is going it alone. He decided he could make a better class fight than any lawer could make for him — and he is right. He is holding down the stage in Judge Week's court in such commendable style that we wish the whole world of workers could sit in and listen and see.

First let's say that if you'd ask the average native what employment people follow in New York City he'd tell you that there are ever so many machinists, carpenters, needle workers, railroad men, ordinary working folk. How comes it then that the jury panel in the courts show none of these workers in it? You'll only need one guess to guess why.

Here are the kind of folk that are being called to try Larkin: general insurance agent, carpenter superintendent, underwriter of surety, stock trader, chief cashier, cotton goods broker, treasurer for importers, etc. And now get this—one prospective juror confessed that he managed a co-operative store and one approved of the 1776 revolution and out both of them went by peremption by the prosecution.

The first thing Larkin did in acting in his own defense was to challenge the judge, claiming that the judge was prejudiced and had proven it in commending the conviction of Gitlow and Winnitzky, two communists previously sentenced by this same judge. The court decided, as could have been epected, that it was fit to sit in the case. The court and Larkin, all thru the selection of the jury, staged the class struggle in peppery language. The court, to facilitate presentation of the case, advised Larkin to take a lawyer. To this Larkin answered: 'I don't see that the form of presenting the truth matters very much.''

Larkin insisted that the jury panel was not of his class and asked its dismissal. The judge refused. When a prospective juror seemed rattled about constitutional methods which might be persued to overthrow the government and admitted that he was not familiar with the constitution, Larkin said to him: ''That is the reason why you have been specially selected.'' He asked this same juror that if a foreigner '''like Christ came to this country, do you think he could become an American citizen.'' This horrified the court!

At a point when Judge Weeks and a prospective juror who thought that the reason the cost of living was high was because workers did not work long enough hours, engaged in a conversation about economics, Larkin broke in by remarking: ''Pardon me for saying so, but I think that both do not know what they are talking about.''

'What class do you belong to'' is Larkin's hot shot. Most of those asked don't belong to any class and say they do not believe in classes. So much like the religious fanatic who said he did not belong to any world nor believe in things worldly.

A new trick was played upon those who are attending the Larkin trial, and the court room is crowded. At a specially well attended session the names and addresses of all who attended were taken. An attempt at intimidation, that's all.

We have had the ''no defense'' trial and the class trial with lawers instructed to make a class fight. But the best of them all, after all, is the kind that Larkin is conducting, for he meets his class enemies face on and words are not softened by passage thru a representative of the legal profession. There will be more of these tirals from now on.

LONDON.—With the most critical period in its history just ahead, the Triple Industrial Alliance of dockers, transportworkers, miners and railwaymen will meet May 5. Announcement of the plan was made by a subcommitee consisting of Harry Gosling and Robert Williams of the transport workers, Herbert Smith and Frank Hodges of the miners and J. H. Thomas and William Cramp of the railwaymen.

The purpose of the conference according to Williams, will be to deal with matters arising out of the previous conference and to strengthen the alliance in readiness to meet any tests that may come.

The statement is significant because of the fact that all three organizations are now in the midst of negotiation new demands. The railwaymen have put in a demand for a flat increase of one pound a week for all the men included in the January 1920 settlement, which involves a gross total of 17,000,000 pounds a year additional outlay. The transport workers are engaged in delicate negotiations in regard to the dockers' position, and a crisis in the tramways and road transport is imminent. The miners on April 15 after a ballot accepted the government's offer of two shillings a day raise, instead of three, but the situation is far from closed.

It is expected that the necessity for exerting powerful pressure upon the government will bring the three organizations into even closer relations following the conference.

The Black Sheep.

Chapt. XXIX.

Debates.

In the little log cabin by the lake Collins and Rudolph were absorbing book lore and cursing what Omar the Pagan called ''The sorry scheme of things entire.'' These two were agreed on the general proposition that every thing in society needed cursing and in this work they co-operated beautifully. They were the Castor and Pollux in the firmament of invective. On all other subjects they differed as they differed in tempervment. They were like the diamond and charcoal which are both pure carbon but the one is inky black and the other sparklingly beautiful. So it was with these men, one was the incarnation of gloomy pessimism while the other had an abundance of optimistic faith in the latent power of the working class to emancipate itself from capitalistic thraldom. The fact is both had a measure of such faith, but in the one it sparkled and shone forth at all times in undimmed lustre, while in the other it was just present and often quite obscured by an exterior bitterness which gave him the appearance of being a misanthrop.

Rudolph was always sympathetic in his verabl dealing with human weakness; especially if these weaknesses were found in the working class. If a working man died it was because capitalism had exploited him and if he turned ''high jack'' and robbed his fellow workers of their hard earned coin then he could not help it. He would explain it as a result of his early bourgeois environment. With him a worker could do no wrong to a capitalist or a fellow worker. In the first place it was an act of class consciousness in the second a reflex of environment.

With Collins on the other hand the question was entirely different. He insisted on almost puritanical ethics within the working class. On all matters ot deparvity he took a Darwinian view. Still when it came to defining what constituted a workingman, Collins was more liberal than Rudolph. In fact on this proposition their views were hopelessly at variance.

To Rudolph a proletarian was a man whom the process of machine development had robbed of his skill, his patriotism, his religion, in short of every thing but his ability to work when he found a purchaser in the labor market. A proletarian was a man who was forced to sell his life for the privilege of living. To him a man who possesses skill could not be a proletarian because he had something more to sell than his mere power to work. To fully appreciate the peculiarity of his views, on this subject his views on women are significant, to his mind women could not be classed as strictly working class creatures for when it became impossible for them to sell their labor power they were not like men forced to revolt but naturally fell back on the commercial value of their sex power, which he averred they would sell almost without exception rather then starve or fight. ''How many of them do you find in the jungle, or hitting the road in search of a job?'' he would ask. ''They are more numerous than men and the lines of work that they can hold down are fewer so logically more of them ought to be out of employment. But they are not. At least you don't see them. They are biological bourgeois. They have something to sell besides their labor power. And before they go hungry they sell it.'' With this sentiment Collins would take violent issue. In fact his very inability to adequately answer Rudolph made him the more angry for it is evident that the Jew's statement while extremely unchivalrous has a natural element of truth.

On the question of what constituted a proletarian Collins had as has been indicated a more liberal view. To him any one who does anything that is in any way essential to the welfare and comfort of the human race as a whole, belonged to the working class providing however that in so serving mankind the individual was compelled to sell his power of hand or brain to another, who in turn sold the result of such work in the open market.

They had spent days on this subject. Arguing and reading, searching thru a stack of books and pamphlets, not with the object of finding the truth, or of reaching any basis or agreement. That is seldom done in any controversy. Both worked with a feverish intensity to prove each other wrong. They as individuals reflected the course of the entire radical movement in all its varigated branches. They worked like theologians endeavoring to hide the truth in order that they might establish their dogmas. The average radical leader like his theological brother has but one idea and, that is to build up a following for his particular brand of delusion, and his whole effort is expended not in the discovery of the truths of life but rather in a frantic effort to keep his fallacies from becoming apparent to his followers. It was this spirit which actuated the two men in the log cabin as it has actuated thousands in the radical movements of the world. The pity of it all is that these leaders and so called intellectuals are not dishonest. They actually believe that their particular form of delusion is the spirit that is to save the world. The average radical of today is but a throw back to the priest and medicine man of prehistoric times. It is the spirit of self justification we might almost say self deification of those who assume leader ship of the masses that lies at the bottom of working class factions and the creeds of christiandom.

This is not the fault of economic science or of a science of sociology. The terms of these sciences are as well defined as any other descriptive or experimental science. In the realm of sociology and economics we are dealing with human interests and human affairs, and our concept of what constitutes our interest differs with temperament as well as economic conditions. That is the reason it is physically and socially impossible to unite the masses of mankind upon any set of principles no matter how well founded they may be in the facts of life.

The best brains in the working class differ according to temperament and will be followed by those who love and opposed by those who hate any given temperament regardless of the principle involved. It has been said that Jesse James had as many admirers in the United States as Billy Sunday. That does not mean that people are either religious fanatics or criminals; it simply proves that they follow those who are agressive according to temperament. The mass follows men. They do not recognize a principle as big as an elephant. To the crowd it is not truth, expedience, or mutual aid that determines conduct, but rather the attitude of their chiefs. ''I am for Paul, I am for Apollos, I am for Wilson, for Roosevelt, for Debs, for Haywood'' or for who not. The sheep follow the wethers. Economic circumstances cause power to gravitate in the direction of certain individuals and the masses to follow economically determiner leaders or newspapers until hunger exposes both leaders and papers as mere creatures of circumstance.

Even as the two friends in the cabin who loved and trusted one another could not agree upon so fundamental an issue as what constituted the working class so the great mass of mankind with all their different phases of mentality due to heredity and environment can not be expected to ever co-operate to any great extent except they be forced to do so by a stong central authority which recognizes the economic necessity for such co-operation. But I am digressing from the story.

Another source of continual controversy between these two friends was the question whether a worker had any interest in the national life of the land of his birth or adoption. I call attention to this because it is also a question which agitates the minds of all radicals and constitutes the blind rock upon which many a socialist ship has stranded. On this question they were agreed consciously and yet subconsciously they were miles apart.

They both derided the sentiment of patriotism as being a jingoistic fanatcism and in the very next breath Rudolph would be telling Collins that the United States had no such plains and woods as Russia, or that the life of the individual in the realm of the Czar was far richer in color and experience than that of the average American. To which Collins would reply with a recital of Russian Pogroms and the horrors of Siberia, the ferocity of the wolves and the illiteracy of the people, and as many other upleasant things as his fertile brain could think of. And Rudolph would return to the assault with a description of American egotism claiming that the world over, the very name American was a synonymn for ''wind bag.'' He would then point out that Americans as such were absolutely unorganizable for any real social betterment; that they labored under the same delusions of freedom and democracy as their forefathers of a hundred years ago. Thus unconsciously each sung the praises of their native land from beyond the din of their wordy internationalism re-echoed the words of Scott ''Breathes there the man with soul so dead, who never to himself has said 'this is my own my native land.''' Even as the silver horde goes back to the waters of its nativity, so these men were each defending and idealizing the land of their birth.

Their internationalism was intellectually sincere. Our intellect however is a growth of later years. Man has struggled on and up thru the countless pre-intellectual ages and carries within his brain the impressions of these ages. They have become an integral part of his subconscious being. They are facts of emotion which the play of intellect may obscure but can never eradicate and which when the proper irritation is applied will triumph over the intellect as the tidal wave will overflow the low land.

Radical education had made these men internationalists, yet basically they were tied as all men are tied by their heartstrings to the soil of their birth. If Rudolph had been possessed of the power he would have Russianized (not Czarized) America. And yet in him this instinct was not the strongest. He was a Jew and the Jew has for ages been a wanderer without a land which he might claim as his own. Yet he was born in Russia, the steppes of Russia were in his blood, slavic speech was music to his ears. Enough of Russia had entered his being to make him a Russian.

If all this was ture of Rudolph it was doubly ture of Collins, although both would have gone to the stake or the gallows defending their internationalism under certain conditions, yet under others Collins would have proven American ready to Americanize (not capitalize) the world.

Thus it was that they argued without end alternately accusing the other of dullness or wilful obstinacy. Both trying to explain away the ties by which they were bound to their natal soil, ties which are stronger than all human philosophies and which make it possible for radicals of all nations to kill each other in international wars.

It was during one of these seances of debate held over their dishwashing that Jack, mud bespattered and weary from his trip softly opened the door and stood listening. Collins was the first to see him. ''God Almighty'' he exclaimed, ''see what the cat dragged in.''

Missionaries and Muslin

We are indebted to the Rev. Howard A Musser, a returned missionary from India, for supplying the "missing link" between 20th century Christianity and foreign trade. This link is the missionary. Not that he has been missing, he's been very much on the job, but a lot of "good" people have missed him in their calculations of social phenomena.

"The business interests of the United States could well afford to pay for the evangelinzing of the whole world. The large export business of the Standard Oil, Singer Sewing Machine, Ford Motor Car and Victrola Talking Machine are due directly to the foreign missionaries who introduce these things to the natives. When the missionaries civilize a savage they are exploiting the muslin and woolen industries and open up a new field of trade."

The above candid acknowledgement of the part which the missionary plays as a tout for capitalism were made by the Reverend Musser at Toledo during the Methodist centenary in Toledo in March last. That the business interests of the U. S. fully realize the value of the missionary as a whipper-up or foreign trade is seen in the development of the Inter-Church World Movement which has the backing of America's greatest financial and industrial corporations and which is now raising millions for church estension work — and trade.

"Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel", feed my sheep", were the Master's injunctions to his desciples. The Reverend Musser has spent some months or years in India ostensibly preaching the gospel of the Carpenter of Nazareth. He, acknowledges that the world's financial monarchs have reaped a harvest thru his activities. He more than approves of his contribution to their gains — he bids for more opportunities in which the gospel of Christ may be perverted to such ends. We are glad to read his acknowledgement of the ends which the Christian Church of the 20th century serves in the present capitalistic scheme.

INDIA.

Can one think of India without tears? Dare one think of a nation outraged, subjugated, despoiled as India has been and is — and not resent with all his powers the schemes and lies and intrignes and blood dripping outrages by which it has been accomplished—and call himself a man or a Christian? A nation of starving millions, where serfdom, slavery and oppression are the portion of the disinherited natives who, under the British yoke cry in alike to the throne of England and of God in vain!

Yes, it is true the native has given up his goatskin loincloth for a muslin shirt. The cotton mills are spinning the faste for that. He has probably learned the "divine" injunction "servants be obiedient to your masters". Great accomplishments! But what has he lost? He has lost everything. And what is more he is finding it out. India just now, is England's greatest problem. For India is in revolt, in revolt against the conditions which capitalism with the aid of the Reverend Mussers in saintly garb, preaching the gospel of salvation thru capitalism have brought upon him. The Indian is learning that while saving his soul according to this gospel, he has lost all that makes life worth living. The Indian is learning that the divinest thing on earth is liberty, that the most un-Godly sin is the sin of slavery. They are going to wipe out the stain. They are going to wipe it out in spite of the English, the Mussers and the Church.

And if [illegible] is a God up there — or anywhere who knows his business he'll be with the Indian.

When the Inter-Church World Movement was recently launched at Toledo letters were sent out to business men of the city inviting them to a luncheon where the plans of the Movement were to be discussed. We quote one paragraph from these letters as published in the Toledo News-Bee.

"The appeal presented is big because its mission is great and its organization soundly built on business lines. It means much to the world generally right now—and considerably more to business interests".

Pass the collection plate!

When the Inter-Church World Movement has succeeded in getting every savage into a shoddy muslin shirt (at 60c a yard) the following lines may aptly portray the feelings of an angry God with a sinful Church.

THE VOICE OF GOD.

I have come and the world shall be shaken like a reed at the touch of my rod,
And the kingdom of time shall awaken to the voice and the summons of God.
No more through the din of the ages shall warnings and chidings divine
From the lips of my prophets and sages be trampled like pearls before swine.
Ye have stolen my lands and my cattle; ye have kept back from labor its meed;
Ye have challenged the outcast to battle, when they pled at your feet in their need.
And when clamors of hunger grew louder, and the multitudes prayed to be fed,
Ye have answered with prisons or powder the cries of your brothers for bread.
I turn from your altars and arches and the mocking of steeples and domes,
To join in the long, weary marches of the ones ye have robbed of their homes.
I share in the sorrows and crosses of the naked and hungry and cold,
And dearer to me are their losses than your gains and your idols of gold
For the prayers of the poor have ascended to be written like lightnings on high,
And the wails of your captives have blended with the bolts that must leap from the sky.
The thrones of your kings shall be shattered and the prisoner and serf shall go free;
I will harvest from seed that I scattered on the borders of blue
Gallilee;
For I come not alone and a stranger; lo my reapers will sing through the night.
Till the star that stood over the manger shall cover the world with its light.

Barbarism.
CHAPTER SEVEN.
Barbarism.
LOWER AGE.

The epoch of barbarism, like that of savagery, is divided into three well definited ages, Lower, Middle and Upper.

The lower age of barbarism begins with the discovery of the art of pottery-making.

Pottery—making evidently grew out of the art of weaving as evidenced in the more primitive pottery found in the ruins of the Cliff Dwellers of Messa Verde and also in the ruins of the ancient Pueblos. Here pots are found that plainly show the weave of the basket work in the clay. Certain Indian tribes at the present time weave water-tight baskets, and smear them with mud for cooking purposes. This practice undoubtedly led to the discovery of the art of firing clay.

The economic need for the invention of pottery is to be found in the fact that when the race wandered away from the streams it became necessary to have some means whereby water could be carried.

The development of pottery, like the development of all other utilities, varied with topographic and climatic conditions, as for example the Eskimo never developed basket—weaving or pottery making owing to the absence of the raw material necessary to these arts.

Among other reasons for the development of the art of pottery may be mentioned the need for vessels in which to preserve fruits, fats, oils and other liquid and semi—liquid food.

It is probable that the art of making wine developed in this age. Food, and especially fruit, being kept in earthen vessels would naturally ferment, producing alcohol. Pots and wine, wine and pots, the hieroglyphics found on the monuments of ancient times show that the arts of making wine and pots are intimately interwoven.

The tools of this age were mostly of polished stone as distinguished from the rough unpolished stone of former ages. Implements of native copper shaped by beating, are also found. Bone was likewise used as a raw material for tools, such as spear heads and fish-hooks, awls and needles.

Hammers, axes, cutting and fleshing tools, spears and rude cooking utensils are the foremost tools of this age. An illustration of the materialist conception of history may be found in the fact that a man could not have a house of hewn wood until he had an axe. Similarily sewn garments depended upon the needle and the awl.

The needle and the awl made possible the kyac of sewn skins as a means of water transportation. Primitive boats of hewn timbers were also used. Land transportation was still dependent upon women as beats of burden.

It was during this age that primitive husbandry developed. Grains and a few garden vegetables were planted and tended, by the women. Man had to be enslaved before he would learn to work.

Village life is the natural outgrowth of the advent of agriculture. Before the beginning of agriculture man was a nomadic wanderer, here today and gone tomorrow, but with the planting of seed it became necessary for him to locate in that vicinity and as the products of agriculture had to be stored a permanent location became necessary, which due to the group character of society naturally resulted in the formation of a village.

Village life influenced industrial development, tanning, weaving and pottery-making, in addition to agriculture. These new industrial developments enabled man to inhabit colder, and otherwise uninhabitable climates.

Village life modified the family organization of the gens, group marriage giving way to the pairing family.

It was during the age of Lower Barbarism that village life became a permanent institution, laying the foundation for towns and cities. With the development of village life naturally developed the institution of barter and trade. This in turn caused the crude picture writing of savagery to develop into hieroglyphics which were more adaptable to the conveying of information.

The lower age of barbarism was much shorter in duration than any previous age and ended with the domestication of animals.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE FAMILY.

1. THE CONSANGUINE FAMILY.
   Peculiar to the epoch of Savagery.
2. THE PUNALUAN FAMILY.
   Peculiar to the epoch of Barbarism.
   - (A) The syndyasmian Family
   - (B.) The Patriarchial Family.
3. THE MONOGAMIAN FAMILY.
   Peculiar to the epoch of civilization.

The Consanguine family had its beginning in promiscuous intercourse and evolved to a system of group marriage based upon blood relationship.

The Punaluan Family was a further development of the Consagnine family, and was a group family organized upon the basis of sex, having as its chief characteristic, female supremacy and descent, and the Punaluan custom of organization into gens which barred the cohabitation of the first of kin.

Between the Punaluan family and the Monogamian Family two other family systems appear, the Syndyasmian and the Patriarchal Families. These two families are but further evolutions of the Punaluan family towards the monogamic family of civilization.

The Syndyasmian Family appeared in the lower status of barbarism and marks the first development of the pairing family, being in reality a group of pairing families living together in a communal household. At this stage of development of the family, the family was to weak to stand alone, hence the custom of several pairing families to co-operate in maintaining a communal home. The custom which led the more advanced barbarian to recognize one among his numerous wives as his principal wife, led in time to the practice of pairing with the increased certainty of the paternity of the offspring.

Out of this group of pairing families known as the Syndyasmian family evolved the Patriarchal Family, with a complete change from female supremacy and descent to male supremacy and descent.)

The change from female to male supremacy and descent while an economic necessity from the standpoint of property relations was a disastrous one for woman. Her children were transferred from her own gens to that of her husband and at her marriage she forfeited rights for which she received no equivalent, and she stood alone in the household of her husband. Male supremacy and descent weakened the influence of the maternal bond and was a powerful factor in lowering the position of women.

Out of the Patriarchal Family evolved the Monogamic Family of civilization.

*) Genesis 9:20 tells us that Noah survived the flood with his thirst intact.

) "When descent was in the female line, the gens possessed the following among other characteristics: 1. Marriage within the gens asw prohibited, thus placing children in a different gen from that of their reputed father. 2. Property and the office of chief were hereditary in the gens; thus excluding children from inheriting the property or succeeding to the office of their reputed father. This state of things would continue until a motive arose sufficiently general and commanding to establish the injustice of this exclusion in the face of their changed conditions. The natural remedy was a change of descent from the female line to the male. All that was needed to effect the change was an adequate motive. After domestic animals began to be reared in flocks and herds, becoming thereby a source of subsistence as well as objects of individual property, and after tillage had led to the ownership of houses and lands in severalty, an antagonism would be certain to rise against the prevailing form of gentile inheritance because it excluded the owner's children, whose paternity was becoming more more assured, and gave his property to his gentile kindred. A contest for a new rule of inheritance, shared in by fathers and their children, would furnish a motive sufficiently powerful to effect the change. With property accumulating in masses and assuming permanent forms and with an increased proportion of it held by individual ownership, descent in the female line was certain of overthrow and the substitution of the male line equally assured." The Wages of Scabbery

"The wages of sin is death". The moral injunction contained in the biblical quotation may with equal certitude be applied to that offscouring of capitalism, the scab, who attempts to take the job of strinking workingmen in highly developed industry.

Reports of many fatalities in the ranks of the scab would—be enginemen and switchmen who left their student's classes at Yale and other bourgeois calleges are reaching the public press. At the present time eight fatalities and serious accidents including the loss of arms and legs have ben recorded. How many cases of others injured thru inexperience in the danger of this work will be recorded only time will tell.

The hazards of railroad work are high and like most such work no adequate compensation is made for the risks to life and limb incident thereto.

One might judge by the alricity with which our "exclusive" colleges rose to the occassion in furnishing scabs during this strike that they were schools for strike breakers rather than schools for citizenship and culture. American colleges are coming more and more under the control and dependence upon the good will and endowments of the capitalist class. It is perfectly in keeping with the sources of their incomes that they should seek to cultivate the master class psychology in the student mind, thus creating a class of workers technically equipped to carry on industry and mentally gagged and bridled to do it in the interests of the master class who have made their "education" possible.

The colleges, like the public school have become the institutions of capitalism. The college scabs reflect the brand of education therein taught.

Debs and Socialist Unity

"Unity of Socialist elements in the United States" has become the hobby-horse with which some Socialist-partyites are parading in order to lure some stray comrades back into the folds of that organization. Some of these persons are well meaning. But they do not understand the fundamental differences between Lenin and Scheidemann, (if we may express principles in names of those who represent them). But the greater number of them feel an uncontrollable longing for the nickels and dimes of the tens of thousands of members, that the late executive committee of the late Socialist Party has thrown out. The deep love of these right-wingers for the Non-Partisan League and the coming Labor Party was prevented from ending in a happy marriage by the lefts, and with a temper, only inspired by unsatisfied love, they concocted a scheme to get rid of the obstacle. So they expelled the left wing, nearly half the party and half of the half that was left them quit in disgust. But now other obstacles prevent the final consumation of the marriage, so these politicians realize, first, that they have robbed their party of the only excuse it had for posing as a revolutionary party by throwing out the revolutionists, and second they have, and this is something to be still more regreted, lost countless nickels and dimes which otherwise would have probably found their way into their till.

We neither have time, nor do we desire to here investigate deeper into the real cause of the unity move. Suffice it to say that in the desire to bring about unity they hit upon the scheme to induce Eugene V. Debs to accept the nomination for president from the Socialist Party, as undesirable as his candidacy may have been to them otherwise. And Debs, noble heart, bent down by the knowledge of the feud within the ranks of the socialists, accepts, and so unconsciously helps to play the game of the scheming gents in the Socialist Party.

Without going into the question deeply by writing a necessarily extensive treatise on the fundamentals of communism there might be said just this about the question of unity:

We would advice Debs to read the arguments filed by Mr. Stedman in behalf of the Socialist Party in the court action of that party in Detroit, Mich. We would further advice him to read the transcript of the Albany "trial."

Should the communists unite with Stedman, who denounces them in a capitalist court as enemies of capitalist society, in order to induce that court to take property, bought and paid for by the defendants, away from them and turn it over to the law abiding Socialist Party?

Or shall the communists unite with Mr. Hilquit who assured the sub-committee of the Assembly in Albany that the socialist surely would shoulder a gun and fight for "their" country should the Bolshevists "attack" it?

Or should the communists form a happy union with Mr. Waldman, who swore to the conviction, that he would by all means prefer the capitalist constitution of the capitalist ridden state of New York to the dictatorship of the working class as desired by the Bolshevists?

Or should the communists unite with Mr. Berger, whose hatred for them is only exceeded by his love for capitalism, and compared to whom even Scheideman is a raving "radical"?

Now all these persons and their acts are mere incidents that can not determine the possibility or advisability of unity. These incidents, however, show us the fundamental differences in the conception of these "Socialists" and the communists. These differences prove conclusively that there can be no unity between the two, except the communists betray the working class whose advanceguard they are, or these "Socialists" desert the capitalist" class whose rear guard they are. One is as impossible as the other without one of the two giving up its principles and accepting the principles of the other. And Debs surely would not want the communists to desert the working class in order to strengthen the rearguard of capitalism!

What does unity mean?

When is unity desirable?

For many years the fight between the right and the left in the German Social Democratic Party was carried on. The split was always avoided with the merely sentimental plea for unity. Unity of organization was thus preserved.

But did the German working class profit by that unity?

It did not!

On the historical 4th of August, 1914, the left was overwhelmed by the right and, for a moment at least, aquiesced in the betrayal of the German working class by the Social Democratic Party. And when at last the left realized the impossibility of unity of organization when unity of purpose is lacking, and when they finally broke away, they had to do it at a time when their chances for organization were below zero on account of the conditions created by the war. And in the November days of 1918 the left was too weak to send the Scheidemanns after their master Whilhelm into exile. The unity of organization so long preserved in Germany, then proved a destriment to the revolutionary power of the workers. The right wing of Scheidemann and Noske assassinated the left of Luxemburg and Liebknecht with the power that the Scheidemanns could never have gotten without the help of the Luxemburgs and Liebknechts during the long period of unity.

Should we learn from history, or should we close our eyes to it for the sweet sounds of a sentimental plea?

Should the communists of America unite with the Scheidemanns here merely on a sentimental plea for unity?

They cannot!

They will not!

The day will come when capitalism in this country will call upon its rearguard, the pettit bourgeois Socialist Party, to save the day for capitalism, just like the German capitalists called upon the German Social-Democratic Party there for that purpose. On that day, the first day of the revolution, the communists in this country will be faced by the daggers and bayonets of the Stedman Scheidemanns. The communists will not unite and wait until they are assassinated by these friends of capitalism in the name of law and order, capitalist law and order. No, the communists of America are on their guard so they may not be caught napping.

Socialist unity means more than some 100 000 people paying dues into the same treasury.

Revolutionary socialist unity means more than some 100.000 workers voting for one and the same man for president, even if that man happens to be such a lovable and incorruptible Socialists as Eugene V. Debs.

Eugene V. Debs as the presidential candidate of the Socialist Party is not acceptable in that capacity to the communists, no matter how acceptable he would be as a member of the communist organization.

Revolutionary Socialist unity must be a unity of action obtainable only by a unity of purpose.

The purpose of the communist movement in the United States and the world over is to replace the capitalist state by a proletarian dictatorship, excercised through workers' councils. And the purpose of this dictatorship is the creation of a free communist society, thus abolishing the State.

A unity upon that program is not only desirable but necessary. Such unity, however, cannot be accomplished by the Socialist Party and the communists coming together. It can only be accomplished if the revolutionary workers gather around the banners of communism. They must leave the Socialist Party and its leaders because those leaders are misleading the working class.

For a unity under the banner of communism we are glad to join hands with Eugene V. Debs. But the first provision is that Debs himself leave the Scheidemanns and join the real forces of the proletarian revolution, the communist movement of America.

Manifesto on Mexican War

Mexico City, April 22. (By mail). The Communist Party of Mexico has issued a manifesto to the Mexican workers, calling on them to keep out of the present civil war and center their energies on the work of industrial organization instead of permitting themselves to be made the tools of either of the rival sets of politicians.

The manifesto says among other things:

"This revolution is not a Social Revolution.

"This is not our fight.

"This rebellin is not a rebellion of the proletariat against the bourgeoisie, of the masses against the masters, of the slaves against the slave-drivers.

"The bloody butchery that is beginning, arises because one coterie of politicians is trying to oust the other from official position.

"Between the two we have no choice, altho we observe with interest that American imperialism is backing one against the other. American money is behind the Sonora aggregation, using it as a tool with which to make intervention seem necessary to the American people, as an accelerator to increase public opinion north of the Rio Grande in favor of ennexation."

The manifesto says that the party would prefer to see the revolution fail for it would mean a continuation of individual existence for Mexico a while longer, and the party's work can be conducted with less persecution under Mexican officials than under Americans. However, it predicts the success of the uprising and the eventual annexation of part or all of Mexico to the United States It says that the Communists would certainly not fight for such a revolution which is backed by Wall Street and on the other hand, it would be futile to fight against it.

"Our business, under these circumstances and unless conditions change decidedly", continues the manifesto, "is to keep out of the fight. If an opportunity for more effective action in another way, offers itself and we reconsider this decision, we will advise all comrades accordingly. But viewed in the light of Scientific Communism, after numerous consultations and after careful reference to the conduct of Communist leaders in other and similar crises, this is our opinion today.

"We must bow to the inevitable. Since we cannot much longer continue the class struggle under Mexican rule, with its lesser restrictions, we must prepare to continue it under American rule. We must organize to fight a fiercer foe — to resist a more powerful master!"

In anticipation of American rule, sooner or later, all meetings of Communist locals will be discontinued, and the party will get ready to work underground if it becomes necessary. Members are advised to join industrial unions where they exist, to organize them where none exist, and to center their energies on building up industrial unions that will cover the country. The development of the Mexican I. W. W. will be the sole work of the Communists henceforth, and they will prepare for the time when, in conjunction with American workers, they can overthrow the capitalism that will dominate both countries.

Again warning the workers to refuse to fight, and to use their energies in industrial organizations, the manifesto says:

"We will not buck our heads against a stone wall. We will not sacrifice lives, blood and energy where nothing is to be gained. We will save them for more useful purposes.

"WORKERS OF MEXICO, THIS IS NOT YOUR REVOLUTION! KEEP OUT OF IT!

"AS CANNON FODDER, YOU WILL DO NO GOOD BUT WILL ONLY WEAKEN YOUR CLASS. WE WANT LIVE ORGANIZERS, NOT DEAD AND AND WOUNDED SOLDIERS !

"DON'T FIGHT! DON'T MOURN! ORGANIZE!"

The address of the Communist Party of Mexico is P. O. Box 985, Mexico City, D. F., Mexico.

SOME DAY

Some day, and the world will be,
Glad and happy and care free;
Clouds that darken peaceful ways,
And in their path leave doubt and haze;
Will some day pass above so high,
That we'll not know they are nigh;
When men will not their kinsmen slay,
Then there'll be peace and joy, some day.

Some day, when Time has clear'd the stream,
In purer view we'll see the gleam
Of Love that permeates our tasks,
And cast aside the world's false masks,
That have to us disaster brought,
And finds a world that has been caught
In Time's Drag Net; men will pray,
And sing the songs of Right, some day.

Some day, the rightousness of Right,
Will clear the vision and the sght;
A wayward world will then behold,
More precious gifts, than gifts of gold;
A new mankind with new ideals,
Environments that fair play wields;
Hand in hand in the world's new way,
The Pow'r of Right, will rule, some day.

LONDON.—The workers of Poland, stirred to the depths by the last German revolution, are moving more and more rapidly towards a Communist regime, in which their present leaders all the way from Gen. Pilsudski to Socialist party officials will be swept away. This assertion is made by the Vienna correspondent of The London Daily Herald, in an important account of the Polish reaction to the German revolution, which has not been described in the press dispatches.

"How closely the destiny of the Polish and German proletariat is knit together was illustrated by the spontaneous strikes which broke forth throughout Poland, which were reinforced by peasants' unrest, and which shook the Polish imperialist structure to its roots," says the account.

"As soon as news of the German revolutionary uprising penetrated the Near East, all Galicia was plunged in a general railway strike, which was reinforced by threatening movements among the enslaved peasantry, and by mass hunger demonstrations among the village proletariat. The strike spread swiftly, and appeared within two days in Congress Poland, where transport was placed at a complete standstill. In Warsaw, the metal workers laid down their tools. This act was followed by the proclamation of the general strike throughout Poland.

"The immediate issue of the strike was to prevent the realization of the government's announced intention to militarize all public utilities, railways, etc. That is, the reactionary Warsaw regime was about to introduce forced labor under military control through Poland."

The Polish Socialist party, which is conservative, prevented the calling of the revolutionary strike, and for the fifth time forestalled the inevitable Polish revolution, says the correspondent "Meanwhile the government, at the first rumor of the strike, had withdrawn the militarization order.

These tactics or the part of the Socialist party have driven the workers far to the left into the Communist party.

I have a lingering suspicion that the financiers of the United States are not at all optimistic as to collections on their war loans to "our noble Allies." In fact, their hope of reaping millions in interest has gone glimmering, with no prospect of even recovering the principal. The loans made by the government to its European allies might just as well be credited to war expense and let it go at that. France is practically bankrupt and Italy is a close second. Repudiation by Great Britain seems to be the only way out of her dilemma, and the collection of the indemnity imposed upon Germany is an evanescent dream, for her industrial paralysis precludes all possibility of liquidation. So far as the government is concerned, its losses might be recouped by increased taxation, but there is a limit to that. Taxes are already so burdensome that it may be dangerous to augment them, for even the American worm may turn, and if he should—Bolsheviki. The world war has certainly proved a boomerang to the bourgeoisie throughout the world, and especially to the gentry of that persuasion in the U. S. A.

The growing restlessness of the tillers of the soil is causing considerable alarm among the politicians at Washington. It seems that one of them slightingly applied the term "Bolshevik" to the farmers when some agricultural complaints were bein considered by a committee, and the news has traveled like a prairie fire throughout the agricultural sections. It was a similar sneer at the food producers that caused the revolt in North Dakota, which resulted in the organization of the Non Partisan League. A committee of farmers was told by a drunken member of the Dakota Legislature to go home and slop their hogs. They went, all right, but, instead of following the advice of the 'soused' politician, they formed a political organization that put the politicians of that State out of business. During the past few years the farmer has changed from a patient, thoughtess plodder, apparently satisfied with his lot, to an inquirer as to his relation to industry at large. He doesn't think it fair for the workers in other industries to be guaranteed, rain or shine, and approximately fixed reward for their labor, while he is compelled to gamble with the weather and accept whatever prices for his product the middlemen may exact. He also wants to know where he comes in on the eight-hour day which is enticing agricultural workers into other lines of industry. That these inquiries [illegible] er is rightfully deserving of as much consideration as other workers. The fact that his hitherto sluggish mind is now beginning to work along the line of inquiry is a hopeful sign. Of course there is no hope for him until the agricultural industry is socialized through the common ownership of land, and he can solve the problem whenever he wants to. Socialism will do the job.

This man Palmer, who by some quirk of the fates was made Attorney General of the United States, cannot be considered other than an unmitigated ass—or, perhaps, he is just plain "nuts". At regular intervals he announces the discovery of a plot to murder prominent federal officials or start a revolution or something. Until lately the public awaited with bated breath the fulfillment of his dire prophecies. No person with a modicum of brains now pays the slightest attention to his maunderings. Even the capitalist press poke fun at his statements. And this mental lightweight seriously sought to be a candidate for President! He belongs in a sanitarium.

It seems that editorial writers of the daily press have become so hardened to outraging truth that they have lost all sense of shame. For persistent lying never in all history has their moral obliquity been equaled. There is an intelectual prostitute on the editorial staff of the Cleveland Press who is entitled to decorations for shameless and brazen perversion of the truth. In a late issue of that exponent of bourgeois hypocrisy the attention of its readers is called to the fact that the Soviet Government of Russia has an army of 2,000,000 men notwithstanding its denunciation of militarism, and that the evident intend is to use this army in forcing contignous European nations to adopt the Soviet form of government. The writer knows well that the Soviet Government was forced to raise this army to protect itself from the counter revolutionists, who were aided in every possible way by the Allies. This information is common property among enlightened people. Then why, you ask, does this paper persist in disseminating such glaring falsehoods? The answer is easy. It knows that the majority of its readers are boneheads who have never sought the truth, and that if a few did make this unusual mental effort they forgot all about it in a few hours. If the workers can be induced to cultivate their mental faculties to the degree that they will be able to remember the happenings of months instead of hours the lying propaganda of the bourgeois press will fall of its own weight.

"The Mediumship of Farmer Riley".
By SYDNEY FLOWER, LL. D.

This is a book of sixty large magazine pages, in which is related in detail the observations of the author during a two weeks' stay at the home of the medium, James Wesley Riley, better known as "Farmer Riley," near Marcellus, Mich. If you have ever asked youreslf the question, "Does man live beyond the grave?" a perusal of this book may perhaps assist you in the formulation of an intelligent answer. The book is as interesting as a romance. In his investigations Mr. Flower rigidly adheres to a program which absolutely precludes all possibility of physical agency in the production of the manifestations.

Communist Labor Party is Legal, Says Secretary Wilson

Rules cannot deport aliens who hold membership

"The belief in, teaching and advocacy of the class struggle, mass action, the conquest of political power, the dictatorship of the proletariat, socialism, communism, the one big union, shop committees, shop stewards and other social, industrial, economic and political changes mentioned in the Communist Labor party platform and program, however reprehensible these things may be to the minds of any or all of our people, do not bring the organization within the purview of the act, as long as it does not propose to use force or violence to accomplish the purpose."

With these words Secretary of Labor Wilson, on May 5th ruled that the Communist Labor Party is a legal political party and that membership in it of aliens does not constitute sufficient grounds for deportation.

In ordering cancellation of a warrant under which Carl Miller, a German, was held because of such membership, the secretary declared that, while extracts from the organization's platform indicated an extremely radical objective there was no evidence of intention to use force or violence toward organized government.

Hundreds of members of the Communist Labor Party have been indicted and charged with violations of various states' criminal syndicalism laws on the score of carrying on party activities. Since the raids of early January, when these sleuths of the Department of Justice swooped down in a nation wide raid netting thousands of Communists and Communist Laborites, the exact status of the Communist Labor party was in doubt. A previous ruling by the Secretary of Labor practically outlawed the Communist Party which, with the Communist Labor Party developed out of a split in the ranks of the Socialist Party at Chicago last September. A number of members of the Communist Party have been deported merely on the grounds of their membership, while many more are held under indictments on like charges.

Department of Justice disapproves of Secretary's ruling.

It is no secret that the Department of Justice and the Secretary of Labor have long been at outs regarding the status of the "reds" of various hue. Attorney General Palmer has acted upon the assumption that, even, the pinkest red who dared to mention the "third international", "mass action" and like revolutionary phrases, was fit only for prison or deportation and has conducted systematic raids upon homes, halls and meetings of workers. The trials of alleged Communists at Boston recently brought out some astonishing confessions from agents of the Department which showed that they sought to bring about the causes which led to the arrests of the revolutionists. The prediction that Palmer had overreached himself in his wild ravings against the radicals seems to be a now well established fact.

The department of justice frankly deplored the labor secretary's decision. Assistant Attorney General Garvan, in charge or raids on radical elements, asserting that because of it all undesirable aliens could enter the folds of the Communist Labor party and be free from government interference.

Although Mr. Wilson declared examination of their platforms showed "some very substantial differences" between the Communist and the Communist Labor parties, Mr. Garvan asserted that concerning principles they were "absolutely the same," and predicted that members of the Communist party, now outlawed, would affiliate with the Communist Labor party to evade deportation proceedings.

"The tactics of the Communist party in Russia," Mr. Wilson said, "can have no bearing upon the Communist Labor party in the United States except in so far as those tactics are accepted or adopted by the Communist Labor party; nor can the statements made by prominent members of the party be accepted as the expressions of the organization unless the party by its own action adopts the statements.

Battle on for Endorsement of 3-rd International

By Evelyn Sharp
London Correspondent
THE FEDERATED PRESS

LONDON.—The battle of the Internationale is still raging in the British movement. The Independent Labor Party at its Eastern Conference, decided definitely to leave the Second International, and equally definitely not join the Third. Instead the I. L. P. is urging the Swiss Party to call as soon as possible a conference to discuss the reconstitution of the International "with a definitely Socialist objective." Also it decided to get into touch with Moscow.

Since the conference the debate has been shifted to the Labor Press—particularly to the columns of the Daily Herald. Arthur Henderson, Secretary of the Labour Party, has come forward to defend the Second International and to attack the Third. The Second, he maintains, is still alive; it has done valuable work; it is "convened on no narrow doctrinaire basis but in consonance with the principle of working class solidarity." The Third on the other hand is doctrinaire and exclusive and insists on tactics which can only lead, as in Hungary, to a dictatorship of reaction. With Henderson is J. Ramsay Mac-Donald.

To Henderson, Clifford Allen, the leader of the younger members of the I. L. P. replies in an open letter in the Daily Herald that the Second International has failed because it held pre-war ideas, that the big fact, which Henderson cannot ignore, is that Russia, Italy, France, United States, the German Independents and a number of smaller countries have all left it. "Without these parties it cannot be revived," he says.

"Therefore," he pleads, "we have to create new International machinery." And the first step to that must be to get into touch with Moscow.

"I beg you," he writes, "you and your colleagues—go to Russia, and, with the full facts in your possession come back and then summon the conference which shall consider the new International."

The Daily Herald itself supports the plan for the Swiss Conference. There are, it says, two views held of the Third International:

1. That it claims to impose the method as well as the objective of the revolution on its adherents; and

2. That it leaves open the choice of method, but demands an overwhelming purpose to take the quickest way to the overthrow of capitalism. We accept the latter interpretation on the strength of Lenin's own personal assurance. The purpose of the Swiss Conference should be to remove all doubt as to the Moscow programme; and thereafter if our interpretation is right, to affiliate with Moscow; if our interpretation is wrong, to set up on Internationale on the basis of the formula of "the overthrow of capitalism in the quickest possible way, "leaving the choice of method to the constituent parties."

CHRISTIANA—That trade relations between Norway and Russia are soon to be resumed is indicated by the report of Mr. Holvold, president of the Kirkenals Cooperative Society, who has just visited Northern Russian and the Murmansk district. He has reported that complete order exists in these parts and that therefore "external conditions constitute no barrier to the resumption of trade relations between the two countries and that it is to the greatest interest for both parties that they should be resumed." He pointed out that Russia would provide a market for the fisheries of Norway.

Labor's Share of Products Less Than Before War

— By Paul Hann, —

Staff Correspondent,
The Federated Press.

WASHINGTON—Railroad labor has taken the offensive in the hearings at Washington and denied flatly that wage increase granted since 1917 are in any degree responsible for high prices.

Speaking in the name of seventeen different unions of railroad workers, W. Jett Lauck opens the issue with the following flat-footed statement:

"A careful analysis of the data bearing on the causes of high prices and the relation of cost of production to prices leads to the following specific conclusions:

"1. Profiteering—by which is meant the exaction of porfits greatly in excess of pre-war profits on the part of producers, middlemen and retailers—is a fundamental cause of the high prices of practically all commodities.

"2. Increased wages to labor are in no way responsible for increased prices."

Lauck is an economist of many years' training. He served as Secretary for the National War Labor Board under former President Taft, Frank P. Walsh and Basil M. Manly. His charge that "wage advances have been an effect of price advances, not a cause, is supported by an array of facts which employers strive to ignore but cannot refute.

Following up his written indictment of the profiteer as the most conspicuous curse of modern society, Lauck took the witness stand late last week for cross-examination by railroad attorneys and members of the wage board.

"As a result of the war," says this expert, "labor as a class is now worse off than it was before the war. Almost without exception, a day's wages buys less than it did in 1912 to 1914. In other words, in the distribution of the income of the country labor is receiving a smaller proportion than it did before the war, while the capital—in the form of profits, interest and rent — is receiving a very much larger proportion."

Taking the profits listed by such authorities as Moody's and Poor's, Lauck cites the net income on capital earned during the camparative years 1912 to 1918 by a typical group of metal, clothing, food, fuel, light, housing and miscellaneus corporations, and then makes the following comment:

"The outstanding fact is simply stated. The corporations listed earned during the years 1916—1918 an average income of nearly $1.250.000.000 a year, or nearly 24 per cent of their capital stock. This appears to be nearly three times the average for the pre war years 1912—1914, and the figures for production show conclusively that these increased profits were not due to increased production. In a large measure they were due to the fact that the corporations took a larger proportion of every dollar spent by the consumer."

The corporations cite in Lauck's list earned about one-sixth of the total corporate income of the United States, and that fact supports his contention that if the other corporations did as well then the combined corporations of the land scooped up about $4.800.000 more per year during the war then they previously earned per year

Trade Unionism, Industrial Unionism and Workers' Committees

(ISSUED BY THE BUREAU OF THE THIRD INTERNATIONAL.)

1.—Unions are necessary organizations in the economic struggle of the workers against their employers, since, in spite of their limitations, the unions are means for resisting and often improving the most inhuman conditions of labor. Nor are the unions transitory in character, since they can particularly as industrial unions become active means of revolutionary struggle, and a factor in the Communist reconstruction of society.

2.—The Trades Unions persisting in the defensive strugle against Capitalism do not materially improve conditions. The rise of wages is, in general, exceeded by the rise of prices, while the policy of compromise, wage agreements and industrial peace weakens the fighting spirit of the workers.

3.—The Trades Unions arose during the epoch of small industry, with its consequent division of the workers into crafts or trades. The artisan conception prevailed that a worker's craft or skill was a form of property, developing a property and petty bourgeis ideology; and this, together with the circumstance that Trades Unions acquired power during a period of intense national economic development (1870-1900), produced the concept of limiting the proletarian struggle within the limits of Capitalism and the nation.

4.—Trades Unionism represented (and still represents) the upper layers of the working class, excluding the bulk of the unskilled workers; and where these workers are organized in Trades Unions, they are dominated by the concepts and practice of the upper layers—the "aristocracy of labor."

5.—The development of Imperialism merges the Trades Unions definitely in Capitalism, the upper layers of the working class being bribed with a share in the profits of imperialism by means of slightly higher wages, steady employment, and labor legislation. The "aristocracy of labor" dominant in Trades Unionism accepts Imperialism, uses the unions to assist Capitalism in "stabilizing" labor in industry, and becomes the source of the corrupt ideology of social imperialism. The decisive factor in the old International was the immersion of Socialism in Trades Unionism, with its pratice of social-Imperialism, petty bourgeois democracy, and its fundamental counter-revolutionary tendency.

6.—Trades Unionism (as typically expressed in the American Federation of Labor) is impotent to improve materially conditions of labor or to conquer power, since the division of the workers into craft or trade organizations splits them into innumerable unions, each antagonistic to the other, making hopeless the struggle against concentrated Capitalism, which largely expropriates the worker of his skill, eliminates the craft divisions of small industry, and brings masses of the proletariat together regardless of particular occupational functions. The general mass strike alone is capable of decisive action against concentrated Capitalism; but Trades Unionism in form and spirit is antagonistic to the mass strike.

7.—Trades Unionism comes to realize its economic impotence, and proceeds to Parliamentary action, which, represented by Laborism (as typically expressed in the British Labor Party) is as impotent as Trades Unionism to accomplish fundamental conquests, since Laborism necessarily accepts the dominant union concepts and practice. Laborism unites with the dominant union concepts and practice. Laborism unites with petty bourgeois democracy against the proletarian revolution—that petty bourgeois democracy which is seduced by Imperialism.

8.—The governmental form of expression of Laborism is State Capitalism, the merger in the state of the capitalists, the small bourgeois, and the upper layers of the working class dominant in the Trades Unions; the state is used to regulate equally industry and labor for purposes of Imperialism, the proletarian masses being compelled to accept this arrangement by means of deception and force.

9.—The tendency is for Laborism and Socialism to unite (either formally or by means of Trades Union domination of the Socialist Party) each necessarily accepting social Imperialism, since their activity is limited within the limits of Capitalism and the nation; and under the ascendency of monopoly and finance capital, the "prosperity" of a nation depends on Imperialism.

10.—Laborism becomes the final bulwark of defence of Capitalism against the oncoming proletarian revolution; accordingly, a merciless struggle against the oncomming proletarian revolution; accordingly, a Laborism is imperative. But while politically Laborism expresses itself as State Capitalism and petty bourgeois democracy its animating impulse and force is in Trades Unionism. The struggle against this form of unionism accordingly is an inseperable phase of the struggle against Laborism, proceeding—

(a) In general by the Communist parties agitating to drive the unions to more revolutionary action.

(b) Encouraging every movement in the unions that tends to break the permanency of the bureaucracy, and placing control in the masses by means of delegates being subject directly to instructions and recall.

(c) By the formation of organizations such as the Shop Stewards,(Workers' Committees, economic Workers' Councils, and direct branches of the Communist parties in the shops, mills, and mines, which are not alone means for moving the masses and the unions to more revolutionary action but which at the moment of the crisis may develop the Soviets.'

(d) By endeavoring to transform the Trades Unions into industrial unions, that is, a unionism in form paralleling the economic integrities of modern capitalism, and in spirit animated by the struggle for political power and economic mastery.

11.—The agitation for and construction of industrial unions provides, in an immediate and practical way, the opportunity to articulate and mobilize the militant spirit of discontent developing in the old unions, to carry on the struggle against the corrupt bureaucracy and the "aristocracy of labor." Industrial Unionism, moreover, provides the opportunity of calling to action the unorganized, unskilled workers, and to release the unskilled organized in the Trades Unions from their bondage to the reactionary upper layers of the working class. The struggle for revolutionary Industrial Unionism is a factor for the development of Communist clearing and for the grasping of the might.

12.—Unionism trades and industrial, must not limit itself to economic strikes, but must acquire the concept and practice of the general political strike—co-operate with the Communist parties to develop the general mass struggle of the proletarian against the bourgeois state.

13.—The concept that Industrial Unionism alone is necessary for the conquest of Capitalism must be decisively rejected. It is sheer Utopia to imagine that all the workers, or an overwhelming majority, can be organized in industrial unions under Capitalist economic conditions. The upper layers of the working classes, being the impulse of Laborism, will necessarily reject revolutionary industrial unionism; while the lower layers will not move very rapidly until thrown into action by the impact of revolution itself. Moreover, the concept that the workers under Capitalism must in their industrial unions acquire the experience and technical management of industry, "growing into" the new society by the industrial unions' gradual acquisition of industrial control, is identical (although inverted in form) with the concept of parliamentary Socialism—that the working class must gradually "grow into" Socialism by acquiring experience of state affairs and "absorbing" control of the bourgeois state. Each concept, in its own way, rejects the fundamental problem of the revolutionary conquest of state power.

14.—The conquest of the power of the state is the objective of the revolutionary proletariat. Neither the parliaments nor the industrial unions are the means for this conquest of power, but mass action and the Soviets—mass action to rally the workers, organized and unorganized, in the open revolutionary struggle for power, the Soviets to constitute the mechanism of the revolutionary proletarian state, the dictatorship of the proletariat. At the moment of active revolution the struggle becomes not a struggle for industrial unions, but for the construction of Soviets.

15.—After the conquest of political power and under the protection of the Soviet Dictatorship, Industrial Unionism comes actually to function in the economic reconstruction of society on a Communist basis; and the stronger the industrial unions the easier the process of reconstruction. The government of Soviets, of proletarian dictatorship, is political and transitory in character, the necessary agency of repression to expropriate and crush Capitalism. While industrial in its constituents and representation, the government of Soviets functions geographically and politically; but alongside of itself it constructs a central administration of industry, wholly economic in character, equality in representation and functions, perfecting the organism of proletarian control and management of industry on the basis of the industrially organized producers.

The Private Detective — what he does and how [illegible]

I.

"Every murder and wholesale destruction of property that has been committed in the United States since labor was first organized has been premeditated and carried out by the secret agents of the private detective-corporations, who have sworn their way into the organized bodies of workers for the purpose of betraying them."

Somebody who ought to know has just made that charge, in writing, to President Wilson.

Stephen A. Doyle, of Chicago, for 30 years a detective in both pirvate and government service, is ready to tell the world of the iniquity he has seen in those 30 years, of the blood that has been spilled, the lies that have been told; the women that have been outraged, the men who have been sold, in the effort of the great bosses to incriminate the workers in all the labor wars that America has seen.

He knows the story well, with all its dramatic plots and secret, unwritten history. Orty Mc-Manigle was a Burns detective. Harry Orchard worked for Thiel—the 1918 strike at Argo, Ill., was a company-engineered affair to break the union, which had grown 100 per cent strong while the government had the plant in wartime. It all costs millions of dollars, millions which each citizen of America pays as a consumer.

Not a "Bolshevik"

His letter to President Wilson has been the first step in Doyle's revelation. Now he is writing a book, making the expose on a larger scale. His object is the outlawing of all private detective agencies. He makes the following allegations concerning the activities of private detective agencies.

"I am 100 per cent American (democrat), 49 years of age and a lifelong detective, and fully understand what I am writing and realize that this statement is going before you, our chief executive, for your consideration, and thence before the eyes of the world, and I make the same without any pretentions or retraction or apology, and for the further purpose of giving you an opportunity of dealing intelligently with the complex problem that now confronts the welfare of our nation. In other words, remove the dagger that is slowly but surely bleeding to death 'the goddess' from her patriot bosom," writes the wise detective in introducing himself to the president. And he has this view of "foreign labor" and its anxiety to abide by genuine American institutions —a view which no capitalist source ever permits to reach the light:

"The foreign element are 98 per cent laborers, consequently had to mingle quietly with our noble sons who earned their bread by the sweat of their brow, and always stood steadfastly by their constitutional rights and do so still.

"Thank God, they organized the foreigners and educated them up to true American standards; co-operated with them in all things; and today, for love of country and freedom and true American standards, they stand shoulder to shoulder in a solid phalanx to combat against the common enemy that threatens to crush and crucify.

Spitting on the Flag.

The Doyle story continues:

"On close estimate it costs the Bankers and Manufacturers' association of this sity and state $250,000 per month, on an average, to keep up this private detective system, and on Jan. 1, 1919, $750.000 was distributed among the different agencies for the purpose of creating and promoting strife between the races, and, in every most undreamed-of way, work their way into the ranks of organized bodies of men and agitate and lead them into all imaginable acts of violence against the government of the United States and the present administration, and they have succeeded very well so far.

"I went into a hall that is branded as 'red' with a detective friend about a month ago. He walked up through the center of the hall wearing a red flag, made a short speech, hurled his curse on the traitor, Woodrow Wilson, pulled down the American flag and wiped his feet on it and spat on it. I said to him, after we came out: 'Good Lord, how can you have the heart to do that?' 'Oh, hell,' he said, 'I get $45 a week from the Thiel Detective Agency for pulling that stuff, and I have 15 names in there, and every act I pull off, in making my reports, insert one of those names. It is easy to convict them, for I carry a sheriff's star.'

"He also told me that his agency had 1.500 men operating in the city of Chicago, under the same conditions as he is, I met him again on the 6th, and he said: 'Doyle, this is great game. Did you see by the paper about that letter the governor's mother-in law got?' I replied I believed I did. He said, 'We sent that.' I said, 'What purpose?' 'Oh,' he said, 'a double purpose. Governor increased his plain clothes squad, and we got them scared of the "reds"—we deal both ways, see!'

Beating the Government

"The Ethiopian hasn't changed his skin, nor the leopard his spots since the government took over the railroads up to the first of October,

"The special detective system established to serve special interests has systematicaly looted the freight department in which I served out of $70,000,000, which the poor people must pay, and from the first of October, 1919, $27,000,000 to the present date. The claim department has a record of about $125,000,000 to its discredit; all this system's work is done for the purpose of discrediting government control.

"I endeavored to expose it and was ousted out of the service. They got wise.

"The first private detective service known in the world's history is Pinkerton's in Chicago. The next was Thiel, and the Burns agency following. Today they are millionaire companies, although they are non-productive—that is, they have never produced anything but crime.

"The blowing up of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan concentrators in the state of Idaho, in the year 1898, and the murder of 25 men was planned and carried out by private detectives. They were not quite satisfied with their deadly work, so they furnished false testimony against Frank Butler and Paul Cochran, president and secretary of the local miners' union, and sent them to the penitantiary, the real culprits giving evidence against them. The next step was to murder the governor. For this crime the officers of the union were arrested. Harry Orchard, a Thiel detective, who was covered in the union as surely as Judas in Christ's family, turned state's evidence and was given immunity by the state officials, who formed a partnership with him. I exposed the conspiracy and the innocent men went free. He was put on his trial and confessed that he was a secret operative for the Thiel Detective Service and was directed in his work by them: also confessed to having dynamited a building in Colorado and murdered 13 innocent men. He also confessed that this work was done by his agency and the motive was to break up the Western Federation of Miners and call down the wrath and prosecution of the government officials upon its members.

"The western manager of the Thiel agency was discharged from this service, but he was financed by them to start an agency in his own name, as they considered such service as he was capable of rendering indispensable.

Los Angeles Times.

"Orty McManigel was another man of the Judas type. He was a Burns detective for many years, and to show how cleverly he carried out his work —and, of course, you will realize that I couldn't describe this clearly unless I was part and parcel of it—he furnished his master, Mr. Wm. J. Burns, chief of the Burns International Detective Service, 40,000 letters to be used as evidence after forming a partnership with the governor of California, the judge, etc.

"Water finds its level. Orty McManigel also said he sent the mysterious bomb that Colonel Otis' confidential Jap brought in, and the captain of police exploded, to destroy the evidence. Some would discredit this, but I wouldn't as I know the game from A to Z.

The Argo, Illinois, Massacre.

"When the government released the Corn Products & Refining Co.'s plant, it was 100 per cent union, and private detectives were immediately engaged to bust it up; and in order to do this successfully they began to run covered espiogners into the union. The boys, when in, did their work well in creating race hatred, that being their 'long suit.' Finally they got the forces divided by telling the Americans that the foreigners wanted the Americans run out and informing the foreigners likewise. Consequently, on the 9th of July the strike was called on.

"The private detective service company brought up the sheriff, prosecutor and mayor of Argo. So the foreign class had a poor show. Spectators at 3 p. m. were congregated about the gate of the plant, and the mayor of Argo assembled his gunmen in front of his home at Fifty-seventh place and instructed them as follows:

"Twenty of you go under cover around the rear of the plant and open fire on them, when you see me close in from the north side, and we will shoot them down.'

"They opened fire and shot down 58 people, men and women, and killed three men. On July 14 they made another attack on a congregation of foreigners, and three men and a woman were thrown in jail and brutally tortured. Private detectives had shot one man and were beating his head with a gun. A priest, who is also a foreigner, stepped up and said: 'I know him. He has nine children and he is not a bad man.'

"'We are not killing him because he is a bad man, but because of the money there is in it,' and they finished their ghastly work.

"Emil Liedick, a foreigner, was not out on a strike, but he was locked up in the plant and left his 16-year-old wife at home, and Mr. Sayer, general superintendent, sent three of his choice gunmen to watch Liedick's home and protect his wife from the people he branded as lawless foreigners.

"They (the private detectives robbed the house of $95, kidnaped his young wife, after drugging her, took her to Dick Lambert's saloon. Sixty-third street and Archer avenue, where 14 of the private detectives outraged her, stripped off her garments, threw her into their master's car and sold her out in the white slave district. This, Mr. Sayer, the superintendent, says is 'loyal Americanism' to show further 'loyal Americanism' to foreigners in the name of our most beloved government."

— By Lida A. E. Gale —

The Juggernaut of American capitalism moves on steadily toward intervention in Mexico.

The "made—in—the—U. S. A." revolution momentum, little by little, and there momentum, little by little, and the storm mutterings grow louder throut the country. A friend in Tampico writes me that most of the Americans there frankly look for intervention and none of them manifest much concern about the revolution. There is a general air of complacency indicative of the quiet understanding that "everything is all fixed up."

The attitude of the pro-interventionists in the United States shows clearly where their sympathies are.

Henry Lane Wilson, former ambassador to Mexico and notorious friend of the cut-throat, Huerta, tells the Fall committee that intervention in Mexico as far south as the 22nd parallel of latitude, should take place at once. Tampico's oil wells are north of the 22nd parallel!

Senators Fall, Smith and others who have been actively anti-Mexican, foam at the mouth at the very idea of letting Carranza's troops travel a short distance on American soil in order to reach their destination and fight the Sonora rebels. Senator Smith tells his fellow solons that "Sonora is the only state in the Mexican Union that has shown consideration for American property rights" and that he does not propose to consent to letting a gang of murderers march on Arizona land in order to fight the people of Sonora.

It is informing to know how grateful the senator feels to the Sonorans for their care of American property rights. And it helps illumine the situation greatly.

Altho the Carranza government—at this writing, anyway—denies having formally asked permission to let its trops march thru a section of Arizona, there is no doubt that Carranza would be highly pleased to have such permission. It is probable that he has not directly asked, but that feelers have been thrown out by his friends in Washington. And in view of the fierce opposition that has been stirred up by the suggestion, Carranza will no doubt refrain from asking a favor which he can clearly see vould not be granted.

Meanwhile, the flames of insurrection spread, a little here, a little there. Mexico City is still as quiet as a country church-yard, in so far as revolutionary activities are concerned, but beneath the surface serenity there are doings that are ominous. New faces are appearing constantly. "Hombres" from the north from the nearby ranches and from nobody knows where, are coming into town steadily. They are mostly big husky fellows whose bulging hip pockets, eagle eyes and military swagger indicate that they know what it is to fight. Some of them are Obregonistas who have come here to size up the situation and get ready for business. Some are Carranzistas who fled from the north considering Mexico City a safer place for now. Many women and children have also fled the danger zone.

Not a few families, especially those of foreigners who remember the revolution of a few years ago, have begun to store up provisions, food, etc. If Mexico City should be besieged, they would be prepared. They would be able to exist if rail connections were broken off and they could even shut themselves in their houses and live with more or less safety until the fighting was over.

Nobody knows just where Obregon is, altho all kinds of wild and contradictory stories have been published since ihs disappearance from the city. But the likeliest guess is that he is right in Sonora, directing affairs quietly. Why he has not issued a manifesto and called on the people generally to rise up in arms and support him, is subject of dispute. Some think he is sparring time, not wishing to publicly endorse the revolution until reasonably sure of its success. By avoiding making such a statement, he could afterward repudiate the uprising, saying it was the unauthorized outbreak of the people of Sonora and that while he did not approve of Carranza's policy(he did not approve either, of secession. The other theory is that Obregon is negotiating with American interests for sufficient support to make the success of the rebellion a certainty and that as soon as he has matters arranged, he will call on the masses to join with him.

A general appeal to the Mexican people would no doubt result in a generous response. By cunning politics-playing Obregon has a majority of all classes with him. His chief lieutenant, Luis N. Morones, Samuel Gompers' representative in Mexico, has swung in line a big share of the craft unions. "Socialist" and "Labor" parties galore have been organized in various parts of the country and packed with Obregon men so that the parties would be certain to declare for Obregon. On the other hand, an active press bureau has sent out a mass of material eulogizing Obregon as a sound, conservative business man with a proper respect for monied interests. Bonillas has tried to play the same but with less success. The fact that Bonillas has an American wife and lived in the United States so many years has been utilized by Obregon campaigners to convince the peons that Bonillas is pro-American. The prejudices of the workers have been aroused against Bonillas by these appeals, while on the other hand, the prejudices of American merchants and of Mexicans employed by them, have been assiduously cultivated by reminding them that Bonillas is Carranza's man and that Carranza refused to aid the Allies and until recently insisted on the petroleum tax. So, by clever maneuvering, Obregon has "gotten them coming and going," and both labor and capital are lined up to a considerable extent behind him.

The really radical workers are savagely fighting any tendency to support either candidate declaring that neither Obregon nor Bonillas is honestly radical and that the masses will be exploited under either.

Preparations for military activity continue and it is evident that much is happening which is not generally known. Only a week or so ago, 5000 rifles disappeared mysteriously from the government storehouse. Now the report that several aeroplanes purchased in Europe by Mexican governmen agents and which were just shipped to Veracruz, have been damaged beyond repair.

The feeling prevails that this is the silence before the storm. The people are uneasuy, nervous, worried. They shrink from the prospect of further bloodshed new atrocities, fresh agonies.

But the American capitalists and investors here—except a few small business men who are not on the inside of things—look unconcerned and even optimistic.

They know that intervention is coming—unless a wave of wrath in the United States prevents it.

Resolution No. II. — 4-20-20
(Our challenge to the Press)

We see by the press, that some of the so-called "outlaw" strikers have returned to work. Would you please explain to us why the steel strikers were called Reds and Bolshevists; why the miners were called traitors and enemies of the government, and why the present striking switchmen are called outlaws.

Have not the workers a right to strike when they have exhausted every other possible method of getting justice? It seems to us, that every time the workers ask for justice, that the press attempts to bias their case, by calling them "red", "radicals" and the like.

Why not give the workers a square deal? They certainly deserve it.

We, the members of Local Union 1531, U. M. W. of A. believe the demands of the striking switchmen just and reasonable and be it

RESOLVED, that we do all in our power, to see that their case is presented to the public, in its proper light.

Workers' Share Less-

"A total of $4,800.000 means $240 per family of five through-out the nation", says Lauck. "Consider that each family of five paid as a total, not to so-called legitimate profits but to excess over pre-war profits, $240 a year, and one gains an idea of the total burden which profiteering meant in the country.

"Our facts show," concludes Lauck, "that it is impossible to charge labor with profitering, or to say that labor is responsible for the high cost of living. For, as we have previously pointed out, if invested wealth gets a larger proportion of the national wealth than formerly, the man who gives personal service or labor is bound to get a smaller proportion.

"The menace of the future lies in the probability that the vast profits which are still held in reserve will be capitalized in order that, under the pretext of a fair return on capital, those who own them may contiune to take the larger proportion of national income, even at the expense of very great suffering on the part of the workers."

Closely associated with Lauck's argument is the proof offered by W. S. Carter, chief of the firemen, that the wages of railroad workers might be doubled without materially adding to the sale price of commodities. After referring to the belief that higher wages automatically compel higher prices. Carter said to the Wage Board.

"The general acceptance of this vicious circle lie is abundant evidence that the people like to be humbugged. To accept it is to believe that American labor is in a conspiracy to boost prices. If that is true we are either criminals or criminally ignorant, which is to insult the intelligence of the working men and women... If the rates of pay of all employees were increased 100 per cent the addition to the average commodity value of each ton of freight would be less than 1 per cent. Such a wage advance would add only 88 cents to each $100 of freight transported."

Taking the period from 1914 to 1918, Carter supplied the wage board with figures which proved his contention, and which the railroad managers have not tried to deny.

The Black Sheep.

Chapter XXI.

It took Jack no little time to tell his companions all that had befallen him since he had left them in search of a job. Needless to say that much of what had happened the boy was an old story with the the veterans of the Class War. It was his particular and unique views on these events that interested his companions most of all. Still they enjoyed many a hearty laugh at the boy's expense.

"What did we tell you!" Collins laughed, "These employment offices are not legitimate institutions; they are festering sores on the rotten body of Capitalism. No doubt they could be so conducted as to be of service to the slave under the present social order, but then they would be less profitable to the operators and you must never forget that it is profit and not service that is the driving power of the business world." Leaning back in his chair and putting his feet upon the table and locking his fingers behind his head he went on, in the same strain. "There is profit in crookedness and glory in honesty that is the reason honesty is precious in business by reason of scarcity while crookedness is as common as dirt. And you knew it, havin learned it both theoretically and practically when they had us in the can (jail) at Anamoose."

"I see that I am a living illustration of my theory that education does not change man's nature to any great extent unless it is carried far enough to form definite habits in the individual. His education must make him an automaton of the new order. He must live and act the social life without an effort of the will, and unless he is brought that far no matter how well he knows the theory of a thing he will act on his instincts. That is, he will use his phylogenetic instead of his ontogenetic mental equipment," Jack explained.

"Hold on a moment—put on the breaks——fetch us the ghost of Webster and the encyclopedia," roared Collins while Rudolph who was still busy with his household duties grinned broadly.

Then after a pause he added, "I understand you alright but I want you to express yourself in such a way that the average 'stiff' can get you."

"Which is equivalent to an admission that you are above the average 'Stiff,' and want to hand him down something from your high estate," Jack replied. "You understand me. Rudolph understands me. None of us have had any advantages. What we got we took at the cost of midnight oil and tired eyes, while the average was hanging on the bar or playing poker or soiltaire, or stupidly snored away their time. They mentally starved while food for the mind was cheaper and more abundant than bread. The average—why should I talk to the average? Why should I throw pearls before swine? They will only turn and rend me limb from limb. Your precious stupid, vapid cowardly average, which knows nothing but to exchange their strength for sufficient bread to keep alive and spawn. They are the debris of the law of fecundity which your misguided enthusiasm mistakes as the stones from which to build the wonderous temple of the machine age. You talk without thinking, that is all. You take it for granted that a thing is human just because it wears pants." Evidently excited by the vehemence of his own speech he suddenly ceased and opened a volume of John Fiske's Cosmic Philosophy.

Collins was more then pleased with the boy's defense of his position although he was not in sympathy with it. He was of the opinion that Capitalism made environment and environment made men what they were. He hoped that by teaching them the possibilities of machine production he could make them hopelessly discontented with their present environment, so much so that they would rise and consciously inaugurate the new state of society. He had forgotten the old saying that the creature is not greater then the creator from which it follows that man being a product of evolution can not rise above the source that gave him origin. He is in the grasp of the inexorable law of biologic cause and effect. A fish by desiring it cannot become a beast yet all beasts have evolved from fish and thru them from still lower forms. At each step whole species and races dying out except a few favored variations who became the progenitors of the new race or species. No species has ever survived a great geologic change intact, so no race or nation has ever survived a fundamental economic change intact. We can not will to enter a new social order, because our mind is a product of the present and past social orders. Our biologic tendency is to hold on to what we have and to distrust the new no matter how alluring. Man in mass does not advance. He is pushed along. You can not teach him the way and make him travel it. Biologic needs throw him into a new order where he must either adapt himself or die. And most of them die. If it were not so the world would have been over-populated thousands of years ago. The difference between the two men was that Jack saw man as an animal under the sway of biologic law, while Collins saw him as a reasoning creature who by virtue of his intellect ought to be able to shape his environment according to his needs.

Collins looked at him quizically then remarked, "It sometimes looks as if you are right. Even you with all your desire for abstract knowledge are quite unteachable. After we had had told you what to expect at the hands of those parasites you walk right up and stick your head into the noose like all the rest. Your desire for a job that is for your hereditary source of bread drove you on like a lamb to the slaughter. There is no use advising anyone. Experience is the best teacher and many a worker refuses to learn from it, [illegible] will be eternally—if it is not enough to make a man pessimistic." Then after a moments pause during which he replenished the stove with fir bark he continued. "It is really funny to see what asses people are; how completely ancient superstition holds them." Then addressing Jack directly he said. "You knew that the workers have no rights that the exploiters are bound to respect. Still you bought that job, and went out to it believing the word of that parasite. A bed-bug persuading its victim that its bite would be beneficial," then folding his arms and leaning far over the improvised table his eyes ablaze with the fire of the propagandist he went on in true soap box styles "After all you got easy, for you must remember that the employment agent is not the only one who is ready to prey upon you." As he said this Jack was reminded of his experience at Anamoose and the words of Herman who had told him that there would be many harpies on his trail whom he would have to fight off constantly; but he made no comment, in fact he had no chance for Collins roared on like the Falls of Niagara. "The employment agents are only one evil fish, spawned by capitalism ever swarming in the sewers of civilization. They land on the worker wherever they find him like leeches in stagnant pools, incapable of production they have to be parasitic in order to live. Their lives are a detriment to every thing that is good and noble in the human race."

At this point Jack interrupted him with the remark that he was under the impression that exploitation could only take place at the point of production.

The objection did not worry Collins however. He explained that there was a real distinction between the words exploitation and robbery. He defined exploitation as an industrial process essential to capitalistic production and therefore consented to by the masses of mankind. On the other hand he defined robbery as the direct appropriation of one's substance by another without any return in value or service. "Exploitation is business, robbery is a crime," were the words in which he summed up his analysis.

This at once started an argument between Collins and Rudolph, the latter maintaining that Collins had drawn a distinction without a difference. He held that all appropriation of values was criminal; that it made no difference whether it was done by a business man through a bank, or by a 'high jack' with a gun. To Rudolph's mind the business man was simply a cowardly criminal who exercised his predatory proclivities within the limits of a law which he himself had made by the help of his class.

But with these views Collins could not agree. He maintained that right was determined by the might of public consent; that therefore exploitation was morally right seeing that the masses agreed to it both by their active voice and their silent consent. "Any process no matter how hideous, be it burning of witches, mutilation of innocence, persecution of heretics or the taking of surplus value is legal and right so long as people condone it. it immediately becomes wrong. Robbery is wrong for the same reason. The masses object to being robbed directly; they have not yet evolved intelligence enough to recognize indirect robbery that is exploitation. Public consent alone determines what is business and what is crime. There is no other criterion by which it can be known. Good and bad, virtue and sin, business and crime are not in themselves entities. They are modes of interaction between masses of individuals and their environment. Sin and crime are generally the normal acts of our ancestors. They shift with every change in our environment."

When Collins came to this part of his argument Rudolph was again agreed, and showed his approval by quoting from the 'Kasidah'.

"They change with place,
They shift with race,
And in the veriest span of time
Each vice has wore a virtue's crown
All good was banned as sin and crime."

"On this we are all agreed," Jack ratified; but I do not yet quite see your distinction between exploitation and theft."

"Exploitation is the process of getting away with a margin between the value of a man's product in the market and the purchasing power of the money he gets as wages. The worker is a chronic loser in his constant trading of his life for his bread. It's the business of capitalism to see to it that he always comes out short. In fact he must come out short or capitalism can not survive. Exploitation is the motive force of capitalistic progress. That is the reason that they control pulpit, school, and press in such a way that these shall only inculcate such knowledge in to the minds of the masses as will lead them to believe in the justice and necessity of exploitation. Thru the agencies of education they manufacture public opinion, and public opinion determines the concept of justice prevalent in the minds of the masses. Morality is what the papers say it is. When the masses lose faith in the papers, they will also lose faith in the morality of the existing order."

DEMOCRACY AND REVOLUTION — by Bertrand Russell

— From the Liberator —

(Professor Bertrand Russell of Cambridge University (England) is one of the two or three most celebrated philosophers in the world to-day. He is a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, where he teaches mathematics and mathematical logic. His outspoken opposition to the war caused his removal from this position, and his imprisonment for six months under the Defense of the Realm Act. But the university has recently been compelled, by an organized demand from soldier students returning from the war, to reinstate him and expunge from the University record the minutes of his dismissal.

To many who have thought of Bertrand Russell, aside form his scientific achievements, as merely a liberal pacifist by temperament, this article will come as a surprise. His conclusions in regard to the tactics which communists must pursue in order to be victorious must command their approval, tho we cannot agree that even in England the revolution will be accomplished without the accompanying historic strife. Bourgeois "liberalism" is here shown to be an utterly futile weapon for workingclass emancipation. Thruout this splendid article Professor Russel vigourously upholds the Communist position.

Before discussing my nominal subject, I propose to make a brief survey of the world from the point of view of the possibilities of freedom. The ultimate possibilities of freedom are greater than ever before, but the dangers also are great, and the immediate future is very difficult.

The war has afforded a test as to what was strong and what was weak in the nominal belief of men. Much that was traditional would probably have stood a good deal longer, but for the harsh realities which the war forced upon people's notice. Much also was swept away that belonged to what may be called urbanity, much that depended upon not getting down to bed-rock, or stirring up the primitive passions. The world since the war is more stark, less easy-going, more brutal. The division of old and young is greater than in normal times, for the old succeded in idealizing the war, and in order to do so were compelled to depart even further than usual from reality, whereas the young have had reality ground into them as never before. The result of this is that politics is no longer so amiable as formerly, and that although leading politicians may indulge in the old humbug, it has lost its grip, and the motives for which men vote are very realistic.

Not only the Liberal Party, but Liberal ideals also, have suffered eclipse as the result of the war. Their failure was made manifest by President Wilson's collapse. Liberal ideals, in so far as they were genuine, depended upon a certain degree of forbearance as between man and man, a certain unwillingness to push things to extremes. Religious toleration, democracy, free speech, free press and free trade, were all of them ideals implying that the differences between different groups were not irreconciable. I am one of those who, as a result of the war, have passed over from Liberalism to Socialism, not because I have ceased to admire many of the Liberal ideals, but because I see little scope for them, except after a complete transformation of the economic structure of society.

The war has resulted in a confrontation of plutocracy and labor, capitalism and socialism. Socialism has appeared at last as a force roughly equal in strength to capitalism. In Russia, it is in power, and elsewhere there is a possibility of its acquiring power. What have these two opposing creeds to offer?

Capitalism, so long as it fought against feudalism, was associated with certain Liberal ideas: freedom, democracy and peace. It was associated also with increased production. The lingering remnants of feudalism have been swept away by the war: the three Emperors who dominated Eastern Europe are gone. In the remaining monarchies, in Milton's words, "the kings sit still with aweful eye." But every step in the victory of capitalism over the past has made it more hostile to the future, and less liberal. In America, I am told, there is now a prison at the foot of the Statue of Liberty.*

The greater part of the civilized world remains subject to a reign of terror. The Bolshevik reign of terror has of course been used to make our flesh creep, but it differs from the others solely in its purpose. I do not allude merely to the White Terror in places like Hungary, where the Bolshevik regime has been crushed; similar methods in a less drastic form have become all but universal. In France, by the acquittal of the murderer of Jaures, the courts have given it to be understood that the assasination of a Socialist is not illegal. In America any one professing Socialist opinions is liable to imprisonment or deportation, and Socialists duly elected are not permitted to sit in the New York Legislature. In Ireland any person who believes in the rights of small nations, in self-determination, or in any other of the objects for which the war was fought, is liable to imprisonment, without trial. Of India it is not necessary to speak, since the facts have become too notorious. Throughout the world we are faced by a clash of naked force. Socialism, in alliance with oppressed Nationalism, is opposed ruthlessly by Capitailsm, strengthened by victorious Nationalism.

Under these circumstances, freedom throughout the capitalist world is not to be thought of. But how about democracy? Democracy was supposed to be one of the inspiring ideas for which we fought in the war. We are now told by the Bolsheviks that democracy, as we have hitherto understood it, is a bourgeois trick. We are told, on the other hand, by the capitalists, that it is anti-democratic to attempt by means of direct action to prevent a reactionary Parliament from flouting the will of the majority. Let us try to understand what democracy in a capitalist community consists of. We have to begin with the Judiciary and the Civil Service, both allies of the Plutocracy. We have the fact that Members of Parliament, and still more, Ministers, through their social status and income, are brought into natural connection with the possessing classes. We have the fact that capitalistic influences are more concentrated, swift and secret than labor influences, and the fact that the psychology of power tends to make its possessors more sympathetic with the directors of the capitalist industrial machine than with those who, for the time being obstruct its smooth working. The constitutional power of the democracy is limited to the expression of a choice about once in five years, a choice often between candidates none of whom are really expressive of the political opinions of the constituency, for, owing to the expense of elections, only great and rich organizations, or very wealthy individuals, can fight with any hope of success. In the whole process of forming opinion before the exercise of the vote, capitalism has enormous preponderance. Beginning in the schools, where the education is designed to produce acquiescence in the status quo, and continuing in the press, which, with very rare exceptions, is a capitalist venture run in the interests of capitalism, the mind of the child is warped, and the mind of the adult is filled with falsehoods, so that only persons of exceptional energy and independence of thought can hope to arrive at anything approaching a true view of the issues to be decided at an election. The early Benthamite advocates of democracy imagined that it was easy for a man to ascertain his interest, and that he would certainly vote in accordance with it. Thus the result of democracy would be a just representation of all interests in proportion to their numerical strength. Admirable theory! But if they had studied, for example, the Jezuits and their influence, they might have seen its falsehood. The average man's opinions are made for him like the house he lives in. He can choose among a few varieties, but the varieties are rigidly limited by forces quite outside his control. They are limitations, it is true, to what can be done in the way of manufacturing opinion. If the opinions inculcated lead to the death in unsuccessful war of a large proportion of the men, and to the starvation of the women and children, it may happen, after a certain number of years, that the usual methods of generating opinion will fail. In that case, revolution results. But the hardships required before this climax is reached are appaling. What is called the rule of the majority in a bourgeois democracy is, therefore, in reality, the rule of those who control the methods of manufacturing opinion, especially in the schools and the press. It is absurd to give a sort of fetish worship to such a system, or to condemn all uses of the weapon of direct action, because of the supposed sacrosanct authority of a Government elected years ago on quite other issues. The Bolsheviks are right in maintaining that bourgeois democracy is a trick by which the victims are induced to pronounce their own condemnation in order to minimize the force required for carrying it out

At the outbreak of the late war, capitalism pretended that feudalism, as represented by the Kaiser, was what had caused the disaster. Feudalism is gone, but capitalism has shown itself incapable of making any real peace. Quite apart from the hostility to communist Russia, the trade rivalries inherent in capitalism have necessitated a harsh treatment of Germany and Austria, which makes any stable peace impossible. Every thoughtful person must realise that the continuance of the capitalist system is incompatible with the continuance of civilization. It is as clear as noonday that, if this system survives, the late war must be succeeded by other wars, which will be even more destructive in proportion as they are more scientific. A few more of such conflicts must put an end to everything that has made the European races of importance to the world.

Finally, capitalism has begun to fail as a technical method of production. The well-founded and universal belief in the importance of production no longer, as in the past, strengthens the hold of the capitalist system. The old incentives to work have broken down, for the bees have begun to think that it is not worth while to make honey for their owners. At the present moment, as a result of the war, the world needs speedy production in a quite unprecedented degree, but if speedy production is to be possible new incentives must be found, and can only be found through self-government in industry. It is this that has given, in Great Britain, such extraordinary and sudden strength to the guild idea. We have all been watching the experiment of the building trade in Manchester, where, after the whole capitalist machinery had failed hopelessly to deal with the housing problem, it is being found that guild methods afford a complete solution, equally perfect from the point of view of the producer and of the consumer. Largely because of this technical breakdown of capitalism, the advent of socialistic methods of production is now immeasurably easier than at any previous time. Whatever the workers choose to demand in the way of economic justice, they can secure. Nothing stands in their way except the moderation of their own demands.

Thus capitalism has lost all the merits by which, in the past, it sought to commend itself to the average man. Through trusts and an intimate union with the State, capitalism has succeeded in destroying almost all vestiges of freedom. Through control of education and the press, it has made democracy a farce. Through national rivalries, it has made peace impossible except by its overthrow. And by arousing the discontent of the workers it has become inefficient as a method of production. The first three of these failures are reasons for desiring its overthrow. The fourth, fortunately, is also a reason for expecting it.

Capitalism has failed to secure freedom, genuine democracy, stable peace, or the increased production that the world needs, and there is no reason to think that its failure in these respects is in any way temporary. On the contrary, it is likely to grow more and more marked through the discontent which it arouses. What has Socialism to offer in these respects?

The most important of all the new facts that have emerged from the war is the existence of a Great Power which has adopted socialism in practice. Socialism, hitherto, has been a mere theory, something which practical men could despise as impossible and visionary. The Bolsheviks, whatever we may think of their merits and demerits, have at any rate proved that socialism is compatible with a vigorous and successful State. Faced by the united hostility of Europe, and by civil war within their own borders, coming into power at a time of unexampled chaos and starvation, deprived by the blockade of all outside help, they have, nevertheless, beaten back their enemies, reconquered the greater part of the old Russian Empire, survived the worst period of the famine without being overthrown by internal revolution, and set to work to regenerate production with amazing vigor. There has been nothing comparable since the France of the Revolution, and for my part I cannot but think that what the Bolsheviks are doing is of even greater importance for the future of the world than what was accomplished in France by the Jacobins, because their operations are on a wider scale, and their theory is more fundamentally novel. I believe that Socialists throughout the world should support the Bolsheviks and co-operate with them. And I think that Guildsmen,* in particular, ought to pay great attention to Bolshevik methods of organization, not only because of their power and prestige, but because of their partial adoption of an industrial instead of a geographical basis for the Soviets. But I do not mean to suggest that we, in this country, where conditions are exceedingly different from those in Russia, should blindly follow in the footssteps of the Bolsheviks. With other Guildsmen, I recognize the importance of organization by trades, but at the same time believe that the territorial Parliament still has useful functions to perform, and therefore I am not persuaded that, for us, the complete suppression of Parliament as opposed to Soviet forms is desirable. And I am strongly of opinion that whatever in the way of socialism is feasible in this country can be accomplished without armed revolution. Slavish imitation of the Bolsheviks is not what I wish to advocate. I am inclined to think that their methods were probably the only ones by which success could have been achieved in Russia, but it by no means follows that they are the only or the best methods for us. Our circumstances, however, are peculiar, and through out the Continent there is far more similarily to Russian conditions, and far more likelihood of similar methods being needed, if socialism is to acquire power. And in view of the success of Bolshevism in beating back its enemies, the spread of socialism throughout the Continent has become a by no means remote possibility.

Bolshevism has temporarily flouted two ideals, which most of us have hitherto strongly believed in; I mean, democracy and liberty. Are we on this account to view it askance? I think not.

The dictatorship of the proletariat is professedly a transitional condition, a war-time measure, justified while the remnants of the old bourgeois classes were still struggling to promote counter-revolution. Lenin, following Marx, regards the State as in essence the domination of one class in the community. As soon as communism has abolished the distinction of classes, the State is to wither away. When there is no longer any class except the proletariat, the dictatorship of the proletariat will ipso facto cease, and the State, in the sense in which Lenin uses the world, will disappear. Are we to object to this process on the ground that it may involve for a time the seizure of power by a minority? And are we to object on the same ground to direct action for political ends, in our own country? Lenin's defence of his action is broadly that the opposition to communism is essentially temporary, and that, when once communism has been established, it will command universal support. An argument of this sort can only be judged by the outcome. If the outcome shows, as it seems to have done in Russia, that the opposition was largely ignorant, and that experience of the new regime leads people to support it, it may be said the forcible transition has been justified. The arguments in favor of democracy and liberty, it may be said, are arguments applicable to normal times, not to cataclysms and world revolutions. In these terrific epochs, a man must be prepared to back his own faith; whether he is right or wrong in doing so, only the issue can show. I think there is something a trifle pedantic in applying to the circumstances of Russia the sort of arguments and principles which are valid for ourselves in ordinary periods. Russia could only be saved by a strong will, and it is doubtful whether a strong will could have saved it without dictatorship in some form. I do not think, however, that these considerations would apply to ourselves even if we were much nearer than we are to the establishment of complete socialism. England, ever since 1688, has had a love of moderation. Methods such as those of the Bolsheviks would alienate ordinary people. Nor is the opposition of the reactionaries sufficiently ruthless to justify such methods. The moderation of our Labor Party is often exasperating, but at any rate it is matched by the moderation of their opponents. This was clearly illustrated at the time of the railway strike. Marx, the great exponent of the doctrine of class war, asserted that, in England, Socialism might come by peaceful means. Let us hope that in this, as in so much else, he was a true prophet. But on the Continent, as the example of Russia has shown us, such a hope is probably chimerical. I believe, though of course to prophesey is so uncertain as to be little more than a pastime, that in view of the successes of Russian communism in resisting the united hostility of the capitalist Great Powers, the victory of Socialism in Germany, France and Iitaly, within the next ten years or so, is quite within the bounds of possibility. There is much reason to fear, however, that it will not be effected in these countries without the same accompaniments of war and terrorism that we have seen in Russia, though perhaps in a much fainter form. I do not believe that, if it were victorious in such a contest, it would confine its victory to those nations in which a majority was in favor of Socialism, particularly if its help were invited by Socialist insurrections. Poland, for example, would very likely fall again under Russian domination as in the days of Czardom. Nationalism and religion would keep the Poles, for a time, hostile to Socialism, whether it were international, or took the form of a revived Russian Imperialism. It would be necessary to supress by force the Polish desires for independence and for the persecution of the Jews, and doubtless it would be sought by means of a rigid control of education to indoctrinate the rising generation with a more Marxian outlook. Similar troubles would arise throughout the Balkans. The regime of International Socialism for at least a generation would have to be, in many regions, a regime of armed force, backed by rigid control of the press and the schools. There is no reason to suppose that, when the time came, the Bolsheviks would shrink from such a course, however little imperialism there may be in their present purposes. Their outlook on the world, like that of the early Mohammedans, is at once realistic and fanatical. Believing, as they do, in the Marxian formula of inevitable economic development, they feel their ultimate victory fatalistically assured. What they regard as of most importance is, that the guns should be in the hands of the class-conscious proletariat. This once secured, they feel convinced that propaganda can bring to their side the part of the proletariat which is still misled by "bourgeois catch-words," such as Religion and Patriotism. It is highly probable that they are justified in this view, and that if they could govern Europe for a generation, opposition to them at the end of that time would not come from the dying forces of the past, but from whatever new movements might arise, for embodying such Socialist ideals as the Bolsheviks might in the meantime have forgotten.

If we suppose that some such edvelopment is likely on the assumption that Bolshevik successes continue, ought we to seek to promote those successes, or to shrink from promoting them because of the bloodshed and teror that they might involve, and the loss to civilization, at least temporarily, that the conflict would entail?

For my part, I feel convinced that any vital progress in the world depends upon the victory of International Socialism, and that it is worth while, if it is necessary, to pay a great price for that victory. I feel convinced also that there will be no peace in the world until International Socialism has conquered, and that to strengthen its forces, and to weaken those of the opposition, is the quickest way to end the conflict. I believe, in a world, that "each recruit means quicker peace." When I speak of Socialism, I do not mean a milk-and-water system, but a throughgoing, root and branch transformation, such as Lenin has attempted. And if its victory is essential to peace, we must acquiesce in the evils involved in conflict, in so far as conflict is forced upon us by capitalism.

The Communist Party Splits.

The left wing of the Socialist movement in this country, from its inception, contained an element that claimed to be exclusive 100 per cent pure communists, and that the communist movement, to be protected from adulteration, must either remain under the unrestricted control of these 100 per centers — or must confine its personnel to these apostles.

The activities of that group led to the split in the left wing movement, which eventually led up to the formation of the two parties, the Communist and the Communist Labor Parties. The former would never have seen the light of day had it not been for the fact that the majority of the left wing council was dazzled with the glittering arguments of the 100 per centers and did not heed the warning given against the rule or ruin tactics of that element. These "Communists" had built up a machine for control within the Russian and other language federations and insisted upon the continuation of the autonomous federations because only through them could they hope to completely dominate and control the Communist movement. So the question of autonomous federations became the bone of contention, though the real question was: control or no control through these self-appointed apostles.

Those that were concerned more with the building up of a communist movement than with the question of control, continued their labor in spite of all accusations of "mensheviki" or "centrists" hurled against them, in spite of the further accusations that those who had organized the Communist Labor Party had split the American movement.

History has vindicated the Communist Labor Party. Those of the left wing council that deserted the left wing to join the 100 per centers found to their sorrow, that they had made a mistake. They found that under the cloak of the argument, that strict centralization of power in the communist movement was necessary, there was hidden away contempt for the workers, for the rank and file, who were supposed to play the part of stage decorations in the drama to be enacted by the coming revolution. They saw their mistake and were compelled to take the only means to rectify it; to split away from the 100 per centers whom they now discovered to be more impure than true, and to split the Communist Party.

Recently, during a four day's conference of the Central Executive Committee of the Communist Party, to which were invited the district organizers and the representatives of the federations, the split became an established fact. The voting power in the conference was confined to the members of the C. E. C. The vote stood 5 to 4. The minority of 4 broke away, together with all district organizers except one, and with the representatives of the German, Ukrainian, South Slavic, Estonian and Polish Federations. Both sides immediately sent out their commissaries to explain the split to the membership and it now remains to be seen what stand the rank and file will take.

It is to be hoped that this split will bring about a clean division between those that are concerned mainly with the formation of a strong communist movement, and those that are concerned with the questions of control and carreers. A unity between the former and the C. L. P. ought to be effected within a very short time and with the help of the united efforts of all true communists, we should now succeed in making the American branch of the Third International a worthy part of that great movement.

Secretary Wilson's Ruling.

The ruling of Secretary of Labor Wilson, that membership in the Communist Labor Party does not constitute in itself grounds for deportation, and that the advocacy of mass action, proletarian dictatorship, shop committees and Communism are legal unless accompanied by the advocacy of force and violence in instituting them, comes somewhat as a surprise to communists generally.

Since the January raids upon radicals of all hues the exact legal status of the Communist Labor Party has been in doubt. Soon after the raids were instituted, Secretary Wilson rulod that membership in the Communist Party constituted sufficient grounds for deportation of alien members and some were deported and others indicted. It was only natural considering the similarity of the principles of the two parties that a like fate awaited the alien members of the Communist Labor Party. That the adherents of Attorney General Palmer and his methods should sharply disagree with the conclusions of the Secretary of Labor would be expected since it is known that there have developed radical differences of policy between them. Naturally enough the Palmerites are peeved at the ruling. Apparently Palmer and his fellows are slated for the scrap heap.

What is beneath and behind the ruling of Secretary Wilson is not just now apparent. Communists have too much sense and knowledge of capitalism and capitalist governments to assume that the decision however favorable to them, is based either upon a sense of justice residing within the Secretary's breast or upon a liberal conception of the fundamentals of American law and constitutional guaranties. Communists and Communist Laborites have stoutly disclaimed any fundamental differences in principle between them tho readily admitting differences in tactics and internal organization. If Secretary Wilson has discovered vital differences perhaps he is to be congratulated upon his diligent researches. It is said that the Almighty moves in mysterious ways his wonders to perform. So it is with politicians. We must leave the future to reveal WHY Mr. Wilson discovers what all Communists have claimed—that we are legal and within the law in the statements of our Platform and Program, methods and tactics.

What Communist Labor Partyites are concerned with however, is not the why nor wherefore of Mr. Wilson's ruling which is far reaching indeed placing our Party as it does in a perfectly legal position as regards political activities. We know that "Constitutional guarantees" in so far as the workers are concerned under capitalism are not guarantees at all but merely liberties loaned to them only so long as they use them in the interests of the capitalist class. It must be admitted that the capitalist class is in a quandary in the crisis which they are faced with. They have played the game of repression and have failed utterly in stamping out the reds. If the pendulum should swing to the opposite extreme and a measure of liberty be restored it should astonish no one.

Of vital importance to the Communist Labor Party will be the readiness and vigor with which they accept the definition of Secretary Wilson and push with all the force at their command the upbuilding of the organization. It is safe to assert that that which could not be destroyed by the repressions and intimidations of Palmer and his agents and inquisitors must flourish with even a modicum of liberty of action. The January assaults were calculated to utterly destroy Communism in this country. How futile have been the efforts of the capitalist hangmen can be known only to those very close to the Communist movement. We have lost little while many times the loss has been gained in experience, in knowledge of revolutionary tactics and methods The Communist Movement is so well established in this country that it fears nothing from whatever forms of repression capitalism may attempt to heap opon it. At the same time it is prepared to take full advantage of every opportunity to function politically. If the ruling of Secretary Wilson is genuine, and we must assume that it is, our duty lies open before us. Nothing less than political activity (participation in elections) should satisfy us—not because we have a sublime faith in it as a weapon to ACCOMPLISH our aims but for the opportunity political campaigns afford us to propagate our ideas and to establish a close contact with the masses. At the same time the upbuilding of our shop committees must proceed with all possible vigor.

These then are the duties which the present days lay open before us As we fulfill them shall we be judged by our Movement. Every Communist then to his task. ALL POWER TO THE WORKERS!

COMMUNIST UNITY

The question of unity of the Communist Labor Party and the minority faction of the Communist Party which split away from the C. P. recently, confronts us. While it is true that the members of the two divisions of the C. P. have not wholly decided their affiliations and probably will not at once, in fact some groups have decided to remain neutral for a time, eventually the matter of unity with the Communist Labor Party will become a pressing one with at least the minority faction.

Up to the time of the occurrence of the C. P. split unity negotiations had been in progress but only a minorityof the C. P. officials had held out genuinely for unity. Unity of the C. L. P. and the minority faction of the C. P. is now not only a near possibility but a promising development.

A foregone conclusion resulting from such unity would be a tremendous strengthening of the Communist Movement here. Since the three-way split at Chicago last September thousands of real revolutionists have held aloof from affiliation with any party abiding the time when they should adjust their differences and unite. Unity of these two revolutionary groups would draw these workers at once into the ranks again and thus place at the disposal of the movement the energies, enthusiasm and support of these earnest comrades.

Another development and source of strength for a united Communist Movement is seen in the new "left wing" which has developed again in the Socialist Party since left wing elements were cast out of it last September. That a near resemblance to the situation of last summer again exists within the S. P. is apparent to even the causual observer. The reactionary and compromising tactics of the S. P. officials at Albany in seeking to retain their seats in the Legislature constitute but one of the rocks upon which the Socialist Party ship has struck and the shock from which has shaken the membership bringing to the surface a rebellion against what a large portion of the membership realize is compromise and reactionary tactics which have their base in fundamentally reactionary principles. These rebellious elements whose eyes have been opened to the non-revolutionary character of the S. P. are ready when unity is accomplished within the Communist ranks to join them in purpose and tactics.

While the Communist Labor Party makes no appeal for membership except its principles be endorsed and its adherents prove their qualifications as Communists in educational, propaganda and organization work along the tactical lines laid down by the Party, we shall welcome to our ranks all workers who stand ready to endorse our principles and are willing to prove them by their activities.

The split in the Communist Party is a welcome sign for future development of the American Communist Movement.

OUTLINE FOR CHAPTER EIGHT.
MIDDLE BARBARISM.

Beginning	Among the Aryan Race with the domestication of Animals. Among the Red races of the Western Hemisphere with agriculture.
Tools and Weapons	Bow and arrow, bronze spears and swords, highly polished stone tools. Tools of SMELTED copper.
Transportation	Natural locomotion, crude sledges, drawn by animals. On water, canoes, dugouts and early sail boats.
Subsistence	Cooked foods, flesh, farinaceous and vegetable. Milk.
Shelter	Hewn plank, stone and adobe houses.
Clothing	Tanned skins, wool and other woven fabrics.
Environment	Temperate and cold climates, Prairie and grassy country. Herding of domestic animals and agriculture.
Organization	Federated tribes containing the germ of primitive kingdoms. Organization of armies. Patriarchal family and the development of monagamous family, with inheritance of property. Competition of medicine men led to union of priests and prophets and establishment of religious institutions within and not separated from tribal organization.
Arts and Institutions	Beginning of systematic agriculture. Smelting of native soft metals, institution of chattel slavery and private property. Genesis of the class struggle in society.
Duration	Much less than lower barbarism.

The middle Age of barbarism began amongst the Aryan races of the Eastern hemisphere with the domestication of animals. The Red races of the Western hemisphere developed systematic agriculture at the beginning of middle barbarism.

Our domestic animals are but the descendants of wild animals adapted to the uses of man. The dog is but a domesticated wolf, and the cow a domesticated aurach. The aurach was the native buffalo of the Indo-Iranic plains, where the Aryan race first evolved out of lower barbarism.

The acquisition by man of any tool marks a forward step on the road to progress. Animals have been called the animated tools of man. The need of man for sleep caused him to utilize the dog as a sentinel. The storage of grain brought vast numbers of predatory rodents. Cats were domesticated to catch the thieves of grain. They proved themselves so useful for this purpose that their bodies were declard sacred and they were worshipped as gods.

The specific circumstances surrounding the first domestication of animals are of course unknown, but much can be learned of the process by an observation of present day tribes who are passing through this period of social evolution.

While the Aryan races were domesticating animals the Red races were busily developing systematic agriculture. The most notable examples of Red races so engaged, were the Pueblos of New Mexico, the Aztecs and Toltecs of Mexico and the Incas of the high plains of Peru.

The architecture of both races at this age was very similar, both using stone and adobe as building material, stone predominating in the Eeastern and adobe (a kind of dried mud) in the Western hemisphere. The difference in building material chosen was due to differences in geological formation and climatic conditions. Where stone was abundant and the climate wet, stone was used. Where clay was abundant, stones scarce and the climate dry, adobe was used. Hewn planks were used only in the localities where timber was abundant.

Smelting and the making of bronze first made its apperance in this age the smelting however being confined to the soft native metals such as copper, tin and lead.

The domestication of animals brought a change in the methods of land transportation, crude sledges drawn by animals now made their appearance. Metal cutting tools, mostly of bronze, made possible larger boats of hewn timbers, and the weaving of fabrics made possible sails for boats Sail boats made their first appearance during this age.

The agricultural village life brought a greater variety and abundance of food material, which made famines and pestilence less frequent. The improved methods of transportation stimulated industrial development and increased the fecundity of the race.

The domestication of animals led to the making of fabrics of a wool nature, altho there are no wild wool bearing sheep. Wild sheep have only a long coarse hair, which by man's selection has been improved into the wool as we know it today. The same is true of the mohair of the angora goat.

Man became a herdsman with the domestication of animals. He located in such localities as furnished pasturage for his herds and flocks. The extent of the range was limited by the necessity of the herdsman to get his flock back to the village fold at night. Wild animals were not the only marauders. Along with the development of agriculture and herding developed also a group which found it easier to steal a herd or a crop than to raise one. Here is the genesis of the military system. Conflict over herds and pasture land was the beginning of territorial wars.

The thirteenth chapter of Genesis gives a complete account of these early conflicts over pastures, and thus contains internal evidence that the book deals with a period of social development corresponding to the middle age of barbarism.

Domestication of herd animals, with the consequent necessity for definite pastures, further developed village life, out of which developed the Patriarchal Family and monagamous marriage. The Patriachal Family was a group family,) based upon blood relationship subservient to the authority of the oldest man—the paterfamilias or father of the family. He was also called the senex, from which we get our word senator, meaning old man. The world senile, which means childish, is also derived from the same source. The advent of the Patriarchal Family marked the passing of female supremacy and descent.)

Herding, agriculture and village life was the foundation out of which evolved the institution of private property in land, substance and slaves, and the Patriarchal Family, with its consequent laws of inheritance based upon the right of primogeniture; this in turn made monogamy an economic necessity.

The right of primogeniture means the right of the firstborn son of the Patriarch to inherit all the property of the family, including his father's younger children. This made him the owner of the group and its substance. He ruled by the right of possession, and then as now, his subjects were taught to be "law abiding" to constituded authority. Here in middle barbarism was laid the genesis of the class-struggle between the sons of the ruler and the sons of the ruled.

Tahe Patriarch was a warrior, maintaining his authority by his physical courage. He surrounded himself with a primitive army of professional warriors whose duty it was to repel invasions and keep slaves in submission. There were no wars for democracy in those days!

Medicine men, priests and prophets in this Age organized themselves into primitive groups for offense and defense. They maintained themselves in power by preaching subservience to the slaves and lauding the virtues of the Patriarchs. Primitive religious systems developed as a tribal or state function, the Patriarch over at the head of the political, industrial and religious institutions.

The institutions of middle barbarism were, private property, chattel slavery, laws of inheritance, monagamous marriage and federated tribal organizations of a religio- political nature.

It may be stated as a general law that each Age of social evolution will be shorter than the one which preceeded it The duration of historical epochs is in inverse radio to the rate of increase in the rate of population. The rate of increase of population is dependent upon the ease with which food and life's necessities may be acquired. Thus as the tools of production improve the ages of historic evolution shorten.

*) The first book of Job contains a complete account of the ravishing of the herds by mauraders.

) In its primary meaning the word family had no relation to the married pair or their children, but to the body of slaves and servants who labored for its maintainance and were under the power of the paterfamilias.

) In two forms of the family, the consanguine and the punaluan, paternal power was impossible. When the gens appeared in the midst of the punaluan group it united the several sisters with their children and descendants in the female line, in perpetuity, in a gens, which became the unit of organization in the social system it created. Out of this state of things the syndyasmian family was gradually evolved and fluctuating, then commenced, and it steadily increased as the new upward progress of society. When PROPERTY BEGAN TO BE family more and more assumed monogamian characteristics with the CREATED IN MASSES and the desire for its transmission to children had changed descent from the femalel ine to the male, a real foundation for paternal power was for the first time established."—Lewis H. Morgan's "Ancient Society" (Kerr edition) p 478.

Echoes of Secy. Wilson's Ruling

— By Paul Hanna,
Staff Correspondent, The Feder. Press.

WASHINGTON.—Secretary Wilson's ruling in favor of the Communist Labor Party of America is a kick that sends Attorney General Palmer reeling a long way toward the end of his game of bluff, bluster and secret persecution of political opinion.

That part of the department of justice which received the full force of the blow is represented by Francis P. Garvan, assistant attorney general, in special charge of witch-burning under the New Freedom. It was Garvan who said of the destitute wives and children of men deported on the Buford that they were better off without such men, no matter what their suffering and privation. Garvan is also author of the celebrated statement that the illegal raids conducted by his office had "created a belief in God" among the "infidel" agitators for economic justice.

Garvan more than any other man in the department of justice, is held responsible for leading Palmer up the bling alley of political bigotry where he now finds himself. There is recognition that the jig is up in Garvan's furious outcry: "Every raidical I. W. W., communist or whatnot will now find in the Communist Labor Party a haven where he can continue agitation without abandoning one of his theories or purposes."

The anguish of Palmer and Garvan is enhanced by their chilling apprehension that the White House will sustain Secretary Wilson unless the department of justice shall lay its cards on the public table and there show by argument and the law why men who aim at drastic alteration of our institutions by peaceful, constitutional means should be declared outlaws.

It is reliably reported that Secretary Wilson's sensational decision is merely a sequel to the recent cobinet meeting at which Palmer tried and failed to convince the president that seizure without warrent, imprisonment without trial and deportation without evidence were the proper and American way of dealing with persistent agitators against the rule of plutocracy.

Two facts are known. Louis F. Post wrote out his resignation when as acting secretary of labor, he began his policy of releasing aliens against whom Palmer could produce no evidence except loud-mouthed innuendo and newspaper headlines.

William B. Wilson is ready to quit as secretary of labor if, without considering the facts of the law, the White House should give its support to Attorney General Palmer and Garvan.

Politically considered, Palmer has been utterly isolated for the time being. As a candidate for president he has been shown to have no following anywhere. From the A. F. of L. cabinet to the I. W. W. he is detested by labor. Federal judges denounce him from the bench as a ridiculous tyrant. All the middle-class liberals who once supported this administration despise and revile the attorney general. Aside from Judge Gary's following and a few liberty baiters in Congress he stands absolutely alone.

To a self-respecting man in Palmer's place there is only one course open. He must meet and disprove the labor department's indictment of his methods and force the President to fire both Post and Secretary Wilson, or he must resign himself. That is, if he is a self-respecting man.

But nobody familiar with his official course charges Palmer with being that. His real calibre is shown in the so-called movement by Congress to impeach Post. To the extent that the impeachment effort had a basis at all, it was founded upon Palmer's tale-bearing about the department of labor. Fools and knaves in the House took up the charges and instituted hearings. Post's counsel sat through the imitation Lusk proceedings, and calmly waited for their chance to refuse the slander and to present their client as a witness in his own defense. All this time the attorney general kept far in the background. He has not dared associate his name or his office directly with any of the charges against Post. He has known that facts and the law were with Post, and has studiously avoided a direct encounter.

That spectacle of shuffling evasion gave Secretary Wilson his final measure of the attorney general, who stood revealed as a man afraid to finish what he had started. Members of Congress who began the proceedings found themselves marooned with Palmer, unable to proceed without being faced by the man they strove to destroy. So they tried to duck out of the whole mess by concluding the hearings abruptly.

At such a moment Secretary Wilson strikes the hot iron with the sledge of his Communist Labor Party decision. Let Palmer dodge the sparks if he can.

The Miner and Sapper

The insatiate desire of capitalism for profits and yet more profits, its unquenchable thirst for unearned increment, its demand from industry of the last "pound of flesh" is undermining the foundations of the nation. Industry, the foundation upon which is built such civilization as we have, has become merely a means of fattenning the parasites of society, the exploiters of labor. American institutions are crumbling and ready to tumble into chaos due to the intensified coinage of profits from the nation's resources and labor.

In the imminent collapse of the economic and social structure, Miss Columbia, emblem of our one time liberaties will be stood on her head amid the debris. Her tears will avail nothing. For after all, she stood only for a fiction, or at least for that which became a fiction when the class struggle between the makers and takers of wealth became acute. The setting sun of our once pround liberties is revealing in the glow of its last rays how fictitious indeed, were these liberties. In fact, we know that they were not liberties at all-merely privileges granted to the workers by capitalism and the capitalist state — granted just so long as the workers remained in ignorance how to use them for their own class interests. The moment the workers began to use them for themselves and against the capitalist class, they were taken from them. The dictatorship of the capitalist class, acting thru its government, police, court and Congress annulled these "liberties". They ceased to be. THAT sun can rise again only in a world controlled by the workers.

Communists have no tears to shed because these things are so. They are the products of the development of capitalism. They were born in the era of capitalism's beginning, they will die with capitalism and what is good in them for the worker's will be resurected by them in the building of the new Industrial Democracy that must follow Capitalism.

Liberty, free speech, free press, cannot exist in a society built upon slavery of the workers to the owners of industry. Such an incompatibility is unthinkable. And because this is so, they have been ruled out by the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie. So-called liberals and other straddlers may weep and rave as this sun sinks behind the horizon, their tears will be lost in the sea of turmoil that is rising.

Only thru the collapse of capitalism and all its institutions can real freedom be born to the working class. Workers should hail as presageing this collapse the destruction by capitalism of these fictitious "liberties".

Socialist Party Convention Betrays the Revolution

Opposed by but a small minority of "reds" and "centrists" the socalist Party in Convention at New York last week completely eradicated from its program and principles the last vestige of revolutionary spirit and came out openly and enthusiastically for a program of compromise, fusion and "yellow" socialism. The strength of the "red" element left in the Socialist Party since the split in the party last september, when, at Chicago the Communist and Communist Labor Parties broke away from the Socielist Party, was seen on the first day of the Convention in the election of Morris Hilquit over J. Louis Engdahl for Chairman by a vote of 91 to 29

The election of Hilquit was a test case which indicated the comparative strength of the two factions and all questions before the convention brought out nearly the same vote upon the floor. For the first time in years the conservatives had everything their own way. Having eradicated from the Socialist Party practically all opponents to their long loved principles of compromise and political trading, they proceeded to spread a path of bright yellow before the feet of the American workers.

Fight on declaration of principles.

As might have been expected, the real fight of the two groups centered upon the declaration of principles. According to a decision of the convention of last year a committee was appointed to draft a Declaration of Principles for sunmission at this time. This draft was brought in by Morris Hilquit, who after reading it moved its adoption. A minority declaration was submitted by the opposing group thru Louis Engdahl backed by the Illinois delegation and scattering support of radicals. A bitter fight ensued taking up some five hours of debate before the final vote adopting the Hilquit draft settled the matter.

Declaration, a "vote catcher".

Referring to the mildness of the Hilquit draft, which declares only for political action, supplemented by industrial action by the workers, Engdahl charged that the purpose of those who had framed the report was to create something that would appeal to the Non-Partisian League and the Labor Party and, that some of its sponsors would even go forther to catch votes and response from "sympathetic" groups. It was in the paragraph of Engdahl's substitute declaring in a some what miled form for "the dictatorship of the proletariat" as a transitional tactic of the workers against the bourgeois, that the artilery of the majority was directed. "The dictatorship of the proletariat", declared Hilquit is not Socialist doc trine, besides being inconsistent with the rest of the preamble, we cannot speak to the workers vaguely of the class struggle, wage slavery etc."

The platform, declared Samuel Holland of Chicago, "contains nothing but nice phrases", while another member of the minority faction stated his opinion that it read like a high school essay. Hilquit's rejoinder was that the platform was being opposed not because it was too academic but because of the absence in it of certain well beloved phrases. He claimed that the basis for the platform was the assumption that the Socialist Party was a party of political action and intimated that it was criticized because its opponents found in it no suggestion of more "violent" methods.

No dictatorship for Berger.

The fight for a declaration for bourgeois "democratic" methods to be pursued by the workers during the transition stage from capitalism to socialism was soon brought to a close when Victor Berger arose and enlarged upon the possibilities of success for a third party in American politics. "I don't believe in dictatorship of any kind" he said, "I am for democracy.

Why do we have a convention every year for anyhow? To sprout wings-left wings. I belong to the center myself".

Tucker, who argued that the Hilquit report was evidently framed to get by the Department of Justice, urged the necessity of a dictatorship of the proletariat in order ot conquer the bourgeois with as little violence and bloodshed as possible. Irving M. Weiss, of New York, declared his opposition to dictatorship of any body whether it be that of the Bolsheviki in Russia or of the capitalist class of America. For this statement he received hisses from the gallery.

James Oneal probably voiced the sentiments of the majority as fully as any when he attacked the world "dictatorship" and declared that the time and conditions that favored the Russian revolution must be studied before any attempt was made to adopt Russian methods.

"Let it go through the country that you favor a dictatorship of the proletariat and you will cease to be a political party," he said. "Adopt such a resolution, and you must do your work underground, for you will be driven underground by Sweet and Albany and the politicians at Washington.

"Bourgeois democracy, with all its shams and illusions, permits in normal times an honest and fair discussion. To espouse the dictatorship program would turn every such democracy into an absolute autocracy."

The vote upon the principle of a proletarian dictatorship as a fundamental tactic of the revolution was 103 to 33.

Severs connection with Third International.

One of the principles laid down by the Third (Moscow) International as a basis for membership in it of Socialist and Revolutionary parties and groups of all countries is the adoption of the principle of the dictatorship of the proletariat as a tactic during the transition stage from capitalism to socialism in order to the quicker place all power in the hands of the workers and to destroy with as little violence as possible all opportunity for bourgeois counter revolution against the workers.

The recent referendum of the socialist Party membership upon affiliation with the Third International by a vote of 3 to 1 with certain reservations will be discarded if the platform adopted at this convention is adopted by the rank and file. That it will be adopted goes with out saying. The Socialist Party thus definitely places, itself outside the real revolutionary movement of the world and becomes a party of mild reformistic if not reactionary measures.

The "Party of Debs", but will he lead it?

With the nomination of Eugene V. Debs as its candidate for president and Seymour Stedman as Vice-Presiednt the convention closed its deliberations. The question now is, will Debs accept the nomination? Opinion is divided as to what his decision will be, Communists point to Debs' statement before he was sent to prison, when in many speeches in Ohio and other states he voiced his entire approval of the Bolsheviki and their methods of gaining control over the capitalists and bourgeoisie, as bearng out the assertion that he would not degrade his revolutionary spirit by accepting the nomination.

Speaking of the victories of the Bolsheviki in conquering the enemies of the workers, Debs said in an article in The Class Struggle, of which he was one of the editors, in the issue of February, 1919, "They are setting the heroic example for world-wide emulation. Let us, like them scorn and repudiate the cowardly compromises with our own ranks, challenge and defy the robber class power, and fight it out on that line to victory or death! From the crown of my head to the soles of my feet, I am Bolshevik, and pround of it. The Day of the People has arrived".

Will Debs repudiate that statement by accepting the candidacy of the party which has emasculated its platform to the etxent of rejecting the principle which Debs accepted, advocated and which constituted one of the charges against him by the capitalist class courts and for which he was sent to prison?

Victory Foreseen in Communist Labor Cases in California

— By J. G. Reed. —
(Special to "The Toiler")

OAKLAND, CAL., April 29, 1920.—We won! Yes, in spite of a six months campaign of poison gas slinging by the Capitalist press of these Bay Cities, in spite of the worst kind of slimy tactics and propaganda by the "best citizens" of this community, in spite of having our headquarters raided and wrecked by patriomanics and police officials in the name of One Hundred Percent Americanism, in spite of being framed-up twice by the Oakland police, the Communist Labor Party in the case of the State of California vs. James H. Dolsen succeeded in convincing six men on a jury that the party was a legal organization and the jury was dismissed because of "failure to agree"!

"A funny sort of a victory," I hear you repeating, but wait—

Anita Whitney was convicted! John G. Wieler was convicted! Both were Communist Labor Party cases, and—

James H. Dolsen converted six men, half a jury, to the idea that the Communist Labor Party is perfectly legal. And furthermore—

Anita Whitney's case was tried as an ordinary criminal case. She admitted membership in the Communist Labor Party; she admitted having ideas contrary to the administration, but she lost out by not attempting a defense of the party. Her lawers avoided the issues in the case, and defended the defendent personally. The same was more or less the case with that of Comrade Wieler.

On the other hand, Comrade Dolsen, State Secretary, Communist Labor Party, defended the party, and incidenitly himself. He got the court to admit it was not a criminal case. And he defended the case as a social one, or still better a political and industrial.

The victory was a clean cut one. Not one principle did he compromise. The court was turned into a schoolroom where lessons in economics, tactics, propaganda, and organization were fully discussed. Capitailsm in all its horror was laid bare. The nakedness of the violence, terror, and persecution was shown to the world in all its hideousness, but not one word of the damning evidence appeared in print in the prostitute press. Their publicity was done earlier in the days of the Inquisition, and they were determined to keep the first impression intact in spite of the truth.

Day after day I sat in this Court of "Justice", only during this case the court was transformed into a schoolroom, and followed the evidence as it was unfolded, closely.

During the first two weeks the schoolroom was in charge of Professors Myron Harris (Prosecuting Attorney) and Fenton G. Thompson (Inspector of Police and head of the "Loyalty Squad"). They conducted courses in Law Prostituting (commonly known as juggling the law), and also gave very good lessons in "How To Perform The Gentle Art Of Frame-up", in good Fickert-ian style.

First they produced a young reporter who attended the first State Convention of the Communist Labor Party. He described the setting of the convention in the ill fated Communist Labor Party Building, identified reports, resolutions, and speakers attending the convention; swore to having "seen" contraband books on Syndicalism, Sabotage, and the I. W. W., and testified that the assemblage sang an "awful" song entitled "We'll Make the Bolsheviks Victorous", and another one that ended, "While Gene Lies In Prison For Us All". The Songs, to be sure, were enough to damn us for life. Think of any convention in a land of the free wanting to make the "majority victorious", or making "Soviets victorous"! How criminal! And to think that a convention of American workingmen would "stoop so low" as to pay homage in song to a "common prison rat"! What kind of a people could sing, "In a Living "HANDS OFF RUSSIA" DEMANDS McBRIDE.

— By Helen Angur —

NEW YORK.—Several thousand people in Carnegie Hall rose to their feet and cheered for a full minute when Isaac MacBride, journalist and lecturer recently returned from soviet Russia, cried: "It's time to call a halt to this murder and say, 'Hands Off Russia!'"

The purpose of the meeting, which was held under the auspices of the Peoples' Freedom Union, was to demand the immediate resumption of trade with soviet Russia. That demand was voiced from hundreds of throats at the climax of MacBride's description of the titanic miseries caused by the economic blockade by the allies.

"I saw soldiers of the Red Army whose heads had been blown to pieces with shrapnel, bandaged with newspapers," he said. "I saw great fellows gritting their teeth to the ordeal of having arms or legs amputated without the mercy of anesthetics. I saw little children, nourished on the country's best as the strategic resources of the future state, gradually sickening and dying because that best is not enough for them. The country has no drugs, no bandages, and pitifully little food."

"Russia has learned to go hungry and still defy the world against taking her liberty away. The rank and file are dying now for the preservation of that liberty, and for the existence of the soviet state.

"Lenin told me that if he or Trotzky should go out into the streets and advocate the overthrow of the soviet, they would not last 24 hours alive. The rank and file were in arms in March 1917, and they overthrew the czar's regime. In November by power of the same arms and the same will they overthrew the Kerensky government. Tell me, if the armed proletariat of Russia was opposed to this government, do you suppose it could stand for a moment against the power of arms and will?"

Norman Thomas, editor of The World Tomorrow, and Harriet Stanton Blatch, of the Emergency Committee for Russian relief scored the treatment of Russians in America by the present administration. One thousand dollars was contributed to the fund for technical aid to Russia.

SKYGACISMS

HE STILL HARPS ON THE SAME OLD TUNE.

Times have changed wonderfully in the last forty years. New methods of production, transportation and distribution have been installed everywhere. New business alliances and new businesses are everywhere. Everywhere that production has passed the hand-tool stage Capitalism has flourished and the class-struggle has become intensified. Forty years ago while industry was in the craft age Sammy THE Gompers had a lovely little tune of "reward our friends and punish our enemies" that he played on every possible occasion. Today after forty years of dickering, compromise and often downright betrayal of the best interests of labor he is still whanging away on the same old tune.

Times have changed, Samuel, and I very much fear that you will either have to put on a new record or step down and out, making room for one who will put on a new record. Labor cannot reward your friends, Samuel—for your friends are all enemies of labor. Labor will not punish your enemies for YOUR enemies are (generally speaking) Labor's best friends.

FROM CAUSE TO EFFECT, AS WE MIGHT SAY.

The other day I happened to glance at a little booklet put out to boom some pillpeddlers business, and I read of the following tragic case:

"Case No. 37, J. H. age 56, banker by occupation. Been addicted for many years to alcholic dissipation. Suffered in his younger days from all the venereal diseases." etc. etc.

Get that "banker by occupation"?

And there isn't the slightest possibility of a doubt that he was held up to the youth of his city as a model for them to copy. A model of respectability and all the trimmings! Bah!

He had the cash and theprestege so he could scatter the seeds of "all the venereal diseases" and no doubt at the same time contribute liberally to the local church to hire a pulpit pounder to peddle moralistic platitudes to the dupes of the "age of respectability"!

He could fool society but the same booklet says "the past eight years he has been completely crippled" thus proving that while he could pull the wool of his sham respectability over the eyes of a fool society he could not fool nature—so he is paying the price. Let's drop the filthy thing right here with a warning to beware of the pseudo-respectable when there is every reason to believe their respectability is no greater than the halo reflected by the nature of his occupation and the size of his bankroll.

A STORY THE S. E. POST WON'T PRINT.

A few weeks ago the POST featured a story written by the Govenor of Kansas to the effect that he, the great governor of Kansas had caused to be enacted into law a bill which would forever make strikes and lockouts an impossibility in the Grasshopper state. Plutepress everywhere copied and commented upon the Kansas anti-strike bill, in envious terms, implying that similar measures should be enacted in all states. The bill in effect was a legislative attempt to legalize slavery and the workingclass of Kansas were not fooled about the measure. This morning paper carries the following story;

"Almost complete paralysis of the Kansas Coal Industry is reported today. The announcement at the headquarters of the coal operators that only four steam hovels were working. No deep mines were working, the miners quitting work in protest against the imprisonment of Alexander Howit for contempt of the new state industrial court."

LOST STRAYED OR STOLEN.

Lost, strayed or stolen from the people of America — one People's Peace. The last heard of this Peace was along about the time of the springing of the now forgotten fourteen pointless points. A People's peace can easily be recognized as it is always out in the open and all the negotiations are carried on honestly, openly and with full pitiless publicity. Anyone knowing of the whereabouts of a People's Peace anywhere on the Western Hemisphere, please notify us at once.

The first chapter of Genesis tells us that God separated the light from the darkness the first day and then three days later made the things which gave light—the sun and moon—and he made the stars also! "For signs and for seasons". Still in what we call the enlightened twentieth century, many are the foreheads which are humbled in the dust before the absurdities of that old book.

Maybe prohibition will work — and maybe it won't. Noah was on the Ark for an hundred and twenty days—with not a saloon in sight—and the very first thing the old rounder done after the ark found a resting place was to get on a regular "bust". It was during that historic drunk that the negro came into existence (according to the inspired scriptures!)—Ham, a white boy, son of Noah, a white man, laughed at his father's drunken antics and got the old man mad. Then Noah the white man called down the curse of God upon his son and turned him black—and sentenced him and his descendants to an eternity of slavery to the white race. A rotten story—but good bible. Ask your pastor, He knows!

VICTORY IN CALIFORNIA

Hell Lives The Gene We Love So Well", but a bunch of moral perverts? After such "damning" testimony the court pitied us, the prosecutors looked solumn, and the bourgeoise in the audience looked awed, while the reading of the verses brought to our minds again the tune, and we hummed the song to ourselves over and over again, and smiled in contempt at the insidious interpretations placed upon the song and its heart rending lines.

William F. Kyle, chief raider of the "Loyalty Squad", testified that he made two raids upon Loring Hall, Communist Labor Party Hall, and a like number at the State Headquarters, a block away, bagging seven tons of literature, correspondence, files, and supplies. He swore that on November 18th, on the night of the first raid, he "seized" a half dozen copies of William Z. Foster's book on "Syndicalism", that were offered for "sale" at the literature counter. These books were used as the chief evidence against us. The defense, however, proved to the jury that these books were never in the building on November the 18th, and that they were planted by the police a few months later, and seized in the January 5th raid. This little bit of applied frame-up did more to discredit the prosecution than any thing else.

Upon cross examination, the defense was denied the right to show that the raid was illigal, that the material was siezed and confiscated without the use of a customary search warrant, nor to show willful and malicious destruction of property by the raiders. The reason for this is obvious. The raid was illegal; they could not produce a search warrant. They could not afford to let it be known publicly that "force, violence, terror, and sabotage", the identical charges used against the Communist Laborites, was used solely by the police against the defendants. In the State Office an American Legion man was knocked through a glass door and beaten into insensibility because he protested against the looting of the office by members of the police department. He was laid up in the hospital for days, and months later he lost the temparary use of his mind as a consequence of the brutal beating. This man was tried and acquitted of resisting an officer, when the circumstances of the affair was heard in open court.

Then in rapid succession each one of the defendents were called to the stand as "witness for the prosecution" to identify documents, signitures, propaganda, etc. As the defendents, unlike the prosecutors, had nothing to hide, they "did their bit" willingly.

Then the bunk began. To show that the C. L. P. was out to "overthrow the government by force and violence" they brought forth the Constitution and Platform of the party and pointed out to the jury that the C. L. P. endorsed the principles of the Third Internationale, and read in the Manifesto of the tactics of the Bolsheviki in wresting the government from the hands of the despotic Czar, and the tyrant Kolchak, being careful to avoid reading the principles, the part endorsed by the party.

As the Communist Labor Party recognized the I. W. W. as an industrial union and gave them credit for spreading much good material on the subject of one big unionism, they attempted to show that we singled out the wobblies from the list of half a dozen industrial unions, and indorsed them. With that they brought in what they termed the "propaganda and example of the I. W. W.", which consisted of hair spliting tales of crime, sabotage, violence". All their literature on sabotage, direct action, strikes and the like were introduced into the court as evidence. They also brought an exconvict by the name of Dimond, who claimed to be secretary of the Fresno local of the I. W. W. He testified that the wooblies believed in sabotage, strong arm-crews, violence, direct action, mass action, and the overthrow of the government by "illegal methods". What has this got to do with the Communist Labor Party? you ask. Why, didn't the C. L. P. indorse the I. W. W., and doesn't the I. W. W. believe in violence, and didn't the Communist Labor Party indorse violence when they indorsed Wobblyism? Such is the case of the prostitution, excuse me, prosecution

Dolsen, acting as his own attorney proved that the police used illegal methods in raiding the halls; that the persecution was a well laid plot of certain interests to do away with radical organizations, that the police framed-up the party when they planted books on "Syndicalism" in the hall; that the prosecution deliberately misconstrued the meaning and intent of the Constitution and platform of the party; that they couldn't convict the party on seven tons of literature and material stolen from the party headquarters, but had to bring in another organization, I. W. W., to do the work; that "mass action", "direct action", and "revolutionary action" did not carry with it the meaning of force and violence; that the Communist Labor Party was a political party and that the prosecution should be tried and convicted on every count charged against the defendent.

In another article, I will fully go into the details of the case presented by Dolsen, the attorney, trying the selfsame Dolsen, the defendent.

Suffice it to say that we won a great victory and that the way is paved for a complete victory next time.

As to the other cases: Miss Whitney is out on bail pending her appeal. We expect to get Comrade Wieler out pending appeal before the week is out. The following Comrades go to trial on the following dates if discontinuances are not granted: J. H. Snyder, May 3; J. A. Ragsdale, June 1; John C. Taylor, June 1; C. Alward Tobey, June 15; Edric B. Smith, June 1; Alanson Sessons, June 15, Clarence Tobey, July 1, J. O. Reed, Aug. 1; P. B. Cowdery, still in the police court for "lack of evidence". Dolsen will be retried June 1st.

The Private Detective — [illegible]

This is the second installment of a letter to President Wilson by Stephen A. Doyle, revealing in part the iniquitous system of spying that has been built up in America by private agencies.

"Now, my dear Mr. President, this condition has been spread by private detectives to the four corners of our continent, and those who operate in the open are taken for men from the department of justice. In fact, they advertise themselves as such. If time is not taken by the forelock and private detectives' agencies wiped out, as ex-President Roosevelt suggested, their foul tactics will result in open revolution.

"This is the only nation in the world that tolerates such special privileges. In London they would be arrested and thrown in jail for impersonating an officer. Compare the London strike. I quote from Lord Northcliffe, London Times, October 7, 1919:

"'There are just one or two facts I would like my American friends to realize about what has been the greatest strike in the history of organized labor. This strike on the side of the railway men and of the government as regards methods of meeting its difficulties was so well organized that not one life was lost, not one person was hit by a bullet, and there was not as much roughness in the streets as there is on a public holiday in a great city.

"'Ten years ago, when I acquired control of the London Times, this ancient institution was known as an open shop. It had never allowed trade unionism. I expressed my urgent wish to the mechanical staff that they should become members of the various labor unions. There are now members of 15 different unions working in this and every newspaper office in Great Britain. I believe that the labor unions make for smother relations and without labor unions last week our strike would be a civil war. Here is an example for America, etc., etc.

"No private detectives here— that's why.

"November 1, 1919, $40,000. Just think of it! It was paid to Flanigan of the Thiel Detective Agency, by bankers and manufacturers of Chicago, state of Illionis, and a like amount paid to the other "Big Three" private detective agencies, and $150,000 more was divided among the other sixty agencies.

From the Inside.

"To show clearly their devilish activities, private operatives, known as (covered operatives) presented themselves to a president of one of the local unions; presented their "red cards" and asked to be allowed to speak, and were granted permission. One after another, they denounced the president (yourself) first, then flung the constitution to the four winds of heaven and took charge of the White House. A few days after their introduction came the unusual proposition. 'We will get into the plant, blow up the center machinery, and it will then take them six months to repair the damage.' The president of the local union refused, and they set about to get control of the union, consequently determined to be honest. Mr. president had to call a federal officer for protection. The president of the union until this day believes that bunch of covered private detectives to be true union radicals. What means has he of knowing differently? The motive was to dynamite the plant, kill the employes, the same as the Los Angels Times building.

"The chiefs were determined not to be outdone, as they endeavored to reach him through one of his own men, who made the following propostion:

"'It cost $30,000 to put in the big fuse. We can gain access to the building. I have it fixed with one of the watchmen, and I got a man that will dynamite the big fuse It will take three mouths to fix it. Give us $250 and will pull it off.' The president stood the acid test, saying: 'Be gone from me, Satan.'

"This miserable failure infuriated the superintendent of the works, so that he swung out his dragnet, got two of his perjurers to get in conversation with the labor leader, then went to the prosecuting attorney, swore that he had threatened their lives, and said he would burn up their homes and their families with them, and he was then and there arrested with attempting to commit murder an darson, and placed under $10,000 bonds, and on the black list. He is a foreigner, but a citizen, otherwise he would be on the 'ark.' Still some call this cussedness 'loyal' Americanism.

"I will give you one more specific case of the thousands I could relate:

"Bromelay Witkiewitz worked for a big corporation for 15 years. He is of Russian birth, but a fullfledged American. Physically, mentally and morally he is a perfect specimen of manhood; has a wife and five children. Private detectivees were employed at his shop, one of the spotters, under bonds of $20,000 for murder, reported Woitkievicz and he was discharged. Shortly after a strike was declared at the shop where he formerly worked. He walked down the street where the men were assembled and a private detective shot him, the bullet passing clear through his lungs. He was laid up in the hospital for three months, and his wife had to go out and work to feed the little ones, and in a delicate condition.

"He returned from the hospital and started to look for employment, but faced the black list. Just think—blacklisted by a murderer. A small firm finally took him in and employed him.

"On January 2, 1920, his house, 2223 West Twenty-first street, was raided. The raid was directed by the private detectives of his former employer, who poisoned the minds of the department of justice men. He pleaded his innocence and told them his wife was in the labors of childbrith, and he wanted to go for the doctor; but neither courtesy nor mercy was shown either him or his suffering wife, but he was bundled to jail leaving five little babes screaming in the ears of the bewildered and suffering mother. He landed at the jail, together with a bundle of "red" literature, supposedly. There he was subject to the infamous third degree. One selfstyled secret service man said: 'Joe don't you know when we had our picture taken at the hall? You know me all right.' Failing on this tact, he turned to the 'red' pamphlets. 'Look at this.' Written in Polish, sure enough, but it turned out to be booklets of the Sacred Heart Society, and on turning the first leaf the Master's bleeding heart was revealed. This enraged the captain of the police, who understood. He came forward and said: 'Did you fools ever see a man with the like of this in his house against his country? Go home, my man to your wife, quick. I'll vouch for you,' and he departed with a heavy heart.

Fighting the Unborn.

On his arrival home he found a new born child. It was then 2:15 a. m., but no doctor to care for child or mother so he had to go, and came pretty near the jail again as the same squad of legalized bandits were shadowing him, but he succeeded in saving the lives that will go to sustain our independence. "It costs millions of dollars per month to keep up this astounding spread of offices. With their numberless operatives, who pays them and what do they do? Abolish them—wipe them out—they are a menace to society.

"We cannot conscientiously say that organized labor is against a government, that they wish to control everything, even private and public officers. The fault lies in the dangerous reptiles who first gain the confidence of the employers by poisoning his mind with lies; then, on the other hand, they have their Judas characters in the ranks of organized labor. Their business is to spread the bubonic plague against the employers there, and so far they succeeded at the sacrifice of numberless innocent lives.

"I plead to you now for your country, as I did when the big railroad strike threatened the nation's commercial welfare in 1911, and the private detective menace has been allowed to increase until today it is virtually beyond control.

"I know the chief of the department of justice, Mr. Flynn, will agree with me—abolish them, they are dangerous. Having bribed churches and courts that they may set their hellhounsd on the innocent, unprotected people. "The System's" stifling and barbaric methods have ruled with a rod that has broken hearts and lives; driven numberless young girls to lives of white slavery; have driven the mothers to the destruction of the unborn babe, and slaughtered fathers, the bone and sinew of our nation, with a ruthlass hand that defies the possibility of curbing and have plunged its poisonous dagger into the bosom of 'the Goddess of Liberty' and is slowly but surely bleeding her to death.

"This 'system' is vexatious to the great majority of the people. In fact, vexatious to the entire nation, and should be dealt with from a sanctified viewpoint, reinforced by political authority, and abolished. Then private interests would be obliged to respect the honesty and efficacy of the department of justice, which is provided by our government to adjust the grievances of all; this would satisfy organized workers, and if not, why not, meet with the approbation of organized capital? It is up to to you to open the door of opportunity and find out.

"Pinkerton, Thiel and Burns, private detective syndicates, with one hundred offices in the United States of America, with 10,000 other local agencies, with 133,000 operatives, 75 per cent. under disguise, in labor organizations at an expense of $6,000,000 every 30 days, has rendered the department of justice of our government insecure, as well as a sewerage through which they drain their filth, and also made it a target of malignity. This should attract your most sincere thought and action. Open the door of opportunity to both the chosen representatives of organized labor and capital to enter into collective bargaining; that door, which private detectives have long since closed, in order to satisfy their own selfish 'lust for gold.'

"In conclusion, I wish to say that I have neither bias nor prejudice against any individual, but deem it my duty to draw your attention to this system, damnable and ungodly, and ask you to take steps to abolish it, and save our country from revolution, which they are endeavoring to bring on."

"Sincerely yours,

'STEPHEN A. DOYLE,

"Detective, 472-4 Transportation Building, Chicago, Ill."

LONDON, May [illegible].—The London dockers are the first organized group of workers to demonstrate their solidarity with Soviet Russia in its battle against the Polish imperialists.

The dockers have forced the unloading of the ship Jolly George, which was to have sailed today loaded with guns, planes and ammunition for the Polish army. All the munitions were unloaded into barges and the owners were forced to promise not to attempt to load any other ship with them.

The rank and file of the London dock workers are resolved to prevent all other attempts to send war supplies to any country at war with the Soviet republic.

It is learned here on excellent authority that arrangements are being made to supply the Polish armies with munitions through the agency of the American Red Cross.

Resentment against such action is very high in labor circles here. The question is being asked, "Is this what the money collected in the big drive last fall on a pretext of furthering Red Cross peace work is really being used for?"

The Black Sheep.

[illegible]

The next day Jack borrowed a row boat from a neighbor and rowed out to a little island in the lake, ostensibly in search of a fishing ground. Rudolph and Collins stayed in the cabin and busied themselves with their study of theoretic economics. Shortly after Jack was gone, Rudolph picked up the note book which he had used on his trip, and carelessly paged thru it. Then suddenly something he saw in its pages arrested this attention, and he began to read carefully the more or less illegible chirography in which Jack had penned his diary.

"I will tell you Ed." said he, addressing Collins who was busy with a volume of "The Data of Ethics by Herbert Spencer" "that kid has remarkable knack for observing things."

"He has that," agreed Collins.

"This trip ought to teach him a few lessons in the class struggle, for he surely reflected on what was happening. That is more than a good many of the slaves do. He is not of the ordinary sort."

"Hell! he knows that himself. That is what gives him the idea of the type conflict in the world. Didn't you hear him bawl me out the other day for posing as a second edition of Jesus Christ. I don't like that type stuff he dreams about, in fact I feel duty bound to deny it. But then he gets under my skin just the same. What do you find in that book?"

"Listen to this!" 'Dec. 30, Arrived at Red Lodge and went out to the job. Met five men coming out. They told me they had been on the job where I was going. I asked them how long they had been on the job, and it seems as none of them had stayed a week. All the information they could give me was summed up in three phrases. "Punk grub."—"Lousy bunks"—"Heluva boss". Does not look very inviting, but as I am nearly strapped I must dig in, that is if I am put on.'

"They are normal men, these workers I have just passed. They are strong and able bodied. Perhaps they have not much intelligence, but that is quite dispenable in ordinary work. But never mind I'll find out for myself just what I am up against.

"It is strange how these men blame themselves for their misfortunes. The doctrine of sin has warped even the brains of rough necks. Let me recall and write down some of their exact statements: This is one: "If I had saved my money I would not need to be looking for a job like that. I made good money a year ago and I blew it all in. Now I'm up against it. It's my own fault. I have nobody to blame." The poor fish. Their brains are the echo boxes of sky pilots. The skypilots teach them that they are totaly depraved and they swallow it. They only echo, they never think. I didn't think myself or I would not be here. — — — and yet in a way I did think, for Rudolph and Collins told me what I would be up against, but I did not believe them. I thought for myself. Did I? Like hell I did. My mind was echoing the advice of George and Herman, not to remain idle but to find a job. George and Herman were eastern men; they knew nothing of western conditions. On this point their advice was as good as the preacher's advice is about heaven. They had not been there. No I did no thinking. Damn me! I just believed without reflecting. But I'm in it, and I'll come out again with just one more lesson learned.

It's getting late in the afternoon. I am sitting on a large rock beside the railroad track as I write. It's three miles to the camp where I am to work so I had better be on my way. If any body should find these notes on my cadaver, I hope they'll send them to our local parson so that that good man may see that I have improved in language since I left home."

"That last part shows his mind's reaction to his early training," Collins commented.

"Get this," 'Dec. 31—Well I'm here and the first day is over. Night is settling over the mountains. I wish the night of eternity would settle on that boss. His name is Kelly. He is a powerful man from the ears down. If he ever had a haircut he'd be headless. He has splendid teeth. They are the only thing which supports his eyes. Oh yes, the camp! It is awful. Ramshackle old shacks. Lousy bunks. NO soap, no towels. Made a kick about it to some of the men but they are afraid to say anything for fear of being fired. Yet few of them stay more than five days. Some are canned each evening and others take their place in the morning. They don't keep them on the job long enuf to get acquainted with one another. Apparently you can't make them talk about improving conditions. They seem to have but one idea, and that is to make a stake and beat it. Every one is looking for his personal advantage. Collins would say they lack social sense. But why the adjective?"

"This place would make me good mistic if I didn't know that the boys are in the cabin, and George and Herman somewhere in the east," Rudolph concluded.

"God bless his homely hide," Collins remarked. That was as near to uttering a prayer as he had come in the last six bitter years of his life. Thus Rudolph ran along reading notes from the boy's book. It was a diary recording events, and making good hummed and philosofical comment. Suddenly he stopped reading aloud and continued silently for a few moments, then Collins stirred restlessly in his chair. "Well," he growled, "have the hinges of your jaws rusted. Why doncha read?"

"I am reading," Rudolph retorted.

"I notice that, but why hog it all to your self. There is no gas meter on your breath, is there?"

"Read it yourself," Rudolph said quietly, as he handled the book to his friend. Seated himself on a box by his side. Together they read Jack's letter to Olive Anderson, as he had written it in his note book while lost in the Coer D' Aleve Mountains.

"Ahem! So that was what was eating on him," Collins observed as he arose and went to the water pail for a drink. "That is what caused him to leave us, and go on that wild goose chase after a job. Do you know that I had a hunch, when that Jane was talking to him they were getting each others goat."

"Just wait till he comes back; we will tease the life out of him," Rudolph suggested.

"Nix on that stuff," the other replied. "I am only too glad to see that the kid is yet capable of dreaming. He will be awakened soon enough. "Let him have his dream." He pulled a pencil from his pocket and upon a blank leaf of the note book he wrote,

My Dear Miss Anderson:—

The enclosed pages were written by the boy who spoke to you while we were in jail at Anamoose. I just found them in his note book and feeling sure that he would never send them, I take the liberty to do so. I believe that you should know the deep impression your visit made upon our young friend.

His present address, should you care to write him is J. Thurston, Harrison, Idaho. Sincerely, E. C.

He tore the pages out of the book and together with his note addressed them to Miss Anderson, (Daughter of the real estate man) Anamoose, N. D.

"Are you going to send that to her?" Rudolph queried.

"I sure am," was the curt reply.

"You'll get a correspondence started between them."

"What of it".

"I'd hate to see him get interested in that Bourgeois mutt. It might even draw him back into that class. A skirt blindfolded many a man."

"Yes there is a possibility that she could draw him back," Collins agreed. "But if she can, he ougt to go back. On the other hand he might draw her out of the bourgeois class and make her a power to the radical movement. We need women. They are like queens in the bee hive of labor. Men naturally rally around them. The human female is a very potent yet much neglected factor in human organization. If all women were banished to Siberia I dare say that there would be a heavy male emigration in that direction in a mighty short time."

"Awe, you're crazy! Women are a detriment to working class organization. When men go on strike, they urge them to go back and scab. Their whole mind dwells on the present moment. The immediate safety and comfort for themselves and brats. That is all they think about. They have neither thot nor vision for the future. Safety here, and joy in heaven is the sum total of their psychology."

"Oh, shut up!" growled Collins. "If it weren't for a woman you wouldn't be in the world."

"If I weren't in the world I'd be a darned sight better off."

"The world would be, you mean," Collins retorted, as he put on his boots preparatory to going out.

"Quo Vadis?" queried Rudolph.

"To Harrison, to get this off on the next boat," he answered. "I'm going to set that kid's soul on fire, simply because it will stimulate his ambition. I feel sure that he will climb whether he goes into the capitalist or the working class. And I also feel sure that girl will help him climb no matter what class he is in." So saying he left the cabin and disappeared down the trail.

Rudolph stood at the cabin door and looked after the retreating form of his friend. "He is a puzzle, I tell you he is a puzzle," he told himself. "That is nothing but sentiment and I always said he didn't have any.

Ruminations of a Rebel.

— By Tom Clifford —

The premier howler of the bourgeoisie in these troublous times is George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post. Week after week he spouts his lamentations over the "unrest" that prevails, and spreads himself over two pages of his paper in a frantic effort to supply a remedy. George Horace seems to be all worked up over the nation's condition, and varies his fits by occassionally switching from denunciation of labor's demand for more of its product to seathing criticism of his own class. He is especially severe in his diagnosis of Congress, declaring that the safeguarding of bourgeois interests demand "business men" only at Washington. In a late issue he manifests considerable perturbation, over the Socialist doctrine of "the brotherhood of man," which he interprets "dividing up." George expresses an unwillingness to go "50-50" on anything, and especially in the performance of useful labor, and is real peeved over the idea that men of "ability" like himself, are

Be a Scab

The Chamber of Commerce of Cleveland is Johnnie-on-the-spot when the interests of its members, the employers and exploiters of some 200.000 Cleveland workers, are menaced. The switch men's strike, which all along was played up in the capitalist press as of little moment "settled" and all over "in a day or two", has gotten the goat, so to say, of the profit-takers. The "outlaw" strike, which refuses to be settled by promises has thrown the whole industrial machinery of the country out of kelter. Cleveland factories are not alone in closing their doors for lack of raw materials and shipping facilities. In the meantime the "outlaws" proceed to organize their own union and are making great headway.

The capitalist press reports that last week the Chamber mailed to 4.000 members in Cleveland a circular letter in which the statement was made that only 137 of the normal 293 switch engines in Cleveland yards were working and that many yards were worse handicapped. While it is agreed, says the statement that the switchmen have a just grevience, they are taking the wrong method to get it adjusted. No one would expect the Chamber of Commerce to say that a strike was ever justified. To strike is to stop production. To stop production is to stop profits. The stoppage of the bosses' profits is of course unjust and immoral from the profit-taker's viewpoint.

The purpose of the circular was not however, to settle the strike along the lines of fairness to the strikers. Its real purpose and the methods by which it hopes to accomplish the defeat of the workers was to have every employer of the city who harboured a railroader on his pay roll to "suggest" and "encourage" these workers to take the striker's places and start boosting profits as of yore. Workers generally know what this means. A "suggestion" to go scabbing coming from one's boss is tantamount to an invitation to quit. Thus by all employers following suit, it is hoped to drive the strikers back to their dangerous tasks at the same old rate of exploitation while the strike is being settled in a manner perfectly satisfactory to the Chamber of Commerce and exploiters generally.

In such illuminating manner is the Chamber of Commerce revealed as the arch-enemy of the workers — the voice and tool of the employing class to maintain the regime which is the source of its thousands of per cent profits wrung from the sweat and blood of the workingclass.

It is commendatory of the class consciousness of Cleveland workers that no large number have or will fall for this game in which only deeper enslavement awaits them. Six weeks of scab hunting have netted precious few so low in the scale of class consciousness and fellow feeling as to accept the offers of the employers to become scabs.

Another Fallacy

Now that the politician is abroad, the capitalist press loudly proclaiming the virtues of political action and politicians hungering for an opportunity to save the nation, we hear a good deal about the golrious ballot and its usefulness in the hands of a free people to bring about such change as they desire without resorting to any of the "violent" methods of an aroused constituency, such as mass action, strikes, etc.

It is safe to assert that the virtues which the capitalist apologists find in the use of the ballot reflect their desire for its exclusive use as a weapon by the workers. Else it would not advocate its use. If the public press had ever advocated any measure which actually benefitted the workers as against the capitalist class, we would be prone to listen to their advice in these troublous days. But we challenge it to prove that it ever in one single instance advocated any thing which would tend in one iota to change the status of the slave class and the master class.

When we consider the source of public information, how controlled by capitalism is the fountain from which the public receives its ideas, the school, the church, the daily capitalist press—when we consider the hold upon the minds of the people which this vile press has, then we begin to realize why it is so insistent upon the use of the ballot only as a means to bring about changes in the government and social conditions. It is perfectly safe in advocating its use. Does it not control almost completely the information which the public obtains and can obtain upon the issues at stake? It has no competitors. The workers, because of the pitifully small class-consciousness among them have no virile press, no powerful means of telling the truth about any public question. This is realized the moment a strike of importance takes place. Strikes are lost daily because the workers are unable to get the facts of the case before the workers of other localities and trades. The capitalist press is on the job every moment in every city of every land. It is fulfilling its mission of supporting without any hesitancy whatever course is most advantageous to the particular local capitalist group it represents and the capitalist system at large.

To prate of democracy, the free ballot and such like when the source of opinion and information is wholly on one side is preposterous and misleading. Where such inequality exists in getting information before the people, where one side is played up and the other down, where perversion is the rule and misinformation the purpose, what hypocricy to then advocate in smugly written editorials an extended use of the ballot by workers to bring about the establishment of conditions which make for freedom and progress!

In this, as in all other of its publicity is seen the hand of the profit-taker and exploiter. To fool the worker, to pervert the information he receives, if it cannot be absolutely controlled, is its function and purpose.

How satisfactorily to the master class it succeeds is seen in the prosperity in which it basks.

CHAPTER NINE.

Barbarism upper age.

The Upper Age of Barbarism began with the smelting of iron.

The smelting of iron made possible a greater variety of tools and weapons, particularly those having a keen cutting adge, such as knives, axes, swords, etc. With the greater perfection of tools came greater skill in the industrial arts. Technical knowledge depends upon technical instruments. Iron made technical instruments possible.

Keen cutting tools gave an impetus to woodworking. From the rolling of sections of logs, the idea of the wheel and axle evolved. This in turn had its effect upon land transportation, making the moving of heavier burdens possible. All primitive wheels were solid—being merely a section of a comparatively round log. The tendency of a section of log to split owing to the end thrust of the loaded axle, gave rise to the idea of binding the wheel with an iron tire. It is significant to note that Moses could not defeat the Hitites "because they had iron-shod wagons".

The development of the keen cutting tool and the institution of slavery gave an impetus to the building of larger boats. These were propelled by sails and also by large numbers of slaves chained to oars.

The shelter of upper barbarism was very similar to the former period except that the making of adobe had evolved to the burning of brick. The development of slavery and institutional life during this period gave rise to the more elaborate architecture of fanes and temples. These were usually built of brick, as the development of slavery was the ideal institution for the development of the brickmaking industry.

The coming of iron tools brought more improved looms, and cotton and flax fibres were added to the raw materials of weaving. The leisure, with its consequent desire for gaudy show which the institution of chattel slavery gave to the masters of that day, greatly stimuellated the of weaving. The art of dyeing fabrics came into existence at this time due to the necessity of having different coloured garments for the different castes — the masters wearing light, the priests, blue and the workers, red garments. Purple was also used by the masters as trimmings,—the insignia of mastery.

Nearly all races have their legend of a flood or floods. It is the consensus of opinion amongst scientists that these floods were due to one or both of two causes — the sinking of large portions of land areas beneath the waters of the sea, such as the legendary continents of Atlantis and Lemuria, or the flood waters due to the passing of the glacial period. These catastrophes overcame the Aryan race while they were passing thru their upper age of Barbarism, and perhaps greatly lengthened the duration of that age due to the annihilation of vast numbers of the people with a consequent retarding of industrial development.

We should not be unmindful of the fact that historical epochs of industrial evolution must not be confused with chronological history. Epochs of industrial evolution are based upon the mode of development of the tools of production of a given race. Thus while the Aryan race, and to a large extent the Mongolian race have developed far into civilization, there are yet races who today, live in barbarism and even savagery.

Improved methods of production and transportation gave an impetus to commerce. The complexity of social relations between the various tribes due to the necessities of commerce forced the federation of tribes into a closer organization for military protection against invasion from outside hostile hordes. This laid the foundation for the perpetuation of the military caste and gave origin to the military dictator or king. Thus the chiefs of lower barbarism became the kings of later periods.

It was during the age of upper barbarism that the Patriarchal Family developed to its highest power. The laws of inheritance made necessary the outward observance of the monogamous family relation. Monogamy while obligatory upon the part of the woman due to the fact that man ojected to bequeathing his property to another man's son, was usually never more than an outward show upon the part of man.

At this age the last remnant of female supremacy and descent vanished, due to the fact that private property was exclusively in the hands of the male. The Patriarchal Family marked the beginning of male supremacy and descent. This was a military necessity which grew out of the defense of property.

Military necessity developed the state. The state developed and conformed to territorial limitations which corresponded exactly with the industrial developments of the period when land was the unit of industry. Industry was then basically territorial, which gave rise to the present day political sub-divisions of the nations, based upon territorial lines.

SUMMARY.

The epoch of Barbarism is divided into three great ages, lower, middle and upper.

The lower age of barbarism began with the discovery of the art of pottery-making.

The middle age of barbarism began in the Eastern hemisphere among the Aryan Race with the domestication of animals and the development of agriculture. In the Western hemisphere among the Red race agriculture was developed without the domestication of animals. The American Continents seem to be devoid of animals suitable for domestication.

The upper age of barbarism began with the discovery of the art of smelting iron.

THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION

--- By Linn A. E. G

Mexico City, April 29, (By mail). — Is the Sonora revolution a Proletarian Revolution or not? If it is not so far, can it be made one? Are the leaders of the revolt real friends of the working class who for reason of prudence, supposed or actual, have avoided telling their whole aims to the public?

These questions are being debated with much intensinity by the labor organizations of Mexico and opinion is sharply divided.

It has been my belief all along that the northern outbreak is financed by American financial interests to pave the way, either for intervention or for annexation. The circumstances are suspicious. The revolutionists have made questionable bed-fellows in their efforts to overthrow Carranza. If they are not actually in the pay of Wall Street, it would seem they are but one set of politicians trying to oust another, and that they are doing precisely the thing that will deliver their country into the hands of the interventionists, even if that is farther from their intentions. Several American warships have been dispatched to Mexican ports ostensibly to protect American citizens and large numbers of American trops are being massed on the border. No sane person questions that intervention will come if the revolution drags out for a long period.

The Communist Party of Mexico, the one really revolutionary body in the republic, has issued a manifesto warning all workers to keep out of the squabble and to take no sides. The party feels that one side is not essentially superior to the other and sees no use in jumping from the frying pan into the fire.

At the same time, the Communist Party's manifesto explicitly declares that if it becomes convinced that a different course of action will be more conducive to Communist ends, it would change its tactics accordingly.

To date, we Communists are "from Missouri". We know that there are some in the Sonora movement who are excellent Radicals. We know that there are others in the movement who are just the usual lot of scaly, smoth-tongued, office-and-money-seeking politicians. We believe that the aggregation is getting arms from the United States. We know that Villa and Pelaez, both bandits who have long been in American pay, are with the Obregonistas.

We want definite assurance backed by facts and proofs, before we endorse, either conditionally or wholly, any such movement.

Meanwhile, these facts are submitted for what they are worth to the reader.

Gen. Plutarco Elias Calles, head of military operations of the rebels, was until a few months ago, Secretary of Commerce and Industry under Carranza. Defenders of Sonora say that Carranza appointed Calles to kill his popularity, knowing that he would probably make enemies among the workers, if he acted in such capacity. They claim that Carranza did everything possible to put Calles "in wrong" with the unions and that altho nominally an official, he really had almost no authority. He was not even allowed to name his own inspectors, it is said. In the big Orizaba strike he favored the strikers and succeeded in keeping Carranza from sending troops to break the strike. Finally, unable to accomplish anything for labor, he resigned rather than be misjudged by the workers. He is, I am told, a member of the Yucatan Socialist Party. An admirer of Calles said yesterday that "what Calles does not know about the international Socialist movement is not worth knowing," and described the large radical library that Calles has.

Governor Adolfo de la Huerta of Sonora, who has just been named "provisional President of Mexico" by the secessionists, is also reputed to be a member of the Yucatan Socialist Party and a real Radical. It is claimed that when the Bisbee miners were deported into the Arizona desert, de la Huerta provided refuge and protection for many of them who crossed the Mexico line. He also forced the Phelps-Dodge Corporation to pay decent wages and provide proper working surroundings for its employes in Sonora, and gave it such a scare that it went much farther than required and even built rest rooms, swimming pools, etc, for the workers!

Obregon, when Secretary of War under Carranza, initiated some radical measures, and at the time gained the reputation of a full-fledged Socialist. He commandeered coaches and horses in the street when needed during the revolution, imposed heavy taxes on merchants, provided a double tax when the regular payments were not met promptly, and punished some of the recalcitrant capitalists by imprisoning them in the penitentiary. A few were put to work at convict labor, cleaning streets in Mexico City. In his recent campaign, Obregon has made a principal appeal on his plank of restoration of land to the peons in small tracts, giving each family what it can properly cultivate and no more. Carranza promised land restoration to the masses but the promise has never been carried out except in isolated instances. Most of the cases of confiscation have simply resulted in transfer of the land from peons of the Diaz regime to generals and politicians in the favor of the administration.

On the other hand, it is believed by many that Obregon has lost most of his early Radicalism. His transactions with the Allies during the war, when he sold thousands of dollars' worth of "garbanzas" to Hoover, have dulled the edge of much of the enthusiasm that Radicals formerly entertained for him.

A friend of Alvarado and supporter of Obregon, trying to convince me that the workers of Mexico would fare much better if Obregon ruled the country than if Carranza's man, Bonillas came into power, reminded me of Carranza's action in breaking the general strikes in Mexico City and Tampico a year ago and of his appointment to the governorship of Quintana Roo, of the army officer who was responsible for the outrages against the Socialist Party of Yucatan. I answered that despicable as were these acts, we had no assurance that Obregon would do differently. Even if Obregon's impulses were friendly to the workers, he would not be free to obey them if he owed his elevation to power to the aid of American business interests.

The rejoinder was that Obregon will be as radical as possible when he gains power but that he will not spoil things by attempting too much at once and that he has permitted special stress to be put on his alleged friendship for the United States so that he would be left unmolested in waging his revolution. My reply was that it was not necessary for him to say things he did not mean, for American big Business hates Carranza so much that it would certainly do nothing to hinder any uprising against him. The mere public declaration by Obregon that he was trying to overthrow Carranza would have been enuf to guarantee immunity from trouble with Yankee monied interests.

There are many American Radicals, to say nothing of Mexican Radicals at home, who would join Obregon's ranks if it were not for these positive assurances by Calles and de la Huerta that property owners will not be troubled. My friend answered that it was true that the Sonoras had compromised with American interests in order to have Uncle Sam keep hands off and that, as a result, it would be impossible to socialize American property, altho other property would be socialized in short order. I could see little to be gained in that way. If American property is not socialized, what under the sun is there to socialize, anyway?

Presumably an authoritative statement of the aims of the Sonora insurgents is the "Plan of Agua Prieta", a manifesto issued in the city of that name April 23. The last article of the plan explicitly says:

"The supreme commander will afford all legal protection and enforcement of their legal rights to all citizens and foreigners and ESPECIALLY FAVOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF ALL INDUSTRIES, PUSINESS AND COMMERCE IN GENERAL."

Nothing very Bolshevistic about that, is there? If a Wall Street attorney had drafted the clause, he probably would not have used much different language than this very phraseology.

Nor is this all. We have the words of Governor de la Huerta of Sonora. The New York World telegraphed him for a statement as to the reasons for secession and the policies that the rebel government would prusue. In a telegram dated Hermosillo, April 13, de la Huerta closed by saying:

Under this principle, the entire public administration as well as ordinary commercial life, will be continued as before. The order of things remains unchanged and the entire state and government under my charge is firm in its purpose of continuing to accord, both to Mexicans and foreigners, all the guarantees conceded to them by the law of the land".

So impressed was the headline writer of the World with this declaration that he inserted in the head of the article, "Order Being Maintained; Business Life is Normal."

But let us now turn to the editorial pages of the San Antonio Light, an American paper that has never been guilty of anything but fierce hostility toward all forms of Radicalism and one near enuf to the border to know where of it speaks. An editorial a few days ago, captioned, "Why Obregon is Opposed", begins by quoting an unnamed person as saying that "Obregon is hostile to the anti-American policy of Carranza." These extracts are also significant:

"It was only when Obregon announced his international policy of friendship with the United States that the clouds began to gather... It is not so much because Obregon wants Mexico to attain such prosperity, as because he wants to accomplish that end thru the most natural and logical means—friendship and cooperation with the United States — that makes his election to the presidency so undesirable to Carranza. Obregon's platform is unique in the history of Mexican politics. Its chief plank is a pledge of friendship with the United States. No other candidates for the presidency of Mexico has ever gone before the people on such a platform... When Americans realize that Carranza's objection to Obregon is primarily a result of a conflict between their respective policies with respect to the United States — the one a policy of bigoted hostility, and the others a policy of liberal interchange of needs—the action of Sonora will not be looked upon as 'just another Mexican revolution.'"

Now, when the capitalist press of the United States, commends a foreign politician as manifesting "friendship for the United States", we may always understand that friendship to really be friendship for Wall Street.

The news that the bandit chief, Manuel Pelaez, who has so long lorded it over the Tampico and Tuxpam oil district, has joined in supporting Obregon with his bandid-soldiers, is also not without meaning. Pelaez, it is generally known, has been financed by the petroleum kings for some time. Let us take the words of a reasonable and reliable witness, L. J. de Bekker, the correspondent for the New York Tribune, whose articles were so fair that his paper would not accept then and he sold them to the Nation. On page 27 of "The Plot Against Mexico", de Bekker says:

"I said to the oil men: 'Why don't you shut off this blackmail and make your peace with Mr. Carranza? No doubt your stockholders could use to advantage the $200.000 a month you are giving Pelaez, and he doesn't seem to be delivering the goods.' 'We can't,' was the invariable reply. 'He would blow up our wells if we did. Besides. the state department at Washington knows each and every payment we make to Pelaez and approves it.'"

Two years previous, Carl W. Ackerman wrote: "Pelaez and his army—estimated at 3.000 to 27.000 men depending on the authority quoted—get $40.000 a month protection money from the oil companies." It appears that the oil companies in two years increased their retainers to Pelaez from $40.000 a month to $200.000 a month!

With this evidence of the relations of Pelaez with the petroleum kings, can we have much doubt as to the kind of man he would probably support in Mexican politics?

In this connection it is interesting to observe that the Sonora government has returned the Southern Pacific Railroad to its owners, after having taken possession of it. At the time of the seizure, some were jubilant at this exhibition of "Bolshevist tendencies." As a matter of fact, the Carranza government was going to seize the railroad and force the settlement of a strike, and the Sonorans seized it to get ahead of the Carrancistas. As soon as control of the state seemed certain and the strike was settled, the rebel officials turned the road back to the company.

Regarding Obregon personally, I may say this: As correspondent for various newspapers, as well as for my own satisfaction, I procured an interview with him in the latter part of January while he was spending some time in Mexico City. I submitted in writing five question and he agreed to send me by mail the answers. The first question was as to his opinion on prohibition; the second related to the restoration of land to the peons; the third, if Mexico ought to recognize Soviet Russia; the fourth, tariff reduction or free trade; and the fifth read, "Are you disposed to favor the socialization of the mines and industries of Mexico?" Some days later, I received typewritten and signed answers to three questions, but no answers to the third and fifth queries, the one about the recognition of Russia and the one about socialization of mines and industries!

I do not mean to say that I have had any more satisfactory experience with Bonillas and Gen. Pablo Gonzales, the other candidates. I have never been able to get them to committ themselves on these questions, either.

A word about Alvarado who, in an interview in the Hearst papers in New York, just declared that the rebel movement would control Mexico City within three months. I first met Alvarado a year or more ago when he was making plans to begin his daily, "El Heraldo de Mexico", in Mexico City. He had just returned from Yucatan where, after completing his term of office as governor, he turned over the reins to a self-picked successor. He was reputed to have done much for Socialism in Yucatan. At that time I knew less about Yucatan than I know now. I later learned that the brand of "Socialism" that Alvarado introduced on the penninsula, netted him several million dollars, and was merely a kind of reformist politics, manipulated mainly in his own interest.

During my first conversation with Alvarado, I expressed gratification that he was about to start a Socialist daily, for it was thus that I then understood his plan. He explained that it would not be a socialist daily for he believed it was necessary to go very slowly. "We must be 'smart'," he said with a knowing smile and in excellent English, and then he explained to me that in his judgment Socialism would not come in Mexico for a long time. He expected to see serious labor troubles in the United States in the near future and he believed that many American investors could, therefore, be induced to come to Mexico and go in business. Mexico would thus be developed by foreign capital while the United States was writhing in the throes of industrial disorder. Then, years later, when Mexico had been sufficiently developed, perhaps Socialism would come. But the country must go thru a period of capitalist developmetn first. There must, in other words, be economic exploitation first and economic emancipation later, and Alvarado was in favor of exploitation now! He added that he was going to have an English page in his paper—no Mexico City paper had one at that time—and that he hoped to gain a circulation among the American capitalists and business men in Mexico.

When the paper began publication, its policy was precisely what Alvarado had predicted. When I was arrested, fined and imprisoned for publishing a Spanish translation of Margaret Sanger's book on birth control methods, I went to Alwarado and tried to induce him to champion the cause of birth control editorially. He answered evansively, saying, "We must be careful", and that birth control was not popular in Mexico yet. I told him it would be popular if the people understood it and called his attention to the swarms of hungry, half-naked shildren that may be seen on almost every street of the city, asking if he did not think that a few children, properly fed and clothed, would be better than thousands of homeless, begging, potential criminals. But I could get no direct answer and the only thing the paper did for the cause was to publish a letter of a subscriber endorsing birth control. On the other hand it published a vicious article attacking me in connection with the birth control book, same appearing on its English page and being written by one Charles F. Phillips, then editor of that page. For this, however, Phillips was alone responsible, and later he retracted his attack. Shortly after, my sentence was revoked by order of Secretary of State Berlanga.

Still later, when the Socialist local of Mexico City adopted my resolution denouncing intervention and I sent it to an employe of "El Heraldo", who published it, Alvarado gave the employe a call-down and told him to keep out of print all reference to Socialist organizations of any kind in Mexico.

Possibly the policies of the organs of the two candidates, Obregon and Bonillas, ought to be mentioned in this connection. "El Monitor Republicano", the Obregon daily, has given extensive space to articles about labor unions dominated by Luis N. Morones, local presentative of Samuel Gompers, has shown the utmost friendliness for Gompers and the A. F. of L., and has studiously avoided any mention of the Bolsheviki government of Russia except in rare cases. "El Civilista", one of the three Bonillas organs, has a labor page and some time ago offered to publish any articles submitted by the Communist Party or the Mexican I. W. W. The offer was accepted with the distinct understanding that, since the Mexican Communists and the Mexican I. W. W. repudiate parliamentary action, they would not be obligated in any way to support Bonillas. Since then, articles on Communism, the dictatorship of the proletariat, etc., have been published, and no article, no matter how revolutionary, has been refused. This does not mean that "El Civilista" is a Bolshevist sheet nor that Bonillas is a Communist. I have seen and still see no real Radicalism in either camp. That there are some Radicals supporting Obregon and some others supporting Bonillas, is true. A larger number is supporting Obregon than Bonillas.

But as yet. I see in the activities of both sides merely the maneuvers of cunning politicians who are shrewd enuf not to antagonise the growing Radical sentiment of Mexico and instead, seek to lure it with revolutionary catch-words and saccharine deceits, into voting for this candidate or that.

The Sonora revolution is not today a Social Revolution. In it politicians, professional generals, bourgeoisie and some Radicals are standing side by side.

If the Mexican masses knew their own power, they could make it a Social Revolution, sweep into the discard all the sophists and soft-soapers on both sides, and, erect a Proletarian State under which exploitation and graft would cease.

They can do it! But will they?

Speaking of men of ability, wise men like George are wont to inquire, in a supercilious way, what Socialists would do with men of "ability." We'll handle them, all right. We'll put them to work and prove their ability by the quality of its product. However, there are some men of ability we might not be able to use, such as able boodlers, able burglars, able bandits, able bankers, able barons of business and able shooters of the "bull," like George Horace, f'rinstance. It is just possible that the interests of society would be best conserved by turning the ability possessed by the above enumerated gentlemen into other lines of activity. They might in time become able to make their own living, speak the the truth, drop their hypocrsy, and thus contribute to the general welfare of the new order of society. O, yes. We'll take care of 'em.

Among all the methods employed by the bourgeoisie to quell a threatened awakening of the working class the "red herring" is the favorite, for it has never failed to draw the attention of the workers away from their misery. Whenver signs of general discontent prevail, the master class send out an S. O. S., and immediately the fish is requisitioned and started on its mission. The Interchurch Movement is the particular "red herring" now being used as a soporific and it remains to be seen whether the workers will yield to its influence. They are asked to "Give God His Share." Since God has permitted the bourgeoisie to absorb all the surplus wealth, the wise worker will simply let Him look to those gentlemen for His share of the spoils. Of course the workers are not expected to respond to any marked extent financially. The master class will cough up the "dough," and be satisfied with its investment if the workers will continue to absorb the sophistical dope of kingdom come beyond this vale of tears.

This will lull them to sleep just as effectively as through they had a lower berth in Abraham's bosom. Great game, this religious stuff. Be contented with your lot, and great shall be your reward in the sweet afterwhile.

There are over one hundred makes of automobiles on the market, differing so slightly that only an expert can tell them apart. Millions of dollars are being spent and thousands of glib tongued salesmen employed in presenting the merits of the various machines. This enormous waste of time and labor could easily be avoided through the incorporation of the best fetaures of all machines in one product. This standardizing would reduce the labor cost of production to a minimum and give greater efficiency. Will it be done? Not as long as the profit system prevails. Waste is a basic feature of capitalism and competition its cardinal virtue. The remedy is Socialism.

Address The Toiler

Comrade W. of Birmingham Ala. is on the job getting subs. for The Toiler. No reason why The Toiler should not make many fast friends below Mason and Dixon's line.

If every C. L. P. member was like one comrade who pays a full year's dues in advance, no one would be behind.

NO. 121. Published at Cleveland, Ohio. CLEVELAND, OHIO, FRIDAY, MAY 28th, 1920. Address all mail to 3207 Clark Ave., Cleveland, O. $1.50 A YEAR

A DOLLAR FROM YOU NOW WILL SAVE US!

A dollar from you will make it possible for The Toiler continue its mission.

A dollar from you will, in fact, save The Toiler from sharing the fate of dozens of Socialist papers. which had to suspend publication because of the increased cost of production.

A dollar from you RIGHT AWAY, will give The Toiler many months of continued life.

WITHOLD THE DOLLAR AND THE TOILER MUST CEASE PUBLICATION WITHIN A FEW WEEKS.

We place the matter squarely before every one of our 10.000 readers. Give immediately your answer.

HERE'S THE TROUBLE. We have an editor who edits the Toiler among other things. We have an office force and many who volunteer in the work of getting The Toiler into your hands. We have a printer who takes able charge of the work of printing The Toiler. We have an army of boosters who faithfully labor week in and week out getting subscribers and thereby supply the money with which to print.

BUT WE HAVE NOTHING TO PRINT THE TOILER ON.

YOU'VE GUESSED IT! We have no paper and the printer has no paper. The paper wholesalers have no paper. AND WE MUST HAVE PAPER IF WE ARE TO HAVE THE TOILER AS A STEADY MENTAL DIET.

The print paper situation is a most serious one. Most weekly papers have spoken their minds about it and called for help long ago. Knowing what was ahead, we had prepared as best we could .to weather the storm for many weeks. But now the supply we obtained is exausted. Only enough of our stock remains for one more issue.

THIS MEANS THAT YOUR DOLLAR WILL HAVE TO REACH US BY RETURN MAIL.

Paper production does not equal consumption. As you might know, the big capitalist dailies get first attention, are served first. Little, common, truth-telling folks like we, have to be satisfied with what is left. It is altogether probable that we'd never be allowed to buy even one pound of paper if those at the top of the paper combine knew what we used it for.

But when we buy paper, some one else buys for us. Enough said.

Some have claimed that the paper shortage has an artifical aspect, that one of the motives of the thought controllers is to silence the outspoken weekly papers which the awakened portion of the working class supports, by denying these workers' weeklies print paper. Shall we be victims of this plot if such plot exists?

Something you did not know is that attempts have been made to kill The Toiler. Yes, and very recently.

We have had plenty of troubles. Printers we have had have been threatened and we have had to go elsewhere. Our office has been besieged by gentlemen who come with authority from the government, that . is, if Palmer represents part of it, and he does. But we managed to keep going, even managed for months to keep in paper when other periodicals had very difficult sailing.

Now a crisis is at hand. The paper situation has grown steadly worse. As we said, even some of the largest printers and paper wholesalers cannot get newsprint.

HOWEVER, WE KNOW A WAY OUT. We can extricate ourselves from the difficulty WITH YOUR HELP. We know just what to do to buy the paper we need. We know whom to approach to buy it for us.

ALL WE NEED IS THE CASH. WE MUST INVEST IN TEN TONS OF PAPER. THIS AMOUNT WILL LAST US FORTY WEEKS. IT WILL COST US ABOUT $2.500.

IN SHORT, WE CALL UPON OUR 10.000 SUBSCRIBERS TO DONATE TO THE TOILER THE SUM OF $2.500 FOR TEN TONS OF PAPER.

And we cannot buy a pound unless we have cash.

We don't intend to brag, but The Toiler must be fulfilling a need or it would not receive the support of so many workers. We take it for granted that you want The Toiler to live.

THE TOILER WILL LIVE IF YOU SEND IN YOUR DOLLAR TODAY.

We have made calls for The Toiler before. We have made calls upon our readers asking them to put forth extra effort to get new subscribers. Never have we asked for an outright donation to keep The Toiler alive and doing its duty. This we now do.

WE DO IT BECAUSE WE MUST.

We face without fear the trials of publishing a workers' paper in this age of reaction. We have so far beaten our enemies. Up to now we have overcome the many obstacles in our path. We have given you a paper for less than the cost of production for months, for the dollar a year subscription has not paid production costs. While we had a balance in the trreasuery, we felt it our duty to continue this popular price. After all, our purpose is not to make money but to educate the workers. We think we have done our duty.

Having done it, we now call upon you to do yours. It is very little we ask. ONLY ONE DOLLAR FROM EACH OF YOU. But the dollar must come in a hurry so we may begin negotiations for the ten tons of paper.

ARE YOU WITH US?

THEN SEND THE DOLLAR!

THE SOCIALIST PARTY CONVENTION

— By Ammon A. Hennacy. —

SOME OF ITS ACCOMPLISHMENTS

1. Killed a resolution which expressed sympathy for the imprisonment of Jim Larkin and Benjamin Gitlow.

2. Shut off debate and refused to answer questions brought by the Illinois delegation concerning the pussyfooting in the defense at Albany.

3. Refused to seriously consider the idea of unity as expressed by Debs.

4. Dropped the plank which called for expulsion of elected officials who voted for military appropriations.

5. Decided to try to form a New International composed of "all true Socialists of the world", although retaining affiliation with the Third International.

6. Refused to take a stand for the taxation of church property.

7. Inserted a plank providing for the registration of migratory workers in order that they might vote.

8. Election of members of the National Executive Committee by proportional representation killed.

9. Gag rule generously applied against the minority; especially by the lawyers in the delegation from New York.

10. "Its ULTIMATE AIM in politics is to secure a majority in Congress and in every state legislature, to win the principal executive and judical offices, to become the dominant and controlling political party of the country", in order to accomplish Socialism."

The above results of the Socialist Party Convention recently held at New York City, in Finnish Hall at 5th Ave. and 127th St., establishes the Socialist Party as a Centrist factor among the Socialist parties of the World. Using the radical phrases of former times and seeking to create enthusiasm thru the name of Debs, they nominated him on a platform and declaration of principles which the capitalist press has greeted as Sane and Conservative.

LINEUP IN THE CONVENTION.

From the challange by Kruse of Illinois that the Call had announced Hillquit as Chairman of the first day's session before he was elected—by a vote of 91 to Engdahl's 29—until the close of the convention the proportion of radical votes continued about the same. The vote of 33 to 103 on the majority and minority platforms; the 106 votes for Stedman and the 36 votes for Kate O'Hare for candidate for vice-president, up to the vote of 40 for remaining in the Third International as contrasted with 90 for remaining in it but forming a New International of Centrists, shows that about one third of the convention was fairly radical.

Kruse, Engdahl, Glassberg, Tucker, Holland, Bircher and Walter Cook composed the Left Wing; Berger, London, King, Hoehn, Cannon Solomen and Karlin and Block the Right Wing, while Panken, Hillquit, Lee, Berlyn, O'Neal, Henry and Saltis composing the Centre or more rational Right.

THE PLATFORM AND DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES.

The Platform and Declaration of Principles was supposed to have been presented to the membership for consideration two months previous to the convention. The statement made on the floor of the convention by delegate Glassberg of New York on May 10th. that copies of the plaform were ready for distribution on the preceding Saturday was not answered by the Majority. In fact they were published in the capitalist press before the delegates had an opportunity to read them else where.

The Minority wanted to have the Platform and Declaration of Principles referred to a committee of 9 to be elected by the convention, as they did not want the ideas of the Majority to be railroaded through the convention before the Minority had an opportunity to consider it as a whole, and to propose a substitute. This motion was defeated by a vote of 38 to 81 and the matter was taken up in the convention acting as a Committee of the Whole.

When the Declaration of Principles was read not a ripple of applause greeted it, which would seem to justify the assertion made by Tucker that:

"The platform was written by lawyers so that the Department of Justice could not find any Socialism in it, so how could the workers be expected to understand it." To which the Majority repiled that if they would read it over several times they would understand it; which led the Minority to wonder how many times the average worker would have to read it over to understand it.

The Minority Declaration of Principles, while taking a better International and Class Conscious stand, was rather vague and was not as clearly expressed as the less radical stand taken by the Majority.

Kruse created applause when he opposed the insertion in the Declaration of Principles of that phrase from the Declaration of Independence which admits the right of revolution when the people want it, because such a revolutionary phrase had no place in the mlid declaration of principles of the S. P.

The majority leaders made no attempt to answer the argument made by Glassberg that it was practically impossible to obtain Socialism by "orderly and constitutional method." by electing officials and amending the constitution of the U. S.

Dreyfus of Illinois said that Berger and Hillquit played to the galleries in public meetings in discussing the dictatorship of the proletariat an Russia, but oppose them in convention.

DISCUSSION OF UNITY.

When the Unity question came up the Minority wanted the Socialist Party to recognize the due stamps of those in the two Communist parties in order to entitle any comrades wishing to leave these parties and accept the platform of the S. P., to regular membership in the party. The convention voted to only allow them in as new members. No attempt was made to modify the Socialist platform as a basis for unity with Communists as Debs wished. In fact some of the extreme Right wanted a platform that would appeal to the Labor Party and Non-Partisan League, and denounced the Minority platform as one which sought to placate the Communists.

During the discussion Block of New York accused a leader of the Communists of being a spy but refused to mention the name of the person accused when challenged by Holland of Illinois to do so.

THE THIRD INTERNATIONAL.

When Engdahl of Illinois read from the report of the N. E. C. telling of their efforts to assist in forming a new International, O'Neal and Hillquit could not refute this fact. Engdahl also pointed out that those in Europe who were heading this movement for a new International had just recently left the 2nd International, but had not responded strongly enough to their rank and file membership to join the Third International.

Meyer London caused hisses, groans, and laughter by his advocacy of a League of Nations and of our taking part in it in order to reform it. The Majority report was passed little discussion being allowed for the Minority report of Engdahl and Quick to be heard. Berger, with his motion to withdraw from the Third International because of the Red Terror in Russia and because the Bolsheviki believed in violence, presented one of the most inconsistent spectacles of the convention: it being well known that Berger is in favor of "defensive" wars, and favored war with Mexico a few years ago.

When asked by Tucker what the Socialists would do, if after depending upon politics to gain Socialism, they would be denied control, Panken of New York with a great splurge of oratory said that they would resort to war. Thus Berger, who claims to abhor the Bolsheviki because they believe in violence, upholds political Socialism which admittedly leads to violence. The Minority pointed out that because they depended practically alone upon the ballot was the main reason why the Socialists of Finland had to sacrifice 70,000 lives, and then were defeated.

MILITARY APPROPRIATIONS.

Block supported a motion allowing Socialists to vote for military appropriations where the State required an appropriation for the upkeep of a State Militia (altho working for the repeal of this law). until Solomen of New York, after stating that he would vote for it under any condition and with waving arms declaring himself a 100% American, pointed out that the original motion did not specifically prohibit such voting, when the motion by Block was found to be unnecessary and was dropped. This new clause was put in in place of the plank formerly in the platform which provided for the expulsion of elected officials who voted for military appropriations.

PUSSYFOOTING AT ALBANY.

When confronted with six specific charges accusing the defense of the five Socialist Assemblymen in Albany of compromising the Socialist International position and of minimizing the class struggle, Hillquit only attempted to answer one of the charges, covering the remainder with a flow of oratory and sentiment. Hillquit admitted that one of the assemblymen started to make a patriotic defense, and that they had to squelch him. He pointed out several instances where they could have compromized, inferring that they were not as bad as they might have been. Kruse was only allowed a short time to explain how the charges came to be made when Meyer London was recognized. He did not answer any specific charges, but sought to becloud the issue by more oratory. At the end of his speach he made a motion. which was recognized contrary to parliamentary law, by Dawidow of Michigan, who as vice chairman had with Sharts of Ohio as chairman, been shutting off discussion frequently.

Davidow repeatedly refused to recognize Glassberg, who had the exact pages of the proceedings of the trial at hand proving the assertions made by the delegation from Illinois, but instead recognized a motion to table the resolution and expunge it from the record. The Call did not mention the appearance of this question at the convention.

LARKIN AND GITLOW.

The resolution condemning the conviction of Larkin and Gitlow was a very mild one and was of the kind usually passed by the Committee of 48 and other Liberal organizations. The "lawyer delegation" from New York Vity were its chief opponents The Call also did not mention that this matter was brought up at the convention.

The walls and platform were decorated in an unusual large number of American flags and bunting; the red banner of Socialism nowhere in evidence, which brings, to mind the assertion of Tucker on the floor of the convention that "by decorating our convention with the flag of Wall Street we cannot hide our Socialism."

MAXIM GORKY ADDRESSES THE MONARCHISTS

I have received a number of letters from various persons. All of them have been written in a tone of mortal terror and dismal. I feel that those who wrote them have all experienced many dark hours, many dark days; that their hearts undergo torture; that their restless thoughts do not let them sleep.

"What has become of the good Russian people? Why did they suddenly turn into wild beasts, craving for blood?" a lady writes me on a perfumed sheet of paper. "Christ is forgotten, his ideas are desecrated," writes Count P. "Are you satisfied? What has become of the great doctrine of love of your neighbor? What has become of the sacredness of church and religion?" asks K. Bruytan, from Tambov.

Some scold and curse, others sigh and complain

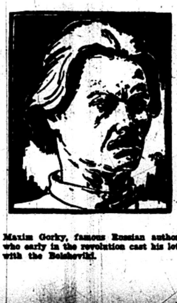
All are excited, broken down, full of fear at the thougat of this tragic and great epoch.

Not having the possibility of writing individual answers to these letters, I am answering them all together. Dear Sirs and Dear Madames: The days of punishment for your criminal indifference to the life of the people have come to pass. All that you are experiencing now, all that which tortures you so, is fully deserved by you and I can only say and wish you one thing:

Let those horrors of life, which you yourselves have created, take on still deeper and more intense forms. Let your hearts become still more restless!

Let tears drive sleep away from you! Let a storm of madness and cruelty rage over our Fatherland and burn you!

You deserve this. You will be exhausted, but it may happen that all that which is wholesome and honest in your souls, will be purged of the slime and the baseness which was implanted there, in your souls, to which you have paid so little attention. Your souls are full of vileness, lies, a thirst for domination and of all low instincts.



Maxim Gorky, famous Russian author who early in the revolution cast his lot with the Bolsheviki.

Dear Madames: You want to know what has come over the people. They have simply lost patience. They were too long silent. They endured violence, without murmuring, for too long a period of time.

Their servile backs have carried the burden of the masters for too long a time. Now they can bear it no longer. Still they have not shaken off entirely the burden which was placed on their shoulders. You are getting frightened too soon, Madam! Between us, what else were the people to do but turn into wild beats? What have you done for them to expect different results? Have you ever taught them anything good; have you sown in their souls seeds of virtue?

During their entire lives you utilized their labors, their last loaf of bread, without even understanding that you were committing a crime. You were living without asking what you were living on; without inquiring where lay the force that fed you. By the brilliancy of your attire you kindled the envy of the poor and the unfortunate. When you went to your country homes and lived side by side with the peasants, you looked down upon them from above, as though they were an outcast race.

They, however, understood. They are goodnatured. But you made them wicked. You held your feasts, in which they, the outcasts, could not participate. And yet you want them to be grateful! Your songs, your music could not afford pleasure to the hungry people. Your frivolity, mixed with contempt for the peasant, could not awaken in his soul a respect for you. What have you done for him? Have you tried to enlighten him? No, you have rather tried to obscure his mind!

And you wanted him to be wise after all this? Oh, no, you did not even think of it. The peasant in your eyes was a sort of cattle. When you spoke to him you treated him as a savage. You did not even want to behold a human being in him. Is it a wonder then that he has now turned into a wild beast?

Madam! Your question expresses not only ignorance of life, but also the hypocrisy of a criminal who feels his guilt, but does not want to confess his crimes publicly.

You knew, you could not help knowing, how the peasant lived. A human being who is being beaten must avenge himself sooner or later. A human being who is treated mercilessly has no pity for anybody. This is clear. Moreover: it must be so.

How can you look for mercy, for compassion, in the heart in which you sowed vengeance? Madam! In Kiev the good old Russian folk threw out of the window the celebrated manufacturer Brodsky. The governess was also thrown out. But the tiny canary, which was in its cage, was not harmed. Do reflect on this occurence. This little bird awoke a feeling of pity for it at a moment when human beings were being thrown out of the window. Evidently, outraged hearts still have room for pity. But this pity is not for human beings, as the human beings

Better a divorce and a clean slate any old time than a lifetime of wrangling, quarrelling and conjugal misery. The S. E. P. is getting all het up over the fact that there are many vacant non-productive farms in the country. So too are a lot of kommercial klubs. There are several reasons for this condition—likewise several remedies. One of the reasons for this condition is the long hours and poor pay that the farmers gave their hired hands while help was plentiful and jobs scarce. John Farmer now is only reaping what he has sown in earlier days. One remedy would be for all bankers who hold mortgages upon farm lands to be compelled to operate those farms, and by operate I mean get out and dig and plow and harrow and sow and cultivate, WORK on the farm instead of working the farmer when he comes to the town bank — that ought to help the crop shortage konsiderable.

SNOOPING UNPOPULAR NOW

One half million dollars' worth of spies now drawing salaries from the Department of Justice will lose their jobs on June 30. The House of Representatives cut that much off the snooping appropriation on May 10.

Attorney General Palmer had asked for a total of $2,500,000, saying he needed $1,000,000 to run down radicals, $500.000 to chase profiteers, and another million for miscellaneous purposes. Byrne, of Tennessee, was making the fight for Palmer.

"Can you tell us," asked MacGrate, of New York, "how many anarchists Palmer arrested as a result of his May Day plot?" Byrns said he could not. "Have you any idea that even one was arrested?" persisted MacGrate, "I do not know that any were taken," Byrne confessed.

Then Blanton, of Texas, came to Palmer's rescue, declaring that while the Attorney General had arrested 6,000 anarchists within the past three months, "Louis F. Post Post, assistant secretary of labor, has turned most of them loose on the American people."

"Well," retorted MacCrate, "if those 6,000 anarchists existed in the same place that the bomb throwers of May 1st, existed, then they never had any existence outside Mr. Palmer's mind."

A LAUGH ON LUSK

In his conduct of deportation proceedings against the Russian representative Ludwig C. A. K. Martens, on May 11 and 12, Immigration Inspector Shell was forced to deviate from the law and to violate the Labor Department's own rules governing such hearings.

When denied his legal right to because he adheres to and supports the examine the full evidence against himself in advance of the hearing, Martens resorted to his lawful right not to answer questions. After 24 hours of undertainty, Inspector Shell decided to dispense with all answers and proceed to read into the record the full set of questions drawn up by the Department of Justice

They were faithful copies of the Lusk and Senate Committee questions. The inspector seemed to hate his job and laughed to keep himself in good humor. "I suppose," he remarked to Martens at one point, "if I keep on reading this stuff I may come to believe it myself!"

Without having intended to, Martens made answer to one question. "Are you the duly authorized representative of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic?" asked Shell, reading from the Palmer catechism. "Yes!" exclaimed Martens, making his sole contribution to the record the one statement that Palmer has striven to deny or to conceal.

When he had read all the funny questions into the record. Shell announced that the case of the Government was virtually concluded. The hearings were then postponed for a fortnight, and Martens departed in substancial possession of the thing he had originally demanded—a copy of the evidence against himself.

Palmer appears to have shifted his position from the original contention that Martens is a member of some Communist Party, somewhere (which he is not), to a contention that Martens' own statements prove that he is opposed to all forms of government Soviet Government of Russia.

On that ground Martens is reported pleased to have the case stand. He is more willing that the Wilson administration should decided that no supporter of the present Russian Government shall ever be allowed residence in the United States, if it cares to assume that responsibility before the world.

[illegible] WORLD REVOLUTION

WASHINGTON—Another red wave that may put the working class in power from Warsaw to Gibraltar the next few months is forecast by official advices now accumulating at Washington.

Censorship is the only agency that still functions at the command of Western European governments. Behind the temporary screen the dissolution of the old order proceeds at a gallop. Outstanding items in the budget of official information gathered here are these:

Soldiers and diplomats look for Poland to burst "like a bubble o'erblown" after the great drive in which her armies have penetrated the war-wastes of Ukrainia without landing a single serious blow on the Red Army of Russia. Behind the Polish army food riots are developing rapidly and the known bread supply is less than enough for two weeks.

American commissioners report that the four little "republics" lying in the Caucasus Mountains between Turkey-Persia and Russia are saturated with pro-Soviet sentiment and bitterly hostile to Allied interference.

Asiatic Turkey is three fourths in the hands of anti-Entente nationalists who are negotiating a defensive agreement with Soviet Russia, supported enthusiastically by the Mohammedan masses, whose co-religionists enjoy complete religious and economic freedom in modern Russia.

Syrian chieftains have denounced the French mandate over their country and have summoned the tribes to arms. The last straw of oppression was laid on when by official decree the Paris Government established an exact equality between the depreciated French franc and the much more valuable native currency. Syrian couriers were at once dispatched to Russia to solicit support in the war against France "Do you know what Bolshewism would mean to your people?" Allied agents asked the Syrian chiefs. "We prefer anything to French influence," the Syrians replied.

Famine and class wars are prevalent throughout Bulgaria, Yugo-Slavia, Chcho-Slovakia and Hungary. Conditions vary from open revolt to passive acquiescence by peasants and workmen who have no faith left in the competence or permanence of existing governments.

It is in Germany, however, that the most sinister threat to the old political and economic order has arisen. Official reports and isolated press dispatches from Berlin unite upon an analysis of conditions there which confirmed in a striking manner predictions made last winter by Col. Roustam Bek, military adviser to the Russian Soviet Bureau in this country.

Col. Bek predicted that German military men would eventually make common cause with their soldiers and the working classes to restore German independence by means of a proletarian government and a communist army. In a word, that the Soviet principle would be adopted because it offered the only escape from the unemployment and bankruptcy of laboring and professional classes alike.

It is interesting, then, to hear Vorwaerts, organ of the Social Democrats, saying in a recent issue:

"The failure of the Kapp coup brought many new converts to national Bolshevism, many of them the same officers who supported the coup. The Kapp coup hammered into the brains of our militarists that there is no use trying to govern when working classes are against them. Hence their sudden yearning for and understanding with the workers and their attempt to obtain the support of the workers.

"These officers," continues Vorwaerts, "argue that Russian has proved the vitality of Bolshevism. Military officers who lost their positions because of the Versailles treaty..... see also that Trotzky has college mates and professional colleagues in Russia, all of whom have given their class mates and relatives fine places in the Red Army."

And Professor Otto Hostach writes in the reactionary Krenzzeitung:

"Despite the fairest promises Moscow's propaganda in Germany is unnecessary. It is aided and abetted by the dangerous phantom of national Bolshevism which now stalks in Germany, not only in Communist circles but also in the younger military circles, and is finding support among the youth of the country generally."

The Berlin correspondent of the New York Sun finds the same sentiment among financiers who have lost hope of ever making private fortunes again unless Germany shall break free from encircling enemies. "When it becomes clear that Bolshevism is the only way out I shall give my service to the Bolshevists," one of them asserts.

COMMUNISM IN MEXICO

There is only one magazine published in English in Mexico and it is a Communist monthly. Every Communist should read it and know, first hand, what the Mexican Communists and the Mexican I. W. W. are doing, and what is the real significance of the Obregon revolution that has just triumphed. This magazine is "Gale's Journal of Revolutionary Communism". Typical articles have been: "Made in the U. S. A.—the Civil War in Mexico"; "Who is Fnancing Pancho Villa"; "The Communist Party of Mexico"; "Open Letter to the Devil."

[illegible] FULLY VETOED

WASHINGTON.—President Wilson is absolutely alone among officials at Washington in refusing to lift the trade blockade against Russia.

Within the past week Secretary Colby and all heads of Bureaus at the State Department signed their names to a memorandum in which they informed the President that in their judgement the illegal and unauthorised blockade of Russia should be abandoned forthwith.

This information comes to your correspondent from the most responsible authority. On the same authority it can be stated that President Wilson refused to endorse the suggestion or to give his reasons for not doing so.

Under Secretary Polk, a bitter and long standing enemy of Russia, is among those who informed the President that the time had come to lift the trade ban. The petition was signed also by the chief of the foreign trade bureau and the head of the Russian division of the State Department. These gentlemen united in saying that pressure from American business men for opportunity to share in the Russian market could no longer be resisted without precipitating a scandal. The Secretary of Commerce gives his hearty endorsement to the memorandum.

Comment for publication is impossible to obtain from those who signed the recommendation, but they do not hesitate to say in private that the President's solitary policy of obstruction will eventually have to give way before the mounting demand of business men for admission to the only foreign markets left where gold payments can be had upon delivery.

THE COMPROMISE VERDICTS

Here in Portland the compromise verdict has become a fad, it seems. Every Criminal Syndicalism jury that ever "went out" and "came back in" has brought back some sort of a miserable compromise verdict. There have been verdicts of "guilty", with recomandation of "leniency"; "guilty", with recommendations of "extreme leniency," and now we have as the latest, "guilty", with recommendation of "parole."

Is there no longer to be found, in Multnomah County twelve men who have the courage of their convictions? Why add insult to injury, in this cowardly manner, by asking a victim's pardon after having railroaded him? If these men were guilty, why couldn't their respective juries say so and be proud of it? Knowing that they had "served their country well" by convicting a prisoner; — they, nevertheless, seem to be inclined to cringe and crawl in his presence, and to kiss his feet, indicating that they didn't mean to do it.

There is something radically wrong about this—somewhere. Either the Criminal Syndicalism Law is a piece of legislation repugnant to these juries, or there must exist that "necessary doubt" of guilt which the court instructs is sufficient for a verdict of acquittal, or else there must be forces that dictate the verdicts that these juries must bring in. Be these miserable compromise verdicts the fruits of any or of all these reasons, one can readily see why these juries find it so necessary, after having undergone some very tormenting mental tortures in the jury rooms, to wash their hands through a cowardly appology for their dirty work, by begging the victim's pardon after having railroaded him.—thereby thinking that they are to some extent relieving themselves of the responsibility of their deed by passing the buck over on the judge.

Passing the buck over on the judge means absolutely nothing, save that it serves as a cammouflage under which disguise these juries are led to believe that they are washing themselves clean, but since it is only a commouflage, they are not. A recommendation for "lenicney" means five years. A recommendation of "extreme leniency" means two years. What a recomandation of "parole" means we have not yet learned—but leave that to judge Morrow.

If there was nothing abhorable about this "Criminal Syndicalism" law; If there was no question of "guilt", and if there was no one dictating to these juries, would there then be any reasons why they should come back from their "deliberations" blushing and ashamed? Why should they then drape "their" verdicts with such cowardly recommendation? While this might be "one hundred percent americanism," it is certainly devoid of everything manly.

While it is still costly to us, we have OUR PARDON.

The Black Sheep

CHAPT. XXXII.

Unadaptable.

Four days later, Olive Anderson found a strangely battered letter in her mail box, at the Anamoose post office. Opening it, she read the note, which Collins had enclosed first, after which, she read Jack's letter. It would be difficult to describe her emotions, as she read the simply written account of the boy's lonely wandering in the vastness of the mountain solitude. From out of that almost infinite silence, he had spoken to her, from the innermost recesses of his soul, he had send a Message by putting his words on paper. He, in the lonliness of the mountains, following the elk and the deer among the firs and the cedars, over rocky ranges and thru canyons, had made her a part of all he saw, had woven memoris of her into those grand and majestic scenes, which he so simply described. And after all his feelings were not different from her's, for she too, in the lonliness of her home, mentally adrift on the storm swept sea of new ideas, had often spoken to him from out of the silence of the night, with a voice of mingled longing and despair. She too, had written down her thoughts in letters to him, letters which were never mailed, for two reasons, one was she dared not mail them, and the other was she did not know where to send them. She destroyed the pages as soon as they were written, as he had doubtleesly destroyed many pages which he had written. And now out of the unknown, by the hand of a total stranger some of these pages had come to her. And with them had come the information as to his whereabouts. From now on she could reach him, that very thot seemed to bring him strangely near.

She read the letter three or four times while in the post office. How strange it all seemed that she should be attracted to a "jail bird" to a man who was almost a total stranger to her. For the first time in her life the woman and the lady within her came into conflict, but as usual Against her will, wild thoughts forced themselves into her brain. The letter the woman proved to be the stronger. had tapped the springs of atavism, and sent the blood of her forbears tingling thru her veins. Leaning against the writing desk in the postoffice, from between half closed lids she could see the boy whom she had met in jail, rambling down the mountain side into the depths of the canyons, following the trail of the wild life of the forest. Mentally she could see herself seated beside him in the bark shelter he had described. She could see the giant shadows play like weird ghosts among the forest trees, as the blaze of the campfire rose and fell. She was conscious of a wild desire to live the life of the primitive ages of human evolution, altho she did not phrase it that way.

When Olive left the post office, she met Frank Cartwright, who had been her sweetheart for more than a year, and as was his habit he walked home with her. He was an entirely different type from the girl. His mind was not adapted to serious thought. His highest ideal was to have a girl by his side, a cigarette in his mouth and nothing on his mind. His conversation was limited to such subjects as directly affected his senses. He might be described as, "a well dressed bundle of perambulating flesh and bones." When he was with Olive he either chattered like a magpie about nothing or made crude and almost disgusting love. He was a typical middle class youth. The wonder was that Olive tolerated him. "Love does not reason" But was there love?

This night as they walked home, Olive who on other occassions did most of the sensible talking or listened to his gibberish with kindly toleration now was strangely silent. She seemed pre-occupied. Her mind was not on Frank, or the coming dance, or possible sleigh ride. In fact it was not on her immediate surround in any sense; it was entirely on Jack, who was far beyond the Rocky Mountains in a little wood cabin by the lake.

Frank asked her a few of his usual questions, but received only monosyllabic replies Nothing he could say interested her. He spoke the language of her class and that class she had learned to despise. To-night she hated it more than ever before, for his very chatter brot back to her mind the preacher, the judge, the editor and her own father.

Finally unable to restrein himself any longer the boy blurted out, "What ails you Ollie? Feel grouchy about something?"

"No," she answered wearily. "I'm just thinking."

"What do you mean?" he presisted.

"Oh, I mean, I have gone to school for three years and have learned nothing that is really worth knowing."

"What? You think you won't graduate this summer?" he asked with some solicitude in his voice.

"Oh, no, not that, I can't help graduating. But what good is it?"

"After that you can teach school if you want to, "Frank urged.

"No I could not, and what is more, I would not if I could.". And the way she said the last words made her companion wince. She went on, "If I want to teach school, I will have to go to Normal. That will prepare me to go into a school house and become childish. There is other work in the world better suited to my temperament and I must master it if I am to make anything more then a living."

"You don't need to make a living. You are a woman. You can get married, and get your living for nothing," Frank said, heedless of the tone of her former speech "You are nervous tonight Ollie," he said as he slipped his arm around her as they passed in the shadow of a tall building.

His affection was evidently not welcome, for she disengaged herself quickly and told him to behave himself. Her action hurt his feelings, he decided to tray the performance with a little more force than before, with the result, that she slapped him in the face for his pains.

"I'm in no mood to fool with you tonight Frank," she said, with no little dignity, "be a man and behave yourself."

"What's the matter Ollie? Don't you like me any more? What is the use acting like that." and there was that in his voice that showed real concern. Altho it must be said the concern was only for himself.

"You never heard me talk at all. I have never dared to talk for fear of telling the truth, and finding myself alone in the world."

"I don't get it," he said querulously.

"Nobody 'gets it', in this town. It seems that nobody understands any one but themselves, and they understand themselves very imperfectly. It is sure that they do not understand me."

"I understand you," her friend protested.

"No you don't. Nobody does for the simple reason that I do not think as they think. I have only met one person who thinks as I think on many of the problems of life, and he in a few words said many of the things I have always wanted to say but did not know how to say them. He understood me without knowing me, and I understood him, in the same way," she said solemnly.

"Who is he?" asked her friend, and there was a touch of bitterness in his voice.

"Oh, I do not mind telling you. He was the boy they had in jail last fall."

This little speech awakened forest memories in her companion. The screaming simian, and the growl of the cave man, were in his mind. It was good that he lacked the physical courcompromise with himself weakners must compromise or die. So he asked, "Haven't you forgotten that hobo yet?"

"No I have not, "Olive said quietly. "How could I? He showed me the greatners of life's problems, the real meaning of that awful thing called society. He showed me the blood on my fingers, on my food, on my clothes on the car in which I ride, on all the things I have, and on all the things you have. He showed me how unclean we are."

Frank ignored her philosophy, He was now not in a philosophizing mood, even if he had been capable of philosophizing. She had told him the truth. He could not, and would not understand. "I thot you had better sense than to fall in love with a hobo! he attempted to sneer but it counded more like a wail.

She stopped and faced him in the semi-darkness. A ray of light from a distant street lamp fell on her face. It might have revealed to him the glowing beauty of a mind on fire with an ideal. But the bourgeois mind is blind to both beauty and ideals. Still he was not unaware of the beauty and power of her expression. It made him painfully aware of his own inferiority. He belonged to the great average. She did not.

"Frank, said she firmly but not unkindly, "you are asleep to everything, but your own will and desire. You seem to think that the world was made for you. I feel that I should be for the world. You think only of your pleasure. I must think of the pleasure of others as well. You cannot understand my problems, therefore cannot help me to solve them. Now I want you to go Frank and leave me alone. I must think." She started up the path and he followed for a few steps. "Go I say," Olive repeated with a tone of finality which left him no alternative.

"Well I'll be darned!" he muttered. "She is still stuck on a nameless bum."

Olive heard what he said but made no reply. His attitude was an aspect of the type struggle. He reacted in perfect harmony with his environment. She did not. Between him and Jack of course was the antagonism of the class struggle. The natural antipathy of the House of Have from the House of Want.

She went straight to her room and there with her thoughts for companions, she went over all her hopes and longings, aspirations and fears. Jack's words from behind the jail bars had put a purpose in her life, and that purpose had become an inspiration. It had become the driving power of her thought. She had decided to tear loose from her world, with its hypocricies, its deceptions, its lies masquerading as decency. She had started on the trail of truth and he who starts on that trail is following a ghost.

She carefully counted her accomplishments. She could play the piano. Not marvelously, in fact she never would play marvelously. She had no special gift for music. She could play well enuf to charm a lover but then those creatures are easily charmed if the player is pretty and the father is rich. She could not charm an audience any more than could a tom cat. She had studied mathematics but could not apply them to any practical purpose. Surely not, without any practical experience. She had studied English. Could she write a book? No, for the simple reason she had nothing to write about. She had been taught bookkeeping, yet she would need extra training to get a position. She had studied for three years. She could read, write, and say amo, amas, amat. What was it all good for? The school had just given her a peep into the intellectual world, but had not given her the needed weapons with which she might wage the battle for existence.

The Battle at Matewan

Another blodly clash has been added to the already long list of affrays between American coal miners and the scum of this vicious industrial system, the hordes of private detectives which infest every locality when the workers attempt to better their conditions.

Matewan, a mining hamlet among the West Virginia mountains is the scene. Responsive to their economic needs, the miners had organized themselves into a labor union for better protection against the excess exploitation to which they were subjected thru the greed of their employers, the Coal Barons.

The employers immediately dispatched a contingent of their private army armed to the teeth with revolvers and Winchesters to make war upon the new union. This private army proceeded to ferret out the organizers and active members of the union and to evict them and their families from the properties of the mining company. Like most mining centers, Matewan is owned chiefly by the coal companies.

Having completed their work, the detectives waited at the station for their train to depart and there placed the chief of police under arrest. Sentiment against the actions of the detectives was running high in the village, and, like all American small towns, the arrival of a train being an event of importance, a goodly assembly of residents were on hand to witness it. Among these was the Mayor who interceeded when he saw is chief of police arrested. He was immediately killed outright. His murderer being as quickly despatched by the police chief. In a moment a dozen or more men, chiefly private detectives lay dead and wounded on the spot. State troops have since patrolled the few dingy streets of this tiny centre of industry and the class struggle.

Thus, in a few days, has again been run the whole gamut of how many industrial battles? Beginning in the inhumanity and greed of conscienceless exploiters, which in turn, drivers the workers into a league for defense, which, instead of being met in a spirit of tolerance, becomes an object of destruction by the exploiters, cost what it may. With an elemental viciousness equalled only by the power of wealth and the capitalist made laws, the destruction of the workers' union is executed. The class struggle bares its fangs and stamps its iron hoofs. Force, naked and weltering in blood amid the rattle of death volleys ensues. And chances are, those who have the most guns and use them first prevail, for power comes thru the operation of physical force now, as when the world was young and man fought man for the mastery of his hunting grounds.

A distressing scene certainly. But an excellent likeness in miniature of an economic system wherein the lives and welfare of the workers are subjected to the whim and desire of the class of robbers who own and operate for individual profit the industries of the nation. Such examples as Matewan teach the workers the innate criminality of such a system. Only workers' control of the mining industry with the title of ownership residing in a workers' government can right this criminal wrong. Let the workers prepare to own as well as operate the mines. By the workers, for the workers thru workers' control All power to the workers!

Buffers for Bolshevism

Since the counter revolution in Russia has been so decisively conquered and the hopes of world capitalism for the fall of Bolshevism have gone glimmering, it has placed much hope upon Germany and Poland as buffer states to stop the spread of bolshevism to the proletariat of Europe and the world. Herein was recognition of the power of bolshevik ideas if granted half a chance at operation. These hopes now seem to be on the verge of collapse.

Upon Poland especially, was reposed much confidence along this line. With a strong capitalistic state between Russia and Germany, the exploitation of Germany by the Allies might continue to the full satisfaction and greed of the victorious democracies, while at the same time, the power of Russia would cease at the Polish frontiers. Recently, a great deal of sympathy for the success of the Polish advance against the Red Army was manifest in the daily press. For a week past it has subsided and little news concerning activities from that section have made their appearance. But the past few days there has appeared news of Polish defeats of a very extensive character, indicating that the tide has turned and the counter advance of the Reds may bring to Russia as momentuous victories over Polish aggression as over the counter revolutionists. Poland, as a buffer state stands every chance to collapse.

In Germany there are indications that aonther revolutionary upheaval is imminent. Recent provincial elections show that the strength of the Majority Socialists in the government is declining rapidly, this strength being about evenly divided between the reactionaries and the Revolutionists. Thus is the inevitable clash of the two social classes seen to be rapidly approaching. A Plain Dealer editorial of recent date indicates the attitude of the capitalistic minded upon this approaching crisis. Says the Plain Dealer:

> If the Majority Socialists are to be eliminated the extremists will directly face each other, and it is difficult to see how a disastrous conflict can be avoided. Though no one is poor enough to do reverence to the men who have been ruling Germany it may well be hoped that their rule will continue. In such a field of evils as is today presented in Germany the middle-class Socialists appear almost good and their choice is easy.

Yes, a pseudo, socialism is perfectly satisfactory to capitalism. As between a choice of clear cut workers' control with the elimination of the capitalist class and a reformistic regime of half way socialization, the latter is undoubtedly to its liking, and in the coming crisis in Germany the Allies may be expected to support the latter.

The weakness of reform socialism is becoming emphatically evident in Germany. So far, it has failed utterly. How much longer it may be tolerated by the German people is a question which the coming elections will shed much light upon. There is a lesson in the German situation which the moderate socialists of the United States may well take to heart. While they are attempting to establish in this country a middle-of-the road socialism, the same thing in the land where it has been tried out by practical application is falling to pieces. Meanwhile, the Soviet government of Russia, established thru the proletarian dictatorship eliminating at once the bourgeoisie, grows stronger with each rising day. Yet, the Socialist Party at its recent national convention repudiated the principle of prolatarian dictatorship as a tactic of the revolution. Since the ascendancy of the moderate socialists to power in Germany, civil war has been rife. Thousands of workers have fallen in the clashes with Noske's guards. But the final conflict between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie must and will arrive for all that.

Shall American socialists attempt that which is already proven a failure? Shall the agony and suffering of revolution be prolonged by dilly-dallying with half-way measures or shall the power of the workers be made supreme at once by denying the capitalist class any power whatever? To answer these questions in the negative is to build upon quicksand and to drain away in agony and suffering the blood of countless thousands of workers.

Let proletarian successes elsewhere teach us the tactics which entail the least suffering. Replace the dictatorship of the exploiting class with that of the useful producers during the transition from capitalism to Communism.

CHAPTER X.

LOWER CIVILIZATION.

Lower or hand-tool age.

The lower age of civilization begins with the appearance of the phonetic alphabet,—the alphabet evolved out of hieroglypics used by the Babylonians and Hittites as early as two thousand years B. C.*) It was further developed and made more practical by the Phoenicians in their commercial relations with other nations. The alphabet was evolved in response to commercial necessity. It was the logical outgrowth of the commercial demand for accurate means of communication and a record of business transactions. The Phoenicians were one of the first great maritime powers of the world and therefore in the greatest need of written communications.)

The tools in general were but an evolution of those used in upper barbarism and met the requiremtnts of the industrial needs of that age. It was during this age that the water wheel as a source of power was first developed, by the Greeks in the time of Hesiod. Gunpowder made its appearance about the year 600 A. D. in China but was suppressed on account of its great destructivity. It was invented in Europe about two hundred years later. The fire arm was the logical result of the invention of gunpowder. This weapon has played a prominent part in the making of history.

Steel was developed to a high degree of perfection in Damascus, due to the liberation of slaves under the Solonic Law. In pre-Solonic days the slave having no hope in the world did not mingle his thought with his labor, with the result that industry did not keep pace with the military needs of the master in repelling barbarian invasion. It was agreed among the rulers of the primitive empires of Italy, Greece, Rome and Egypt, that higher technical skill in the industrial arts was needed. It was Solon who suggested the idea of liberating a certain portion of the slaves and giving them limited privileges based upon the degree of perfection in the industrial arts attained by them.)

Out of the Solonic Law evolved the primitive labor union, that became the back-bone of Ancient Civilization. Damascus steel was a direct product of the unions operating under the Solonic Law.*)

It is customary with writers on the economic interpretation of history to place the beginning of civilization at the time of the appearance of the alphabet. zation at the time of the appearance of the alphabet. Civilization really began with the inauguration of the Solonic Law. It is this law that gave to the masters a form in which they could use their economic power to coerce not only the physical but also the mental resources of their slaves. Physical violence can drive a slave to his task but it required another form to make him think about the improvement of his task. This was found in the system of rewards and immunities under the Solonic Law.

Transportation in lower civilization was a slight improvement over that of upper barbarism, especially in water transportation. The biremes and triremes now supplanted the former slave-propelled galleys, the only difference being in the number of slaves and oars.

The subsistence, shelter and clothing of lower civilization were practically the same as in the age of upper barbarism. There were a few additional fabrics and conviences due to the furhter development of the tools of production.

Aryan man, during the age of lower civilization, extended his range from the Himalayas to Iceland, from his cities and trading centers and bought and trafficked Scandinavia to Spain. Wherever he went he established bartered and fought with his neighbors. Robbery and piracy were predominant amongst his early occupations.

Chattel slavery, which was a form of slavery based upon ownership of the person, gradually gave way to the institution of serfdom, which was a form of slavery based upon ownership of the land. Under this form of slavery the serf was sold with the land. He was a part of a Feudal Estate, having the legal status of real estate.

The two classes of society in this age were known as the Patricians and Plebeians. These classes were again subdivided: Patricians into warriors and priests and Plebeians into freeman and slaves. In each of these classes there were again degrees and castes, such as the ranks of soldiers, the orders of prists, the various crafts of the artisans. The serf was an agricultural slave with but little skill.

The life of the upper class during this age as during all others, since the division of society into classes, was a life of luxury, ease and arrogance. Feudalism was not the condition of the entire age of lower civilization, but grew out of the suppression of the Solonic Unions in the Roman Empire whch made the Feudal Estate the center of industry. Feudalism was supreme during the dark ages for the reason that after the suppression of the Solonic Unions skill was not encouraged.

During the dark ages the power of the church was supreme. Church and state were one and inseparable, and made relentless war on all forms of inetllectual activity, particularly genius of an investigative or inventive turn.

Out of the guild system of the lower age of civilization evolved the primitive factory which gave rise to the apprentice and wages system. The art of printing, like the alphabet itself, was made necessary by the pressure of the larger volume of commerce. The same causes also produced the compass.

The duration of the age of lower civilization was much less than upper barbarism. It began about 2000 B. C., and ended with the discovery of steam power in the eighteenth century.

) Notice here the beginning of the use of chronological dates. Prior to written records, exact dates were an impossibility.

) As early as 1000 B. C. the Phoenicians had long since given up the use of the inconvenient clay tablet of Babylonia, and were importing great quantities of papyrus paper from Egypt. They had devised their own system of twenty two signs for writing their own language. There were no sings for vowels or syllables. The Phoenicians were the first people to devise a system of writing containing nothing but alphabetic sings; that is true letters

The Phoenicians arranged their new letters in a convenient order so that the whole twenty two might form a fixed list easily learned. Such a list could not be learned without giving to each letter a name. They called the first letter of the alphabet, ox, because the Phoenician word for ox, that is, aleph, began with the first letter. The second began with the second letter, and so on. This was not unlike our old primers where our parents learned to say: "A is for 'axe', B is for letter, they called, house because beth, the Phoenician word for house 'bed'" etc. When the children of the Phoenician merchants learned their letters and were called upon to repeat the alphabet, they therefore began: "aleph, beth," etc., as if our children were to say: "axe, bed," etc., instead of "A, B," etc.

The word alphabet itself confirms the history that the Phoenicians had the alphabet first, the Greeks borrowing the Phoenician names for the letters. the alphabet(a) having passed from the Greeks to the Latins and from them to us.

) The heads of the Solonic Unions were elected on account of their master craftsmanship. They were called lords on account of their executive ability and masters on account of their ability as craftsmen. It was not an infrequent occurence for one of these lords to offer themselves as a substitute or sacrifice in cases where their constituents were supposed to have merited death or re-enslavement for offenses involving a violation of the Solonic Law.

Here was the origin of The Christian concept of the Atonement. Christ the Lord and Master, volunteering himself as a sacrifice, for the sins of his followers. It is but the expression, in a religious form, of an ancient practice.

) The reader is refered to the first volume of Ancient Lowly by C. Osborne Ward for a further amplification of the Solonic Law.

LONDON—"Either a reactionary Germany will join the Allies, including Japan, in an attempt to exploit Russia's natural resources without recognizing the Soviet Government, or a democratic Germany will form an alliance with the Russian people."—this is the prediction of Brigadier-General C. B. Thompson, a member of Sir Douglas Haig's staff as to what will happen in case the present methods of the Supreme Council continue.

ANOTHER LIE NAILED

— Skygac. —

All beggars are liars. Professional beggars of course become more expert at the game, (or is it an art?) of lying than the mere amature and there are no professional beggars so expert at either begging or lying than the organized beggars masquerading under the guise of some denominational church. Now that all the denominations of note with the sole exception of the Babtists have gone into the Interchurch World Movement, a sort of syndicated church movement, and gone into begging on a larger scale than ever before attempted—one would expect some clever lying—. They are telling lies enough—(yes gentle reader—I know I'm using the short and ugly word—but let us call a spade a spade and then there will be no misunderstanding. The I. W. M. is spreading broadcast a fabric of lies—some of them fancy ones and most of them just the plain or garden variety of lies. Now whether or not the responsible parties back of the advertising campaign know they are lies—is of no particular moment. We will nail the lies—some of them and you can judge for yourself.

In one of the advertisements of the Interchurch World Movement we find it headed "A World Rebuilt" "by the golden rule not by the rule of gold"—but it's gold theyr'e begging for! Asking the question "What are the most precious elements in American Life?"? it answers it by more questions and answers. The first question-answer is, "Respect for the home?" "Jesus found woman slaves. He made them companions. Down through the ages His church has BEEN THE CHAMPION OF WOMEN'S RIGHTS AND ASPIRATIONS." What a monstrous lie! Down thru the ages His church, THE church, ANY church, tenaciously clung to the doctrine voiced by that crusty old bachelor Paul, who told woman to keep her mouth shut in church and if she wished to know anything to go home and ask her husband. "Ask your pastor—HE KNOWS."

"Through the ages His church has been the champion of women's rights." What a lie! By authority of the first chapter of Genesis man has always claimed superiority. The inferiority of women has been preached from practically every pulpit through the ages. The Creator of the universe was a male and man was made in his image, hence he is the supreme and natural ruler of the world, to question which were rankest heresy. As for woman she should be content as all "good" women have been content thus to be the companion and servat (mostly servant) of this favored of the Gods. Woman exists not for herself but for man's comfort and convenience. That was the burden of thought which was taught by the church and which has crushed woman throughout the centuries—especially the ages dominated by Christian thought.

Hearken to what the AUTHORITY accepted by ALL "His Churches"—the Bible says concerning women. First Corinthians, chapter 14 verses 34 and 35 says, "Let your women keep silence in the churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak: but they are commanded to be UNDER OBEDIENCE, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything let them ask their husbands at home: for it IS A SHAME FOR WOMEN TO SPEAK IN YE CHURCH." Chapter eleven of First Timothy verses 11 and 12—"Let the women learn in silence WITH ALL SUBJECTION. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence."

Columns more could be written but this is enough to prove the Interchurch World movement LIED.

WHEREFORE, YE WORKERS?

Men of America, wherefore plough
For the lords who lay ye low?
Whefore weave with toil and care
The rich robes your tyrants wear?

Wherefore feed and clothe and save,
From the cradle to the grave, for These ungrateful drones who would Drain your sweat—nay, drink your blood!

Wherefore, Bees of Amercia, forge
Many a weapon, chain, and scourage,
That these stingless drones may spoil
The forced produce of your toil?

Have ye leisure, comfort, calm,
Shelter, food love's gentle balm?
Or what is it ye buy so dear
With your pain and with your fear?

The seed ye sow another reaps;
The wealth ye find another keeps;
The robes ye weave another wears;
The arms ye forge another bears.

Sow seed,—but let no tyrant reap;
Find wealth,let no imposter keep;
Weave robes,—let not the idle wear;
Forge arms, in your defence to bear!

CHURCH AND CAPITALISM

We read that John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has started a campaign for the Inter-church World Movement. Personally, I do not pay much attention to it. I realized, a long time ago, that the master-class, whenever it found itself in danger, called upon the aid of the churches and their clergymen. Rockefeller intimated that we have charged, (he means us socialists) that the capitalists class is desperately useing the churches to keep the workingmen contented so that they will be satisfied with their lot, and not try to better their conditions on this earth, by promising them Heaven beyond the clouds, etc, He said that this is not the truth. Well now, let us see. What did we read about the attitude of the church during and after the war?

Dr. Joseph Kyle, President of Xenia, Ohio Theological Seminary, speaking at Chicago, Feb. 6, 1918, at the conference of 'World Evangelism and Vital Christianity' at the Moody Bible Institute declared that a hero's death in battle was not necessarily a passport to Heaven. "Salvation," said Dr. Kyle, "is thru Jesus Christ alone. It would be pleasant to believe that the spirits of soldiers who died in battle go straight to Heaven." Furthermore, we read, "Christ seeks recruits—Soldiers of the Cross, to get in the fight." "Fighting is the business of the world," declared Dr. W. W. Bustard in his sermon in the Euclid Ave. Baptist Church, 18th St., Cleveland, O. "It would be as easy to be Christian soldiers as United States soldiers," he said, — this despite the slogan of the church for nearly two thousands years, "Thou shalt not kill."

Again, we read: "Cleveland, Dec. 16, 1918: Churches Great Aid To War." The charge that the church had failed in the world-war was denied yesterday morning by Dean H. P. Almon Abbot of the Trinity Cathedral who asserted that the churches have given their sons by the thousands and thousands to the armies and navies. These men have gone forth to fight the battles of God. We also read these statements: "Churches plan to fight the spread of Bolshevism", and, "Conference speakers call on clergymen to change their attitude toward the discontented." The part the churches must take in Americanization work, thus combating the spread of Bolshevism, was to be one of the principal topics Wednesday at the Sectional Conference in connection with the Inter church World Movement of North America in session at Hotel Cleveland. This was said by Rev. D. D. Vaughn nad E. A. Wright, Secretary of the Federated Crurches of Cleveland. Here also we prove that the churches are consciously or unconsciously against the workingman. We read as follows: "Start campaign to keep foreign labor here after peace has been declared, Pittsburg, Oct. 18, 1928." "A nation-wide movement which has for its object the retention of foreign labor in this country after the war has been launched here by Rev. A. Kazinsky, pastor of St. Michael church at Braddock, Pa. The clergyman pointed out that after the war 35 to 40% of the foreign laboring class may seek to return to Europe unless some method is devised to keep them here. Probably the priest became alarmed thinking of the loss in money and in members should these people leave the country. Capitalistic industry might also be short of men. But now listen to what we read after the war was over and the people realized that the war was fought for capitalistic interests and not to make the world "safe for democracy."

The Detroit Free Press on Nov. 9, 1919, urges the United States to deport foreign slackers. In a sermon, Rev. Joseph W. Cochfan, pastor of Woodward Ave. Presbyterian Church, told his Sunday evening congregation, "We are in an inflamed state of mind toward the foreigners, enemy and slacker aliens who have aroused us to a fierce anger and now we are fighting the plottings of the Revolutionary alliens. It there any reason why such aliens should not be deported?"

Our answer to John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is that the master-class for thousands of years has been using the church for their own purposes. History tells us that Thomas D. Torquemada, inquisitor of Spain, from 1482 to 1498, tortured, killed and burned 10,000 poor heretics on account of their convictions. Similar methods prevail today against those who do not agree with the master-class. Torquemada failed and you will fail also. We today have Nickolai Lenine and Eugene V. Debs and others who concern themselves about the welfare of the masses, and we do not need the aid of the masters and your brother cleargymen.

When the time comes we will have a new and more brotherly world to live in where everybody will enjoy a better and happier life. At the present time, we are willing to trade our interests in the Heaven beyond the grave for only one day of your income.

"The Mediumship of Farmer Riley".

By SYDNEY FLOWER, LL. D.

This is a book of sixty large magazine pages, in which is related in detail the observations of the author during a two weeks' stay at the home of the medium, James Wesley Riley, better known as "Farmer Riley," near Marcellus, Mich. If you have ever asked youreslf the question, "Does man live beyond the grave?" a perusal of this book may perhaps assist you in the formulation of an intelligent answer. The book is as interesting as a romance. In his investigations Mr. Flower rigidly adheres to a program which absolutely precludes all possibility of physical agency in the production of the manifestations.

— By Tom Clifford —

How evanescent is fame! Less than two years ago President Wilson was fondly acclaimed by press and pulpit the super-evangel of world democracy and universal peace. "How have the mighty fallen!" The erstwhile eulogies that once appeared in the daily press are conspicious by their absence It now seems probable that when the President leaves this vale of tears his passing will excite but brief comment. He had an opportunity that comes to but few men to place his name alongside that of Lincoln in the hall of fame. Had he considered social service above personal ambition he would now be receiving the plaudits of the multitude instead of almost universal condemnation. The contrast between his career and that of Eugene V. Debs stands out in sonspicuous relief. Although Wilson still occupies the highest office within the gift of the people of this nation, his personality excites practically no interest, and he is fated to go to his grave "unwept, unhonored and unsung." 'Gene Debs is an inmate of a federal prison—a convict—yet his personality is enshrined in the hearts of millions and his name will go down to posterity as one who loved—and, loving, served—his fellow men. Debs will live in history. Wilson is already practically forgotten.

Herbert Hoover, the much touted candidate for President, is a typical bourgeois. In harmony with his class interests he is doing his bit in denouncing Russia's Soviet government. With unblushing effrontery he shamelessly repeates the lying tales of anarchy and bloodshed in Russia, which have been refuted by scores of reputable witnesses and which every well informed person knows to be false. Hoover is just a common bourgeois liar when he says that the Soviet government has "wrecked itself on the rock of production." To Hoover—as to all the bourgeoisie—"the wish is father to thought." A Socialist government spells economic disaster to his class. His denunciation of the dictatorship of the proletariat is a perfectly natural concomitant of his desire to perpetuate the dictatorship of the bourgeoisie. Economic determinism prompts him and all of his class to denounce the one and glorify the other. Hoover has special reasons for bitterness toward the new regime in Russia. At the breaking out of the war he held valuable mining concessions in that country of which he has been dispossessed, and no bourgeois is inclined to tolerate such interference with his interests with equinimity. If the Soviet government survives the storm and stress incidental to a social change, Hoover and his fellow adventurers will be shut out of that prolific field of exploitation. A further source of worry to this gang of robbers is the alarming possibility of the spread of Socialism throughout the world should the Russian "experiment" prove a success, in which event these gentlemen of leisure would have to get off the backs of the workers and earn their own living. The prospect is not at all alluring. No wonder Hoover is peeved.

The white and colored races are soon to be pitted against each other in a world war if we are to accept the deductions of Lothrop Stoddard, a biological historian, in a book just published—"The Rising Tide of Color." Being always suspicious of the honestly of these literary fellows, I am inclined to believe that the author's chief purpose is to keep alive race prejudice, which has always been a notable factor in preventing solidarity among the workers. The religions dope doesn't work as effectively as it used to. Leave it to the bourgeoisie to invent new methods of sidetracking the minds of the workers from a consideration of the one and only question that means anything—their economic emancipation. So long as they refrain from giving this matter attention the master class feel safe.

The intelligent observer of current history has ample reason to be amused over the inanity of the American bourgeoisie. Their lack of vision renders them unfit to cope with the astuteness of the exploiters in Europe. The fact is now revealed that the English government, during the entire war period, spared enough time from the task of "making the world safe for democracy" to "cinch" control of the European oil fields. Wise guys, these Britishers. This will insure the English bourgeoisie commercial supremacy. That is what they were fighting for. Pity the gullibility of the American "mutts" who childishly thought otherwise. While the were sacrificing millions of treasure and thousands of human lives England was "bringing home the bacon." Score another installment of perfidy for "Perfidious Albion."

NEW YORK—The immediate release of the seventy-nine conscientious objectors still imprisoned by the War Department is urged upon Present Wilson in petition from thirty-seven states bearing 20,834 signatures, just forwarded through the American Civil Liberties Union, New York.

The petitions were transmitted with a letter signed by Professor Harry F. Ward, chairman of the American Civil Liberties Union, and by Norman Thomas and John Haynes Holmes of the Union's committee on conscientious objectors. The letter read, in part. "The petitions represent a body of opinion growing out of the centuries of struggle for religious and political freedom. They are just one expression of the increasing resistance throughout the country to the principle of conscription, alien to the traditions and professions of American liberty."

PARIS—"Art for art's sake" came against a real snag in the L'Ambigu theater here, when the directors contracted for the production of Nonziere's "Life is Good". The well known actor Carpentier, was asked to play the role of a member of the General Federation of Labor, who is held up to ridicule throughout the play. Carpentier refused. The actors' association, which is affiliated with the General Federation of Labor, backed Carpentier up. Nonziere refused to rewrite the play. The management could not produce it without actors, so was forced to cancel the contract.

in question did not deserve it. That is where the whole horror and tragedy lies.

Madam! Are you still fully convinced that you have a right to demand humane treatment, when you yourself have all your life been merciless to your fellow-creature, not considering him a human being, your equal? You are writing letters. You are educated. You have probably read books, in which the life of the peasant is described. What can you expect from the peasants, when you knowing their lives, did not anything to alleviate their suffering? Now you are the unfortunate one and you are writing with a hand trembling with fear, writing to a man who—as you might have known—can neither take away your fear, nor alleviate suffering. No, indeed No! Such are the ways of the world; hearts are places for compassion.

But life in a country, where the people were being beaten up by whips and knouts; in a country where ribs were broken and where people were being crippled for the sake of amusement; in a country where oppression had no bounds, where violence was assuming such forms that one could and shame of it—in such a country compassion cannot be found. The peo- go out of one's mind with the horror ple, brought up on beatings and violence, on the fist and the knout—such a people cannot be softhearted. The people, on whose bodies the policemen tread, can tread on the bodies of other people. In a country where inequality has so long reigned, it is difficult for the people to introduce the reign of justice.

We cannot demand that the man who never saw justice should be just. Everything is clear in this world, in which you Madam and your social set have permitted the reign of violence without even a protest. These people feel a slap more keenly than it was felt fifty years ago by the valet of your father.

The people have developed. In the process of their development, self-respect has grown. Nevertheless, they were still treated as slaves and looked upon as cattle.

Madam! Do not demand from the people that which you did not give them. You have no right to claim the mercy of the people. This people was oppressed. It is being oppressed even now by those who retained some sort of power over them. Now, when Czarism and capitalism brought the country to revolution, all the dark forces of the people came into play. All that which was buried for centuries exploded, and vengeance seethes on all sides. Nevertheless, the country has another force, a bright force lit up by the great thought, inspired by the radiant dream of justice, liberty and beauty, but, Madam, why should I describe in words the beauty and the greatness of the sea for the person who has no eyes to see it.

Prosecutor Hoyne Seeing Red

Frames up to Trap Wagenknecht

SELECTION OF JURY IN CHICAGO COMMUNIST CASES DRAGS. — VENIREMEN PROFESS PREJUDICE.

Maclay Hoyne, Illinois State's attorney, who is supervising the trials of a large group of "reds", consisting of 41 members of the Communist Labor Party and 85 members of the Communist Party, which opened in Judge Oscar Hebel's court at Chicago, May 10th, is visualizing red wherever he looks. In this respect, he is fully the equal of Attorney General Palmer and it is feared that unless he is soon able to unearth something of a real red character, his mind may give way beneath the strain of its frightful fancies.

Chicago papers of May 25th carried lurid headlines connecting A. Wagenknecht, Executive Secretary of the Communist Labor Party, with a letter said to have been received by Hoyne of that date. The entire proceedure bears all the remarks of a frameup such as has often been worked with complete success upon labor leaders in the past. According to the Chicago papers an attempt was made by a would be assassin upon the life of Hoyne by firing a shot thru the window of his home. From this an attempt is made to build a frameup that will connect the shooting with comrade Wagenknecht who is one of 15 Communists who have not as yet been apprehended upon indictments furnished by the Chicago authorities.

Chicago radicals, who are acquainted with the individuals named therein, state that the letter in its wording, spelling, misuse of the English language and general charecteristics, bear them out in attributing it to the hand of Michael Flannigan, head of the Thiel detective agency, which has since the January raids, been employed by the bankers and business men of the Loop district to spy upon radicals and work up evidence against the "red menace." A slush fund of $40,000 is said to have been raised for this purpose.

Copy of "Red" Letter

"New York—May 21—1920—Mr. State's Attorney Hoyne and dirty dog Henry Berger; and Barnhardt (Assistant States' Attorney Marvin Barnhardt?) and Mike Flannegan of the Thiel agency—We want you all to known that you all have been found guilty by our committee; of conspiring against 200 men and women and therefore I have been instructed to write to you and let you know that you will be shot at the first opportunity we get. We mean all of you; especially Flannegan, the dirty crook dictitive; this is our second letter to you—relize the men or you will be shot soon. We have spies as well as you got and we know what you are planning as well as you know what we are planning.

"You can say goodby to all your friends if you don't relice these men in ten days; we know that the bankers ore paying you to put us in the jails. But let us tell you something what to tell the bankers including the prisident of the first national bank; that we will put him in hell just as well as not. We may meet him some this days and make him a surprise of something and the other bankers too.

"This is your last notice."

Communists cases move slowly.

The selection of the jury in the Communist cases moves very slowly and it is to this that the radicals atribute Hoyne's anxiety to create a sentiment against them, such as Palmer attempted previous to May 1st. At the present time only five of the needed 12 jurymen have been selected tho nearly six hundred veniremen have been examined. Many weeks will probably elapse before the jury is completed. Four of the accused communists have been dismissed by judge Hebel.

District Attorney Hoyne has not as yet appeared as an active participant in the cases. Frank Comerford, M. Barnhart and Lloyd Heth handling the prosecution. The defense atterneys are

BOURGEOIS BANKRUPTCY

The baneruptcy of the leadership of the bourgeoisie is becoming more and more evident as one industrial crisis after another follows in quick succession. Not one of the recent national strikes has been settled upon a basis that will stand up under the first breath of the next industrial whirlwind that strikes it. The mishandling of industrial disputes under the leadership of the bourgeois economists and master minds of bourgeois political science is a mere running in circles that becomes more vicious the longer it continues.

It is amusing to observe the different stages of bourgeois thought in regard to industrial justice to the workers. Time was when the employing class conceded the worker nothing as a moral or just return for his expended energies. The worker took what the employer decided he should have whether it was much or little—and it was always little enough. During these times the famous slogan of the A. F. of L., "A fair day's pay for a fair day's work," was almost revolutionary. It was an attempt to establish a recognition that labor was entitled to enough of its product to maintain its life and the functions of the human being.

While the war did not materially change the conception of Gompers and the officialdom of the A. F. of L. regarding this, it and the outlaw strikes have practically brought the capitalist employers to agreement with that principle. They have caught up with Gompers and even stand a chance to surpass him in recognition of new "rights" for labor. We hear a good deal about the "right to work." Gompers has not conceded this right, but perhaps he will by the time the capitalist class grant it under pressure from the outlaw strikes.

The right to work carries with it the right to the product—at least intelligent labor will claim that. Gompers and the exploiters of labor are in agreement that no such right follows. Both believe in exploitation of labor by capital as a fundamental moral and legal right.

The right to work and the right to a "living" wage, brings up the question of "what is living," and how well is the worker entitled to live?" So, we are in a circle, having gotten nowhere unless we can solve these questions. The bourgeoisie cannot solve them. The moment they attempt it they are confronted with their own economic [illegible] for the better the workers [illegible] the less is the employers' share. [illegible] the rock of the division of the [illegible] of labor is the bourgeoisieship salvation bound to crash. There is [illegible] around it for the necessities [illegible] the workers lives demand they [illegible] for it while the salvation of the capitalist system and the continuance of profit taking demand its avoidence. The nearest the capitalist class can come to solving this irreconcialiable antagonism is to grant a living wage—whatever thet may mean. But it is a solution which does not solve. The workers will not accept it. As long as there is exploitation, the class-war must continue.

The bourgeoisie leaders and spokesmen accept the idea that something is wrong but they have no solution to offer. The best they can offer are but sops thrown to the workers to pacify them for a little while.

They have no bridge to span this chasm. As world leaders, the bourgeoisie are bankrupt, they have reached the end of their rope. The class war grows more incense, production breaks down, national and international economy cracks under the strain of industrial strife. The crisis approaches and the workers are forced to take the leadership and to steer the industrial craft thru the whirlpools into the quiet waters of industrial and economic justice.

This is the course which events are taking. Bourgeois spokesmen may wail and cavil but capitalism is crumbling faster than they can erect supports against it.

The future belongs to labor. Their is the only solution which can bring peace to a world in class conflict. The control of industry by the producers alone, will raise man above a struggling slave or an arrogant master and weld them into one common mass without inharmonious ends or irreconciliable economic differences.

GO WEST!

— By Boomer. —

That grand old man, Horace Greely used to say: "go west young man and grow up with the country." Should he be living today and give advise, it would probably be "go west young man and get in jail" if you believe in the rights of free speech." For there is not a jail in the west even in the smaller towns that have not held, or is holding; radicals picked up since the Centralia tragedy of Nov. 11th.

And what does that mean to the labor movement? It means that capitalism has turned the jails into schools for the manufacture of radical, as many a man has been only a luke warm sympathizer at the time of being "selected" but by the time he got a two or three month sample of modern justice, he became a sure enough class conscious guy.

Especiall has Multonomah Co. Jail, Portland, Ore., been a good school for this education, as there are thirty or more of us in the one corridor who have been in since Nov. 11th. We get books, papers and all kinds of periodicals, which we read and pass around to the other corridors. Our labor has commenced to bear fruit upon the inmates of the other corridors who in the main are bootleggers white slavers, etc. As an indication in a straw vote taken a few days ago Debs was the only one who got a look in.

We have lost three of our members by reason of an urgent invitation to visit Salem, State Prison, for a period of 2-2-5 years. Two of the sojourners were members of the C. L. P. and the third one was convincted of being one of those "terribel" I. W. W's. but on investigation it was found he belonged to everything ever heard of around these parts. It is not hard to convict a man here only a little tedious as Oregon has not got its own corps of stool pidgeon witnesses yet, it has to borrow some from Washington, and as they have been rather busy in that state lately they have to book ahead for open dates.

Another little matter that seems to be worrying the persecuters and dispensers of "justus" is that these prisoners have heard something about being entitled to a jury trial, so they all refuse to be satisfied with a part of a jury. They are all holding firm for a seperate and individual trial and since they are all migatory workers a little thing like being held in jail six months or a year is of no moment to any one concerned save the taxpayers, who ever they may be—at least none of them are relatives of ours.

Justice! Yes, there is one way to get it for the workers and that is by the workers becoming the dominant factor in society. Workers should devote more time to education so as to be able to handle their new found industrial freedom when it is attained. Well, I am not going to worry, considering all the men and women receiving their education in the bastiles of capitalism it makes me rather optimistic. To all who want to get a class conscious education, if you are being overlooked in the east or other parts of the country. Allow me to invite you to Portland jail, as we have room for several comrades, brothers, fellowworkers or just folks, which ever you may be.

PALMER USES DETECTIVE AGENCY IN WAR ON RADICALS

WASHINGTON.—Direct connection between the murderous campaign of the Baldwin-Feltz Detective Agency against labor in West Virginia and Attorney General Palmer's raids against so-called "reds" is now established by means of official government documents.

It was at Palmer's instigation that the Department of Labor issued hundreds of warrants for aliens, based on Palmer's alleged prima facie avidence covering "2,000 perfect cases' of men and women who should be deported for radical beliefs. While the law requires that such warrants be served only by officers of the Labor Department, a great number of aliens were seized by Palmer's men and by local police or private detectives.

Carl Cram, of West Virginia is one of the aliens thus arrested. On April 23rd, Immigration Inspector O'Brien formally notified the Labor Department that Carl Cram was being held by the Baldwin-Fetlz detectives at Bluefields, West Va., and that the private detectives were clamoring to have the Labor Department officially "parole" Gram in the custody of the Baldwin-Feltz concern.

Attention is called to the fact that the private strike-breaking detectives already held Cram in confinement, but were anxious to have the Labor Department take the responsibility for what they had done and intended further to do with the prisoner. The Baldwin-Feltz pretext was that Cram was needed by the West Virginia authorities as a witness against one Tony Stafford, charged with attempted murder.

Mother Jones the famous friend and comforter of the working class, declares that Tony Staffard is an intelligent and lawful champion of the workers, whose only crime is his determined opposition to the feudal mine owners of West Virginia. To all who know the circumstances, the implication was clear that the Baldwin-Feltz detectives were plotting to use a deportation warrant to hold Carl Cram and "third degree" him as a witness against Stafford and all others whom they wished to get.

Anthony Caminetti, commissioner general of immigration, was willing and anxious to cooperate with the private detectives. Within a few hours after he received the request, forwarded by Inspector O'Brien, Caminetti made out a formal order to parole Carl Cram in custody of Baldwin-Feltz. In the old days before Louis F. Post began to scrutinize Caminneti's work, that would have settled just the way the mine owners' thugs wanted it. But the Assistant Secretary of Labor did not rubber-stamp Caminetti's recomendation. Across its face, on the contrary, be wrote: "Parole denied L. F. P."

Then Mr. Post communicated directly with Inspector O'Brien, directing him immediately to recover the person of Carl Cram from the Baldwin-Feltz detectives, and adding the information that if the regularly constituted authorities of West Virginia witshed to use Cram as a witness against Stafford or any one else, those authorities could procure the full cooperation of the Labor Department if they would state the facts and make an official application.

Caminetti is Palmer's "inside man" at the Department of Labor. In the whole campaign of terrorism conducted by the Attorney General for the past year Caminetti has been an active assistant. It was he, figuratively, who christened the Buford when that vessel carried the first cargo of men and women into exile from America, and it was his boasted ambition to churn the Atlantic with subsequent fleets of exiles from our "democracy." To this end he welcomed the cooperation of such gentry as the Baldwin-Feltz detectives.

RUSSIA'S INDUSTRIAL PROGRESS.

MOSCOW.—The locomotive factories in Kharkow are working with full speed. During the last two weeks two new locomotives were manufactured and three repaired. Besides a great number of freight cars were repaired. The trains on the Wolga-Bugulma line are now running the distance in 48 hours which previously required 11 days. The workers of Alexandria line have volutarily prolonged their working day. The first labor army in the Ekaterinburg district has already repaired 66 railroad bridges. Traffic on the railroad lines south of Moscow is rapidly being reopened. During March, 513 locomotives and 1,400 cars were repaired. Ten complete trains were organized. The reports of the commission for the Third Railroad District of the Moscow azan Line show a general and considerable improvement in the traffic. All orders are fulfilled with military strictness. During "transportation week" 468 seriously damaged locomotives were repaired. Askij writes in "Pravda" that during the first week of April in Soviet Russia 6,595 freight cars were loaded and unloaded. This constituted an increase of 1,500 cars over the previous week.

Your Dollar Was Never Worth so much as Now

Now don't say it isn't so—right off the bat, of course we realise the seeming contradiction in the statement contained in the heading of this article. A whole lot has been said and written about the Shrinking Dollar—the 46 cent dollar, the 33 cent dollar. You have read of it and have doubtless had more or less unpleasant experiences concerning this fact. No need to tell you that the Great American Dollar is no more great but very small indeed, and contains but a fraction and a small fraction at that, of its former purchasing power. In this respect it has been getting smaller and smaller. Little by little and some times a whole lot at a time, its value in the necessities—of—life market has constantly dwindled, until now we have come to regard a dollar as little more than a joke, tho a tragic one for the most of us who earn them all and get but a few. But still we maintain that your dollar is worth more now than ever before But it will take several more paragraphs to tell you why.

You can't always measure the value of a dollar by what it will buy in a general way. There is still another measure for the dollar and that measure is the need of it at a particular time. When you have many of them—their purchasing power is not so important. Quantity balances quality. But when you have only a few and the purchasing power has dwindled to about one third—then, even a 33 cent dollar looks as big and bright as a brand new full moon.

Last week we told you on this page of the paper shortage, of the very grave situation of The Toiler because of it and the lack of funds in The Toiler treasury—of the absolute necessity of getting funds immediately to purchase paper if we were to continue publication. But in spite of the paper shortage, paper can be had—for dollars. Even a truth-telling weekly paper such as The Toiler can obtain paper if dollars are at hand.

And there is the trouble, comrades, and readers of The Toiler. Just as we told you last week, we have no funds to buy newsprint. We want to repeat—in spite of the difficulties of obtaining news print, in spite of the conspiracy which is said to exist against the smaller weeklies, in spite of the conspiracy which WE KNOW exists in certain circles to kill The Toiler in any way—and several ways have been tried this past year, in spite of all these—we know how to get all the newsprint we need for many months. We know whom to see, we know what wheels to turn to start hundreds of reams of paper to roll our way—if you will help us get the money needed to pay for it. We have learned how to do that in battling for The Toiler these past trying months—and we have learned it well.

The rest is up to you, comrades, we believe we have done our duty. We have found the ways—you must help us find the means. It is not much that we ask, just a little from each of you who believe in The Toiler and its mission; who believe that in this particular crisis a little 33 cent dollar is not too much to give to it to sustain it in its struggle for the education and emancipation of the workers.

And now we repeat what we state in the first paragraph—that in this particular instance, that measley, blackened, torn, 33 cent dollar in your pocket is worth more NOW than ever before. Because it will insure the continuation of The Toiler by supplying the needed paper upon which to print; by making certain that which we MUST have if we are to do our work—yours and ours. Twenty five hundred dollars will pay for ten tons of newsprint. Ten tons of paper mean a good long lease of life and a chance to do a whole lot of needed socialist work—a whole lot of educational work among the workers.

We know this is worth while. You realize it is too. Already the dollars are coming in. We ask you also to drop at least one dollar in the stream of dollars that is to revolve the wheels that keep The Toiler turning out each and every week the necessary education and inspiration which the workers must have to win a world for those who toil.

The Rotary club in our town is all het up over the soldier's bonus. They are agin' it—strong. Likewise they are to a (I almost wrote—"to a man") Rotary Member, agin' these terrible high wages paid to the extravagant workers, who none of'em "will do more than half a days work for a days pay." Rotary—means to go around in a circle—and get nowhere!!!

The M. and M., same being Merchants and Manufacturers, are likewise all het up. Their recent meeting had the largest attendance of any in the history of the local M. & M. They must be expecting something to drop. Prices? Wages? Social System? Or What? You tell 'em Hy, Palmer won't let me.

That is Palmer SAYS he won't.

One column of the morning scream informs us that prices on women's ready made clothing will go no higher according to Cleveland authority and the next column tells us that prices on women's clothing had been cut 50 per cent., one half, by Western firm. Press report tells us of a foreigner who, upon being threatened with deportation, kissed the American flag and committed suicide, saying with his dying breath, "America, my country." A very pathetic little story but they did not tell us whether or not he had paid his income tax on his country.

"Every soldier knows that both his comfort at the rear and his safety on the battlefield were sacrificed" editorializes the W. G. N.

The W. G. N. failed to state that the same forces which uphold, maintain and defend the wages-system, are the forces which sacrificed the soldier's comfort and safety. So the rich may be safe in their riches and the poor be kept in the station which it has pleased Almighty God to place them—in punishment for the sin of Adam, I suppose.

Profiteers are now threatened with "deflated finance". We are used to that. None have ever accused us of being a profiteer—but we have suffered from deflated finance for lo, these many years.

An organizer from the N. O. Socialist party told me that I ought to join THE party. When I asked her to submit her reasons she argued like this; "Well, it is the only party that is doing anything; it is all that is left, and one has to work somewhere." Whereupon I told her: "according to your argument, if I were a Christian and the Bolsheviki got my God, I'd have to take up Devil worship on the ground that "one has to worship somewhere."

Rumor is a strange thing. A fellow gravely informed me the other day that a certain government arsenal was supposed to have eight thousand machine guns with ample rounds of ammunition and there was not a single one there. He intimated that the local Rotary Club knew of the location of some of them, and that they were soon to be used against a rebellious working-class. A friend of mine was invited to "come in out of the wet", what ever that means. Rumors ARE strange affairs. Was there any truth to that rumor? Who knows?

TRUTH FINALLY ADMITTED—WITH RESERVATIONS.

Anybody with brains enough in their head to know that two and two makes four knows that there are NO classes in America—except the working class and a class of parasites which work the working class. Here is the way the Muskegan (Mich.) Chronicle straddles the issue:

"Any time that right (the right of free speech and a free press) is taken away, whether by tyranny of the masses or the classes, to use an expression that will be understood, BUT WITHOUT CONCEDING ANY SUCH DISTINCTION IN THE UNITED STATES AS IT MIGHT IMPLY, our boasted liberties will have vanished."

"Will have vanished." By striking out the word "will" in that phrase the actual situation in the U. S. will be revealed.

HOW THEY DO LIE

Hillquit claimed, at the Socialist Party national convention just held in New York, that the Socialist Assemblymen involved in the Albany trial upheld the principles of International Socialism and that not a move was made but what was in accordance with these principles.

What International Socialist principles does the extracts of the testimony of Waldman, one of the expelled Socialist assemblymen, which we print below, accord with:

CHRIST OR DIABOLOUS

To the Toiler:

Ephraim is a cake not turned. (Hosea VII.—8.)

Translated into the vulgar parlance of today "Eph" was only half baked.

Poor Eph has been dead quite a long time but unfortunately for society he left behind him an amazing lot of descendants possessed of intellectual bias, as for instance, eight years ago to go no farther back the sons of Ephraim (may his tribe decrease) elected one Woodrow Wilson to the presidency of these United States in the joyful expectation that he would knock "L." out of the H. C.; did he do it? He did like "L.". Selah.

Four years later the tribe of Ephraim re-elected the aforesaid W. W. sorely against his will (he said so himself) in the hilarious hope that he would keep them out of war. Ephraim is joined to his idols, leave him alone. "You can't fool all the people all of the time, but you can fool all the Ephraimites every day in the week. Selah.

Again Ephraim in the labor union developed a unique way of punishing his enemies by electing them to congress where they in their, turn retaliated by punishing labor. If you don't believe me listen to Mr. Gompers as he goes about like a roaring lion because congress stung labor once more.

It is one of the sad and wierd mysteries of life why the A. F. of L. clings so tenaciously to the tail of the "dem" donkey (I wouldn't say "dam" for any thing) after being kicked repeatedly with stinging emphasis on a certain part of the anatomy. As Dundreary says it is one of those things no fellow can find out. Some one suggests the tie is Adelphian. I have read or heard somewhere of a poor fellow that was twin brother to an ox can it be that the A. F. of L. is twin brother to the democratic jackass and the tail of the donkey is the connecting ligature as in the case of the famous Siamese twins, Eng and Chang. If this be the case we may gladly sing Blest be the tie that binds. —Selah.

But it is in the wide and fertile field of religion that the halfbaked descendants of Ephraim blossom forth in all their varied glory, can you imagine three or four hundred seperate bodies attacked to one head. You can't do it. Then you are no Ephraimite. Every disciple of Diabolous (Diabolous is the one who couses devision you know) Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians etc. can see it without batting an eye. Even the usually astute and redoubtable Skygac shows a cross of Ephraimitic blood when he makes catholicism and protestantism synonymous with christianity, and when he terms the hell begotten nations of Europe christian. I use the term hell begotten advisedly. Get out your bibles and read the thirteenth chapter of Revelation for my authority. But this is the book of which Mr. Ingersoll says it requires a man suffering from delirium tremens to understand but Mr. Ingersoll was a descendant of Eph in the direct male line so his testimony is of no value.

Selah and Selah.

CENTRALIA, WASH.—Grangers, organized labor and the Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion of Seattle and other cities are planning a mammoth Liberty picnic to be held near Centralia May 29, as a counter to the activities of the Centralia reactionaries who lynched a returned service man following the Armistice day shootings, and who are now united in an anti-progressive campaign to down the organized workers.

It was on January 9, 1905, that Father Gapon led a procession of workers to present a petition to the Czar, which ended in the petitioners being mowed down with machine guns. Today it is interesting to read some of the demands of that petition:

"Personal freedom and inviolability, freedom of speech and the press, freedom of asseblage, freedom in religious affairs.

"Responsibility of the ministers to the people, and guarantees of lawfulness in administration.

"Equality before the law for all without exemption.

"Immediate rehabilitation of those punished for their convictims."

NO "MEXICAN SOVIET" YET — OBREGON ANOTHER KERENSKY

— By Linn A. E. Gale —

Capitalists need feel no tremors and Radicals no glee over the prospect of the early establishment of a "Mexican Soviet" as predicted in a United Press dispatch from Washington, May 3. There will be no Soviet here just yet. Some day, but not now.

The Obregon administration will be "safe and sane but progressive." Obregon will be another Kerensky, trying in all sincerity, no doubt, to improve the standard of living of the workers and at the same time to permit the oil and mining interests to gain bigger profits, seeking to grant to the workers the demands that Carranza promised but never fulfilled while still endeavoring to retain the friendship of the United States.

Unlike Kerensky, Obregon may rule for several years, but, like Kerensky, he will eventually fail in his efforts to mix conflicting elements and to prevent the irrepressible conflict.

Mexico's next revolution will be a Social Revolution.

Just as the liberalism of Carranza, auspiciously initiated, developed into gross corruption, waste of funds and brutal tyranny, which brought the downfal of the regime, so the liberalism of Obregon, no matter how honest may be the motives of the man, must culminate in a similar surrender to the bourgeoisie that will mean another revolt, sooner or later.

Despite the unsavory character of some of those who supported the recent revolution, and despite the fact that its fruits will be reforms but not fundamental social changes, it must not be forgotten that the Mexican masses are undergoing an awakening that is ominous for capitalism. When they find that this upheaval has brought them but minor improvements in their condition, their swing to the Left will be still more pronounced. They will no longer dally with Liberalism. They will demand Soviets—and get them.
